FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

THE SPRING OF LIFE.

"For out of the abundance of the heart, his mouth speaketh."—Luke 6:39-49.

In the mind of Christ, life is very much like a stream flowing from a hidden spring. The spring is the soul. The stream consists in the words and deeds of daily living. That which determines the quality of life is the nature of the soul. This is God-given and God-renewed whenever the human heart is open to divine influences. Every man must take care that the springs of his life are pure and that no selfish interests divert or defile the streams of influence that flow into the life of the world.

It is only the true disciple, whose inmost being has been touched by the Spirit, that can hope for success in this high kind of life. The human heart can maintain unfailing good will only when it is in vital connection with the great central Heart which pulses out good will eternally.

Prayer.—Eternal Father, create within us clean hearts. Search out the dark places and illumine them with Thy gracious Spirit. May the life of Christ draw us with its alluring power, that we may know the healing of His presence. Amen.

TUESDAY.

THE REWARD OF FAITH.

"I have not found so great faith; no, not in Israel."—Luke 7:1-10.

Jesus marveled at this man's faith; it was so sure, so complete, so availing. "First of all, the centurion was confident that Jesus could cure, because of what he had heard concerning the Lord. This is the very essence of fiath, namely: belief founded on evidence. Faith is not credulity or fancy or caprice; it is a purely rational exercise of the mind; it is reasoning from the report of credible witnesses. Unbelief in the face of evidence is stupidity or sin. Most explicitly of all, he expressed truth in Christ and the dependence upon His power which characterizes true faith."

Through the ages, countless men and women have tested the Lord and have found His promises sure; they have cried unto Him and He has heard them. Let us lift up our hearts unto Him who is able and willing to give us what our souls need and confirm our faith in Him.

Prayer.—O God, help, Thou, our faith. May it grow as a tree planted by the rivers of water. May men find in our lives evidences of living healing faith, so learning to rejoice in Christ our Saviour. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

GOD'S LOVE MANIFESTED.

"For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life."—John 3:16.

The Bible is a revelation of God. The first verse of the first Book contains the subject of the Scriptures, and all the other verses and books are commentaries and revelations upon the subject, "In the beginning, God." It took a long time for God to fully reveal Himself, but as soon as nations and men were prepared to receive it, the fuller revelations came. It is a long way from Gen. 1:1 to John 3:16. God could not first reveal Himself to the people as a God of love any more than a teacher could explain higher mathematics to a pupil who had not mastered simple addition. So God began revealing Himself first in creation at the point where they could understand. There are some who have never advanced any further in revelation than to understand God as the Supreme Architect of the universe. They are still in the first chapters of Genesis when they might go on, and see Him revealed in law, in justice, in wrath, in personality, in mercy, and finally in love that surpasses knowledge in the gift of Jesus. Happy, indeed, is that person unto whom has been revealed the love of God, manifested in the gift of His Son!

Prayer.—Our Father, we thank Thee for the Bible. It introduces us to Thee. The heavens declare Thy glory, wisdom, and might, but Thy Word reveals Thy love. Give us strength, that we may go on from the creation of the world to the redemption of the world by Jesus. Amen. —T. E. White.

THURSDAY.

FELLOWSHIP WITH CHRIST.

"I know whom I have believed."—2 Tim. 1:12-14.

More than thirty years had passed after Christ was crucified before Paul wrote these words. If we remember this fact, the unusual nature of the first three words becomes apparent. Paul speaks as if Christ were still alive, as if it were possible to meet Him and talk with Him. We, too, believe in the actual resurrection of Christ, and in His ascension and His continuing ministry. We believe that in fellowship with Christ we experience what the mystic John Tauler declared to be "the pure presence of God in our souls." George Fox, the Quaker, was equally certain that, in contact with Christ, he had come into living friendship with God. These testimonies are merely other ways of expressing what Paul himself declared when he said, "I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me."

Not every rich man knows he is rich. Not every wise man knows he is wise. Not every strong man knows he is strong. But every soul who commits his keeping to Christ has within him a power which in its nature is eternal. He recognizes himself as in league with unlimited forces. Death may dim his torch, but cannot extinguish it. Nothing can separate him from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus.

Our faith is firm, our confidence secure, in a Christ whose power cannot be measured by finite standards nor limited by human conditions.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer.

FRIDAY.

DIVINE ARCHITECTURE.

"For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."—John 14:1-3; 2 Cor. 5:1-5.

Our Lord, in the fourteenth chapter of John, and Paul in the fifteenth chapter of 1 Corinthians, are obviously both referring to the soul of man as the occupant and to God as the Divine Architect. We are building a house, but we do not have to die to have the foundation laid and the construction begun. Here and now, in this present life, we must open our hearts to the Divine Architect and welcome Christ as the Builder. Said Paul, "By the grace of God, I am what I am"—by the power of the indwelling Architect, the old, ugly structure of Paul's "house" was demolished, and a new house was built upon the foundation of a strong, positive personality.

Today—now—are we building that "mansion" in which we shall live eternally. To whom have we let the "contract"—to evil or good, Satan or Christ? "Nothing," said Michael Angelo, "makes the soul so pure, so religious, as the endeavor to create something perfect."

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer.

SATURDAY.

VISIONS OF SERVICE.

"I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams."—Acts 2:16-21.

Upon the day of Pentecost, when the Holy Ghost was so fully vouchsafed to that company of men and women in Jerusalem, Peter found it necessary to preach to some deriders concerning the spiritual meaning of this new movement. Let us mark at once his quotation from the ancient prophet, Joel. When God poureth out His spirit on all flesh, sons and daughters will understand history, young men shall have visions of great achievement, and old men shall dream of the kingdom of God on earth!

What visions of service we have sometimes when the Spirit of God moves over our hearts! Let the sincere prayer of your life be: "God, give me visions of service to others, and then through me, make those dreams come true in kindly ministries to those I love, and those who need."

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer.

SUNDAY.

THE ENRICHMENT OF LIFE.

"A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of things which he possesseth."—Luke 12:15.

It is difficult to tell which word here to emphasize. Perhaps we should emphasize "life." Certainly, a man's bank credit depends upon the abundance of things he possesseth. His comfort may depend upon it, his freedom from care and anxiety. But his life—that is a different thing! One may have no bank credit, no social standing, no material comfort, and still live a great life, high and holy and altogether worthy of praise.

Suppose we emphasize the word "abundance." Not in the quantity, but in the quality of our possessions are we rich. One may own certificates of stock and even bonds, in such quantities as to paper a room or pave a street, and yet be very poor. The value of our holdings does not depend upon quantity. Here is a word with which to correct our ideas of life and our conceptions of value.

There is another word that deserves emphasis. It is "things." Things are chattels, salable goods, marketable securities, quotable commodities, inheritable wealth. There are some things we cannot control, but most things with which we have to deal we can control. We can use them. We can make them do our bidding. But when things make us do their bidding, we are lost. Our servant becomes our master. Our prisoner takes us captive.

Perhaps the great word of this verse is the word "possesseth." It is an excellent thing to possess something. But there are other ways of enriching our lives. Our lives may be enriched by what we know, by what we do, by what we love, and by what we hope. In this direction lies the greatest possible enrichment of life.

GLADNESS.

Are you not sad for sorrows past?
No! I am glad they did not last.
Do you not hate the false you knew?
No! I love more the good and true.
Do you not mourn for work undone?
No! I rejoice for triumphs won.
Have not Life's struggles wearied you?
No! They revealed new work to do.
Do you not fear the long, dark night?
No! I await the coming light.
Surely some dread the future Mars.
No! Hope and Faith can see the stars.

Kiddies' Korner

MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT, Editor.

Dear Kiddies:

Did you ever go to daily vacation Bible school? Well, it's the very best school, and you can have the best time while you go to it of any kind of school anywhere. Why, just today—yes, sir-e-e—a great big boy beat all the other boys and girls in a three-minute Bible memory contest; and it made every one so happy to try and beat him. I wish all you dear Kiddies could be right here every morning these two hours to just be happy with all the rest of us.

The boys are making a great big doll house—they are making real furniture, too—and the girls are making real, sure-'nuff rugs for the polished floors—same as your mamma has in your house at home! Oh! I most forgot to tell that the boys are making an ark, and wooden animals, all painted and marked with pen and ink, and it looks exactly like animals we have all seen at the circus—honest!

My, my! I am saving the best till last. The babies have a great big part in our vacation school, too. They have a beautiful teacher that tells them lovely stories and helps them paint pictures in the sand. Yes, indeed, and what else you 'spose? They sing songs about the stories they learn, and can sing as well as you and me—and they are little folks, too.

I wish all the Kiddies could come to see our school. It's wonderful; and after the school is over, we are going to have commencement—and you know that's always great fun!

I forgot to say that the boys smear paint all over their overalls, and faces, and one wee boy got some on his nose, and of course we all helped him get it off quickly. He started out to paint the parlor table, and wasted the paint on his nose instead. What do you think of that?

It's getting most night-time; the sky is getting dark, the stars are creeping out, the Good Shepherd up in heaven is getting ready to watch over us while we sleep.

Good-night, all the dear Kiddies. Your editor loves you, every one.

Here comes the sandman. He will flip sand all over me in a minute if I don't hurry.

YOUR EDITOR.

WHEN LASSIE WENT VISITING.

By Frances Margaret Fox.

Mary Ruth, Betty Anne, and Barbara Jane are three baby sisters who live in a beautiful white house on a lovely street in a New England city. Their next-door neighbor is a big, wide, slow-walking old shepherd dog, whose name is Lassie.

The old dog loves babies and believes that it is her business to take care of Mary Ruth, Betty Anne, and Barbara Jane. When Mary Ruth was born, Lassie was the first of the neighbors to notice that a baby had come to live in the white house. The first time that Mary Ruth went out for an airing in her baby carriage, Lassie went too; walking along, walking along, soberly, like a friendly bear.

One day not long ago the mother of the three sisters wished to make a call in the afternoon, and it happened to be the afternoon when Elizabeth didn't work, but always went visiting. Aunt Frances said over the telephone, "I will come for Mary Ruth, Betty Anne, and Barbara Jane and bring them home to Nanna's house. It is a beautiful day, and we shall walk." Aunt Frances invited mother and the children to come to Nanna's house and stay to dinner. Mother would make her call before dinner.

Aunt Frances put Barbara Jane, who was only four months old, into the baby carriage and tucked the robes round her. Betty Anne put her doll into her doll carriage, and Mary Ruth put her doll into her doll carriage, and the happy procession started down the street.

But in a minute Mary Ruth laughed and called out, "And here comes Lassie!"

Sure enough, Lassie came walking along, walking along, soberly, like a friendly bear.

"Lassie was not invited," said Aunt Frances. "Lassie, will you please go home?"

Lassie would not go home. She walked in front of the baby carriage, and she walked so slowly that Aunt Frances almost had to push her along. Mary Ruth with her doll carriage walked behind Aunt Frances, and Betty Anne with her doll carriage walked behind Mary Ruth.

Aunt Frances had a hard time getting that procession safely to Nanna's house, and many boys and girls who passed them stopped to laugh. If Betty Anne had walked faster, then Mary Ruth would have walked faster. If both the children had walked faster, Lassie would have walked faster, and Aunt Frances would not have had such a hard time. Once or twice she had to bump-bump-bump Barbara Jane's baby carriage against that wide, wide old shepherd dog to make her move at all.

The old dog was tired when she reached Nanna's house. She didn't wait to be invited in, but went in, and all the afternoon she watched the little girls.

At dinner-time Lassie was impolite to the cat. She ate the cat's dinner right out of the cat's dish, and the cat had to run away fast and hide.

After dinner, Aunt Nellie said, "I will take mother and the children home in the automobile. We shall all go with them." Aunt Edie and Aunt Frances were staying nights at the children's house because their father was away out West.

The old dog barked when the mother and the babies, Aunt Edie, Aunt Frances and one of the cousins climbed into the automobile. She barked and barked and barked. She acted a little cross, too.

"What is the matter, Lassie," Aunt Nellie inquired; "I hope you do not think we are going to take you in the automobile?"

"She is too big," Betty Anne said; "there is not room for her."

"The dog will follow the automobile," said mother.

"We'll drive slow,'" Aunt Nellie promised. Then she called, "Come Lassie, come Lassie!"

Lassie wouldn't come. She sat on the piazza at Nanna's house and barked and barked and barked.

Mother was sorry because Lassie would not go home. She said, "Poor old doggie!"

"She is thinking about something, and she will come home when she gets ready. Don't worry," Mary Ruth advised.

Nevertheless, Aunt Nellie did worry. But when she reached home again, the big dog came to meet the automobile. She was barking loudly and acted cross. There was no one in the automobile then but Aunt Nellie and the cousin.

It sounded as if the dog were saying, "What have you done with those little girls?" But really the dog must have been saying, "Please take me home!"

Twice Aunt Nellie tried to coax her to follow the automobile, but she wouldn't.

At last Aunt Nellie said, "Do you expect me to drive you home, Lassie; is that what you are thinking about?"

It was. Aunt Nellie opened the door and the dog slowly, slowly climbed in. She filled the space in front of the back seat with her body and put her long head over Aunt Nellie's shoulder.

Aunt Nellie did not enjoy that drive. When it was ended and the back door was opened, Lassie climbed slowly, slowly, slowly out of the automobile and walked to the little girls' front door instead of her own. She barked and she barked and she barked until Aunt Frances came to the door with Barbara Jane in her arms.

"It is all right, Lassie," Aunt Frances said; "the children are here and are going to bed."

Then Lassie went home and barked at her own front door. When the door was opened she went in without saying "I thank you" or "Good night" to Aunt Nellie.

Aunt Nellie smiled all the way home to Nanna's house, although she says she truly hopes that Lassie will never come visiting again.

Dentist: "So you have broken off a tooth, have you?"

Patient (tough youngster): "Yes, sir."

Dentist: "How did you do it?"

Youngster: "Oh, shifting gears on a lollypop."

AESTHETICS, CHARTS AND MISSIONARY FUNDS

The pastor of a very wealthy Church, some ten years ago, placed over his pulpit that motto of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, "Not how much of my money will I give to God, but how much of God's money will I keep for myself." The striking statement began to do its work. A rich woman not interested in missions came to the pastor and said, "I wish you would put that sign away. It offends our aesthetic taste and is not in keeping with the beautiful surroundings." Typographically, she was correct. The pastor protested that he could not possibly do so, as the motto would undoubtedly help to bring a large increase in missionary contributions. She offered him $500 if he would remove it. "That is not enough," said the pastor; "that motto is worth a missionary a year."

On inquiring how much a missionary would cost, and being told that $1,200 a year was necessary, she consented to give it. The motto was removed to the Sunday School room, where it again began its quiet work, but the woman had for the first time learned the lesson of stewardship, and since that time has given $50,000 for a local charity, and still supports her missionary.—From "Men and Missions."

SOWING MISSIONARY SEED.

One day Bishop Selwyn, of New Zealand, while visiting Judge Patteson, in England, said, half in playfulness and half in earnest: "Lady Patteson, will you give me Coley?" She started, but did not say no; and when, independently of this, her son told her that it was his greatest desire to go with the bishop, she replied that if he kept that wish when he grew up, "he should have her blessing and consent." Years afterward, Coleridge Patteson joined Bishop Selwyn in his labors in the South Sea Islands.

In Sunday School, composed largely of young people of impressionable age, one never knows what may come from the sowing of missionary seed. The mere dropping of a remark, or telling of a brief story from the mission field may result in missionary decisions. This justifies the taking of three to five minutes occasionally for the presentation of striking field items, and missionary facts to the Sunday School.

WHAT ONE CHURCH IS GIVING.

The Church of the Atonement, in Germantown, Pa., has given in the past ten years an average per member of $25 to congregational expenses, and $69 to missions. During twenty-three years, this congregation has given to missions the sum of over $153,230. For fourteen years they have averaged $6,770 per year, and for the last nine years $8,272 per year, while the current expenses of the Church are never over $3,000 a year. This has all been accomplished without missionary committee or organization of any kind or any personal solicitation, but simply by the presentation of the opportunity more or less at all services, and by letters from different parts of the field from week to week at every mid-week service.

Here is a broad, clear and properly delimited definition of religion, which we find in Rev. Alexander LeRoy's great book, "The Religion of the Primitives:" "We can define religion, considered subjectively, as the ensemble of beliefs, boligations, and practices by which man recognizes the supernatural world, performs his duties tworad it, and asks help from it." Perhaps the author meant "objectively" instead of "subjectively," but otherwise it is a lucid definition. It is much clearer than the hazy definitions sometimes given, such as "man's sense of wonder toward the universe," or man's relation to the universe as a whole." These definitions do not recoynize the supernatural at all, and teach that even the athiest may be relipious. Let us have clear sunshine in our definitions and in all our thinking; let us not prefer fogland so sunshineland.

The first duty of the preacher is to preach. His theme must always be the gospel of Jesus Christ in some of its manifold phases. Also, he must preach as well as he can. For a preacher to do less than the very best that is in him every time he preache is to show lack of conscience in a great stewardship.

Poverty is uncomfortable, as I can testify, but nine times out of ten the best thing that can happen to a young man is to be tossed overboard and compelled to sink or swim.—James A Garfield.

October 29, 1898; age, 26 years, 6 months and 28 days.

The funeral services were conducted by Rev. J. Kidd, at Holly Springs Cemetery. He professed faith in Christ some few years ago. He leaves a wife, one child and a host of relatives to mourn their loss. MRS. B. H. PRESNELL.

IV. The Atonement for Sin, or Plan of Salvation.

1. In what way have we all sinner?

(1) We are sinners by nature; we are born with evil dispositions which tend constantly to lead us astray, and we have no good in ourselves.

(2) Our sinful nature has caused us actually to break the law of God, in our thoughts, in our words, and in our deeds.

2. What do we deserve for our sins?

The dreadful wrath and fiery indignation of God.

3. Can we not safely withstand the wrath of God?

No; for it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God.

4. Is there no way of escape from God's anger?

Yes; Jesus Christ is mighty, and able to save even to the uttermost, all who put their trust in Him.

5. Who is Jesus Christ?

He is the only Son of God, who was in the bosom of the Father before all worlds, but became the Son of Man also, and dwelt on earth, nearly nineteen hundred years ago.

6. Is Christ, then, both God and Man?

Yes; He is very God, and very Man, for in Him dwelt all the fullness of the God-head in a human body, and His name is Emmanuel, or God with us.

7. How did God live on earth?

He lived here as our example. He sought not His own earthly glory, but rather the glory of God, and the happiness of men, and went about, everywhere, doing good.

8. Why did Christ suffer death?

He died in our stead. He gave Himself—the just for the unjust—that he might be the Lamb of God, that should be slain for sin, that His own precious blood might wash away our transgressions, and fit us for a home in heaven.

9. Why did Christ rise from the dead?

To show also that we shall be raised up at the last day, and, if we have believed on Him, shall appear with Him in glory.

10. What is the Gospel?

The glad tidings of salvation by Jesus Christ.

11. What must we do to be saved?

(1) We must repent of our sins, and forsake them.

(2) We must believe on the Lord Jesus Christ as our Saviour, our only hope, given under heaven, and among men.

(3) We must, as nearly as we can, live according to the example of our Lord, believing that He will help us to do good, if we ask Him.

12. Where is Christ now?

At the right hand of the Father in heaven, where He ever liveth to make intercession for us.

13. Whom did Christ promise to send His disciples when He should go away?

The Holy Spirit, the Comforter.

14. What does the Holy Spirit do?

He reveals to us the things of God, and sanctifies our hearts.

15. Are there, then, three Gods?

No; our Saviour said: "I and my Father are one," and the Holy Spirit proceedeth from the Father and the Son. So that the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit are but one and the same God.

THE TASK NUMERICAL AND GEOGRAPHICAL.

To declare that there are at present in the non-Christian world approximately 1,116,000,000 people who do not know the gospel is a mathematical abstraction rather than a gripping statement of human need. It affects the average man about as much as to tell him there are 265,896 square miles in the State of Texas. We need a concrete picture of this multitude. If they formed a procession in single file three feet apart, they would extend 633,040 miles, or more than twenty-five times around the globe. Traveling at the rate of three miles an hour, day and night, it would take twenty-four years and twenty-eight days to pass a given point. If they formed a procession two hundred abreast and three and a half feet apart, they would extend from New York to San Francisco.

It is estimated that 500,000,000 of these people die in a single generation, or 41,511 every day. Our task is to give the gospel to our generation. If a single Christian should attempt to reach this large multitude, spending five minutes with each person, working eight hours a day, it would take him 14,269 years to deliver his message. Evidently this task is impossible. It is the responsibility not of an individual, but of every Christian. We simply use the illustration to give some idea of the vast multitude who do not know Christ.

In the report of the Edinburg Ecumenical Conference it is stated that, of the total population of approximately 1,100,000,000 in Asia and Africa, there are 119,000,000 people for whom no provision whatever is being made by any of the missionary societies. Imagine the entire population of the United States increased by 15,000,000 to 20,000,000 people and the whole multitude pagan, without a single missionary, and you get some idea of the needs today of those for whom no evangelistic effort whatsoever is being made.

Do these facts grip you as a Sunday School teacher? Is there any relation between this great unreached multitude and your class of young people?—Trull and Stowe.

LOKER.

Amos J. Loker was born September 12, 1895, and died June 21, 1925. He had been a member of Linville Christian Church a little more than five years, and had, from a child, lived a very exemplary life. He was a devoted son, husband, and father. He is survived by his father and mother, two brothers, his wife and two children. His funeral was conducted at Linville, June 23d, by his pastor, assisted by Rev. A. W. Andes, and his body was buried in the Linville Cemetery.

Teapot Dome Lease Holds.—

On June 19th, the United States lost her suit to annul the Teapot Dome oil fields' lease to Harry F. Sinclair and the Mammoth Oil Company. Judge T. Blake Kennedy, sitting in Cheyenne, Wyoming, disallowed all the chief charges against the company. District Attorney Albert B. Walton announces that he will appeal the case. In all probability, the lease will continue to hold, since this is the second effort of the government to annul it.

Senator Ladd Dies.—

While Senator Robert M. La Follette was being laid to rest at his Madison, Wis., home, Senator Edwin Fremont Ladd died suddenly in a Baltimore hospital. He was one of the strongest members of the insurgent bloc in the Senate. During the last campaign, he lined up squarely behind Senator La Follette, and for this betrayal of the Republican party, he, with Senator La Follette and Senators Frazer and Brookhart, were dropped from the committees of which they were members. Senator Ladd was known as the "Nestor of North Dakota's latter-day Populists." He was born on December 15, 1859, and before his entrance into politics was a teacher, a scientist and an economist. His and Senator La Follette's death seems to foreshadow the breaking up of the insurgent bloc in the Senate, and of the Progressive party movement.

Price-Fixing Illegal.—

The courts have recently fined fifty chair manufacturers for price-fixing. The Sherman anti-trust law seems still to be effective. The chair manufacturers pled guilty to the violation of the law, even though the Supreme Court had declared just previously that the dissemination of data concerning cost of material, cost of manufacturing, and so on, was a legal function of organizations. The violations have been going on since 1913, and in view of that fact the fine of from one to five thousand dollars each—a total of $166,000—seems a light penalty. The combined chair-makers do approximately fifteen million dollars' worth of business every year, which makes it seem still lighter. However, it shows, perhaps, a new trust policy, and in the long run is a good thing for all concerned. Two hundred and sixty-three furniture manufacturers have been indicted on the same charge of price-fixing, and the outcome of that suit in the Chicago courts is awaited with eagerness.

Connecticut is Prepared.—

John H. Trumbull, Governor of the State of Connecticut, has been severely criticised for his refusal to co-operate with the War Department in their general Defense Day program on July 4th. Governor Trumbull felt that a prepared-for test would mean nothing, and on June 15th he tried a little plan all his own in a surprise test. In four hours after his call to arms was issued, ninety-six per cent of the officers and ninety per cent of the militia were under arms. No one knew of the call previous to its issuance, and many tales were told accounting for the cause of so hasty a muster. Some loyal Connecticut men were sure that war had been declared on Mexico or China, and some had it that New London had suddenly fallen into the hands of the local "Reds." Whatever the cause might be, all hurried to arms, and were ready for fighting duty.

Governor Trumbull wired the War Department that the militia of his State were reliable in case of need. Connecticut certainly seems prepared for an emergency. Such tests of military strength are very dangerous things. We know now that Connecticut is prepared. Suppose we knew that every State was as well prepared, there would be some among us who would not hesitate to plunge us into war upon the slightest provocation; and, too, such tests constitute, to all intents and purposes, a threat to all the world. It is a sort of placing a chip on our shoulders, and there may be some of our neighbors hardy enough to knock it off, and then—and it will all be our own fault.

Peru Accepts Coolidge Award.—

The Peruvian government has accepted the arbitral award of President Coolidge in regard to the Tacna Arica dispute between that country and Chile. The Tacna Arica territory has been a source of dispute between the two countries since the close of the War of 1884. Previous to that war, the territory had been under the control of Peru, but since that time Chile has had charge of it. President Coolidge decided that a plebiscite in the disputed territory should be held to decide the future ownership of the country. Chile accepted the award several months ago, and some fear was entertained that Peru might fail to do so on account of the fact that she might feel that no just decision could be reached by a plebiscite, since Chile had for so long controlled the territory. The President's decision provided for a commission to hold the plebiscite and Peru's appointment of her representative is hailed with delight.

General John J. Pershing will represent the United States on the commission, and is now assembling his legal advisors preparatory to sailing for South America. A United States cruiser will be furnished for the purpose. No date has as yet been set for the plebiscite, but it is felt that the gravest menace to the peace and good will of the two Americas will go into dimming history by the close of this year. The people living in the Tacna Arica territory are to determine their government, which is the fair thing. A people should know under what government they prefer to live. The acceptance of this arbitral award demonstrates the power of the United States in friendly intervention, and will strengthen our prestige in the countries to the south of us.

Alcoholism on the Decrease.—

According to statistics given by Cora Frances Stoddard in Scientific Temperance Journal, Boston, alcoholism under prohibition has had a tremendous decrease. She points out the fact that during the four-year period, 1919 to 1922, there were only 6,345 deaths from alcoholism, while in the four-year period immediately previous to 1919 14,720 persons died from intemperate drinking. Allowing for the increase in population, it may be safely assumed that the lives of 11,774 persons were saved by prohibition. This improvement, however, leaves much still to be desired, since near two thousand of the 6,345 recorded for the period 1919 to 1922 were due to efforts to enforce the law. The figures of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company brought up to 1924 bear out the figures given by Miss Stoddard. The cross-section represented by the figures of the insurance company includes sixteen million industrial policy-holders in the United States and Canada. Both sets of figures show that after 1921—in which year alcoholic mortality was the lowest—it has been rising steadily until the last half of 1924, when a decrease was noticed. The Metropolitan authorities believe that the country will feel a very distinct dropping off during the coming years. Four and five-tenths per cent of the policies paid in the six years previous to 1919 were on deaths due to alcoholism, while in the six-year period since 1919, five and a half years of which was under constitutional prohibition, was only one and one-tenth per cent. The figures of the hospitals for the insane in New York and Ohio show the same falling off. During the period since 1919, the hospitals of New York should have admitted 2,953 persons whose insanity was due to alcohol. They actually admitted only 1,190. This hopeful statement comes from the State which in 1923 repealed its dry-law enforcement act. There is still much illicit use of alcoholic liquors in this country, but we have every cause to feel encouraged. We could not hope to uproot an evil so deeply set in a national people all at once; such reformations must be brought about gradually, as we have time and opportunity to educate against law violation in every form, and so build through our schools and pulpits a love of right for right's sake in the hearts of our people.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Chautauqua number!

A large part of the regular matter this week is held for lack of space. Some excellent articles.

Rev. H. C. Caviness, Apex, N. C., is to assist the pastor, Rev. C. E. Gerringer, in a series of meetings at Big Oak Church, Randolph County, beginning August 2d. Bro. Caviness will use his tent and have the aid of his song leader and assistants in the meetings.

Mrs. E. F. Burkholder is the author of a new method in sight reading, which is receiving the highest commendation from professional musicians. She will use this course in classes of young people during the Chautauqua. It is designed to assist the young people in learning new music in the Sunday School.

If our young people, Sunday School teachers, pastors and others do not attend the Elon Chautauqua July 27th to August 7th, or Bethlehem Chautauqua, beginning August 10th, the loss and the fault will be theirs and not that of the program makers. This week's SUN will give one who reads it some idea of the profits, privileges and benefits to be derived from attending Chautauqua.

Rev. J. F. Morgan, having resigned the pastorate at Winchester to accept the pastorates at Rosemont and Berea, Norfolk, leaves an important vacancy to be filled. Winchester is a growing Church and is a field of opportunity. We have a very devoted and intelligent constituency there, and it is devoutly hoped that the Church will be able to secure, without delay, just the man they need.

Mrs. W. T. Walters will give a course in religious drama, using as a textbook, "The Production of Religious Drama." This course furnishes information concerning methods of production by means of properties, lighting and costuming, and is designed to aid the amateur in producing and presenting religious drama for special occasions and also as an effective method of teaching Bible characters in the Sunday School class.

A group from the Federation of Christian Workers, Burlington, N. C., Bro. Charlie Walker, leader, went out to Shallow Ford to the regular prayer meeting of that Church Sunday night, June 28th. There were some fifty or sixty at prayer meeting that night, and as a result of the meeting there were nine converts. It was a glorious prayer meeting, and all present had a good time. Whenever people begin to testify and to witness for Christ, Satan gets out and the Spirit of God comes in.

Rev. W. T. Walters, D. D., having resigned his pastorate at Richmond, will be ready to accept work in another field after October 1st, when his resignation takes effect. Dr. Walters is one of our able, competent and successful pastors and Church builders. He carries business ability into the management of Church affairs and devotes his talents to his tasks with unceasing and unstinted energy and efficiency. No doubt a field of service that needs just such a man will command his time and secure his services. He should not be left idle, and October 1st should find him facing a pastorate of promise and of opportunity.

ELON CHAUTAUQUA ANNOUNCEMENTS.

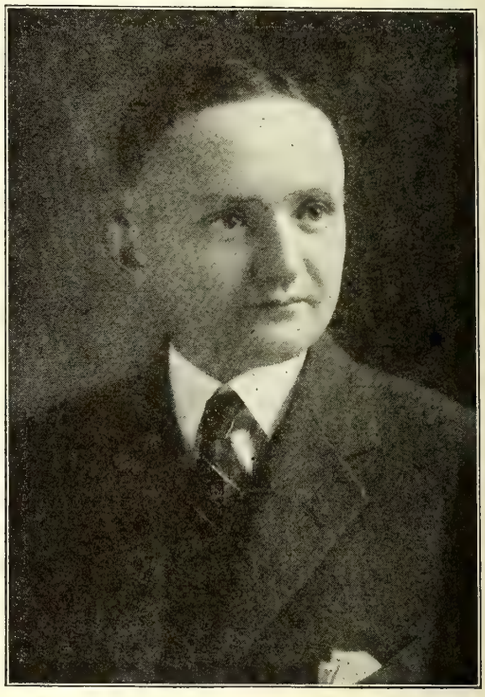
THE CHAUTAUQUA FACULTY.

The faculty of the Elon College Chautauqua and School of Methods, July 27th to August 7th, as published elsewhere in this issue, assure the strength and worth-while of the practical courses offered. They are all men and women well equipped for their special tasks. They have made a study of these lines of work which the average worker has not had an opportunity of doing, and out of this knowledge and varied experience they are going to bring to you their best. Theirs is a labor of sacrifice and love, and the Chautauqua management is under many obligations to them for their unselfish service, without which the school would not be possible. It will prove a blessing to any school or Church that can have its leaders sit under the teaching of these earnest, experienced workers.



Rev. E. H. Rainey.

NOTICE.

The Committee on Education of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference will meet at Antioch Christian Church at 12 o'clock Tuesday, July 21st, during the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, and all persons having any business with said committee will please meet with the committee at that time. All licentiates and candidates for the ministry connected with this Conference should report to the committee at that time.

W. W. STALEY,
Chairman Committee on Education.

Sunday, June 28th, was "Memorial Day" at Mt. Bethel, Rockingham County, N. C. Rev. Fred Wright is the esteemed and capable pastor, and is doing good work here. There were two services Sunday, and a feast of good things for the physical man at the noon hour. The Mission Secretary preached at the morning and afternoon services. And the pleasures of the day for him were much increased by having a visit from his good friend, Upton G. Wilson, Madison, N. C. We had corresponded a long time, but had never met face to face before. Upton G. is a fine fellow, positively handsome and comely indeed to look upon, especially as to that manly, smiling face. Strange that some of us are grouchy and complaining if we have to stay in bed a week or a month. Here is a man that hasn't walked a step in thirteen years, and has agreed that the bed is a mighty happy and comfortable place to live a life and make friends and be cheerful.—J. O. A.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE CHAUTAUQUA.

One could wish very devoutly that all THE CHRISTIAN SUN readers knew the real value of the Chautauquas and Schools of Methods to be held—the one at Elon College, N. C., July 27th to August 7th; the other at Bethlehem College, August 10th to 17th. The name may not carry to every SUN reader the significance of the need, which is the better understood by thinking of it as a School of Methods in Church, Sunday School, Christian Endeavor and Missionary Societies. These schools undertake to cover, in the four sections indicated above, the most important problems, also programs of progress and growth which pertain to organized Christian activities.

At the Chautauquas, pastors hold their conferences and are taught and learn from each other, under a competent leader, pastoral and ministerial problems of vital concern to themselves and their congregations. It is a meeting worth while for every pastor, and none can miss it save to their own loss. One does not hesitate to say that any Church or pastorate can well afford to send its pastor and pay his expenses while attending the Chautauqua for what the Church or pastorate would get out of it through their pastor on his return to the field. Pastoral problems are many and delicate and complicated, and certainly require the wisdom and the skill of enlightened counsel and leadership.

Every Sunday School superintendent should certainly attend the Chautauqua. Problems are studied and taught which bear directly upon the work of the successful superintendent. The superintendent has a tremendous task and a weighty responsibility if he does his full duty in his school and in his community. He certainly needs, therefore, all the enlightenment and counsel that progressive leadership can give.

Most of all, do Sunday School teachers need what the Chautauqua has to offer. We are often told that a teacher can only teach that which he or she is learning at the time. One quits teaching the very month and year that one quits learning. We teach only as we learn. That which we have learned in past days and years serves only as the reserve or dynamic to make forceful and effective that which one is learning at the time. Teachers need to know and to learn constantly any methods of approach to their topics and to their pupils, any ideas in acquiring and in presenting the facts of the lesson to be taught. Our Schools of Methods undertake to bring home to our Sunday School teachers these salient and worth-while facts and make them more efficient and capable of the work to be done in the school.

Christian Endeavor likewise receives proper emphasis, and its work and methods are studied and taught under one or more capable leaders and teachers. It will certainly pay each Christian Endeavor Society to have one or more representatives at one of our Chautauquas. There will be lessons learned that will be helpful to the society throughout the year.

Missions, home and foreign, are presented through class-room work and addresses. There is no topic of such grave importance with which we, as a people, are so little acquainted. Every missionary organization—men's, women's, young people's, and children's—should be reached in one of these Schools of Methods, where the missionary themes and thoughts are daily taught, emphasized and developed. It would give great impetus to all missionary endeavor if each society would have a representative to get in touch with the latest, most potent and worth-while thought in the field of missions.

These are the technical things with which our Chautauqua undertakes to deal. However, there are by-products and influences that are well worth seeking by any and all who can possibly attend the sessions. The fellowship is always delightful. Friendships are formed and acquaintances made which mean much to the social and Christian life of each individual who attends.

The sessions of Chautauqua already held at Elon and at Bethlehem have more than proven their worth and merit. They have more than justified all the means and efforts put forth in their behalf. They offer this year a feast of great and good things to all who attend, and we shall be surprised indeed if larger numbers than ever do not avail themselves of the rich things to be offered. If THE SUN could utter one word of advice in the ear of its readers, it would be, "Plan now to attend Chautauqua."

CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP.

From the human standpoint, there is no one thing that is a source of greater inspiration and help than Christian Fellowship. We do not refer to fellowship among Christians. That may or may not be the same thing as Christian fellowship. And while all fellowship among Christians is helpful, it is Christian fellowship that we need. It may not be amiss to define Christian fellowship. Christian fellowship is the sharing together of the things of the spiritual life. It is an experience meeting plus. It is discussing together the joys, the blessings, the tasks, and the obstacles of the Christian life. Sharing a joy enriches it. Sharing a blessing multiplies it. Sharing a task makes it easier. Sharing an obstacle through discussion generally discovers a way over or around it. There is very little of this Christian fellowship among average Christians. There is far too little of it in the average congregation. Christians get together and they talk about every thing save that which lies nearest to and is dearest to their hearts.

There may be many reasons to account for this dearth of Christian fellowship. When it has been attempted, there have been a few who have made it an occasion for the parading of their individual virtues. And the fine, true, sensitive soul shrinks from that sort of thing. Then, too, there is a natural reticence that prompts to a reverent modesty in the presence of spiritual things. Then, too, as congregations, and as denominations, we have not given an opportunity, nor taught our people how to share with one another the things of the spirit. But we are awaking to our need and to our sense of loss because of our neglect, and we are setting about the task of cultivating Christian fellowship.

It is this need of Christian fellowship that has been one of the things that has called our Elon Chautauqua into being. And nowhere will you find a finer opportunity to enjoy real Christian fellowship. There is more to be found there than the message of the class-room. The teaching is of the very finest type. It is done by those who both know how to teach and know what to teach. But there is also the vital contact with those who are trying to do the same things that you are trying to do. Many of them are confronting the same difficulties that you are confronting. Some of them will have found a way over the difficulties that have stopped your progress. And they will be able to show you the way. Most of them will be exactly like you. They have done some things with a fair degree of success. They have done many things with but indifferent success. And many of the things that so urgently need to be done, they have not yet found time, opportunity or courage to undertake. You will find that all who are trying to do the things our Master has assigned us to do have accomplished things that are wonderfully worth while. There will be consolation and information, and there will be inspiration in the Christian fellowship with such men and women.

HOW PAY OUR MISSIONARY DEBT?

The missionary debt of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is two and a half million dollars. This is the largest liability that ever rested upon our Church, and in the aggregate it seems appalling. But in relation to our ability, it is a bagatelle, for a contribution of only one dollar from each member would wipe it out.

This debt is the most pressing problem now before us. The interest alone absorbs an amount equal to one-half of our entire home mission budget, or one-fourth of our total income from the missionary assessment. It would maintain all our work in any foreign field, with the possible exception of Japan.

It will thus be seen that this debt clogs our progress and hampers us at every step. It will continue to do so until it is paid. Until it is paid, there must be constant appeals to the Church for extra funds. Perhaps it might come to a special "campaign" to wipe it out.

We could have no more dismal prospect before us than to drag this heavy debt year after year, perhaps for a generation. And that is what it may come to unless we take advantage of the only apparent course of eliminating this incubus at once.

The board of missions has agreed to apply all Centenary money on this debt and to use none of it for other purposes until that liability has been paid in full. There is an amount past due on good and collectible Centenary pledges to pay this debt many times over. We have only to collect these pledges.

By collecting the Centenary money, the missionary debt can be lifted without another "campaign," without any special appeal, without laying any extra burden on any Church.

Do you say that this will be difficult?

To be sure. But not nearly so difficult as to struggle year in and year out with this debt, make special "drives," and have the desperate situation dinned in our ears for a dozen years or more.

The missionary debt in justice ought to be paid by the persons who are responsible for it—the Centenary subscribers who have not paid. Some of these are no doubt in your Church. The way out for you is to see that these people pay what they promised.

One strenuous effort now will save the situation. One energetic collecting appeal this summer will prevent a multiplicity of appeals for this debt later on. Will you not see that the delinquent subscribers in your Church are induced to pay.—Editorial in Nashville Christian Advocate.

If the words "Men and Millions" are substituted in the above for the word "Centenary," the appeal and the situation will fit our present condition and need exceedingly.—Editor SUN.

the message on and at the same time make us a blessed channel of service and usefulness.

In detail, the course in organization and administration will have to do with the relation of the Sunday School to the other organizations and work of the Church as well as with the organization itself. The matters of "instruction, worship and service" will have a large place in the course, and "building and equipment" will have a place in separate periods.

"The program" will need special emphasis, as will the "supercision and discipline" and the "growth and development" of the school in the light of the need of the pupils and the community to which it belongs.

Emphasis will be placed on the "training of workers," as this is the key to our progress in bringing in the kingdom of God through the teaching process of the Church.

The whole course will comprise ten lessons, as follows: (1) Relationships; (2) Organization; (3) Organization; (4) Instruction, Worship and Service; (5) Building and equipment; (6) The Program; (7) Supervision; (8) Discipline; (9) Growth and Development; (10) Training the Workers.

The textbook and basis of the course will be Dr. Athearn's "The Organization and Administration of the Church School," with available books for collateral reference, reading and study.

and study; we have the cumulative experience and knowledge of several years of endeavor on which to build, and we are confident we have an awakened interest among our constituency in real and vital service for our Church and the kingdom to which to appeal. It should be a great session.

Are you going? I am!

CHAUTAUQUA COURSES OF STUDY.

With the growth of the Chautauqua, there has been an increased demand for a more unified and systematic course of study. The management has attempted to meet this demand as far as resources and conditions would permit. In conjunction with our leaders and other summer schools, an effort is being made to work out a three-year course leading to a Chautauqua diploma. By extension of the time to ten full school days this year, opportunity has been given to offer a larger number of international credit courses, and also to add to the number and variety of other courses.

ORGANIZATION OF THE CHURCH SCHOOL.

BY HERMON ELDREDGE.

A trolley car or a Church school needs two things or it is a dead weight and an obstruction instead of a method of progress.

A trolley car needs first an "upreach" to the source of power, and then it needs a "down reach" to the rails imbedded in the earth. If the "upreach" is cut out and the trolley gets off the wire, the car stops. If the "down reach" is cut out and the trolley is not on the track, the car stops. It is the same in either case; there is no difference.

It is the same with the Church school. It must have power from above, and it must have touch and connection below or the whole thing becomes a dead weight instead of a force.

The course at Elon on "Organization and Methods" is essential as much as is the devotional periods an dstudy. One puts us in touch with God, and one with men, and we are an absolute failure unless this connection is made through us. We sing "Make Me a Channel of Blessing," and then we stop the channel and it becomes a mudhole instead of a living stream. The two seas of Palestine from the classic illustration of life. The blue waters of Galillee, full of life and beauty and blessing because it is always receiving its life from the mountains and giving it out to the valleys below in blessing. Then the dead water of the salt sea which receives those same waters and never give out—what a dead, unlovely thing it is!

Elon Summer School should bring us both a blessing from above and lesson on how to give that blessing to others. The latter is what we hope from the course on "administration"—how to get the "down reach" to folks which will send OFF AGAIN FOR ELON!

No, we are not off for college, but off for the Chautauqua and School of Methods, which meets at Elon each summer. This will be our fourth trip, but not our last.

The first time we went, the summer of 1922, the attendance was very small, but happily very select. It was the first year for the Chautauqua at Elon, and its first year under the control and supervision of the Board of Religious Education of the Southern Convention. However, the small attendance did not prevent the successful carrying out of an excellent program, nor did it interfere with the creation of the happy fellowship which has characterized each subsequent session. We joined faith with the faiths of others in 1922 for a larger and better Chautauqua for 1923. And so it proved. And again faiths were united and the Chautauqua of 1924 was in many respects the best ever held in the Southern Convention.

Again Elon Chautauqua days are with us—the Chautauqua of 1925. What will it be? That depends upon the Churches, the preachers and the laity of the Virginia and Carolina Conferences of the Southern Convention.

We have a practically new Elon to which to go; we have a religious education equipment inferior to none in the country, in which to assemble

The program committee has tried to keep constantly in mind the needs of our leaders in all phases of the work and to prepare practical courses to meet the varied conditions. We believe that the program for this year is the best and most practical that has been offered. The courses on Church organization and Stewardship will be found very helpful in Church work. There is a strong series of courses for Sunday School workers, and also helpful courses in missions. There has been larger provision for young people, several classes having been arranged especially for them.

CHAUTAUQUA EVENING PROGRAMS.

The management of the Elon College Chautauqua and School of Methods, in their efforts to reach their ideal for the management—that of making it the greatest help possible to the religious educational work of the Convention—have made material changes in the evening programs for the year. The humor in the regular evening program will be practically eliminated and transferred to the athletic department and the "Happy Hour."

Short musical programs will be rendered by the choirs of the various Churches, and the lectures for the most part will augment the teachings of the morning hours. These lectures will be a special feature of the Chautauqua.

There will be some exceptions to the above. Saturday night will be "Stunt Night," or fun evening. Sunday evening will be consecration evening. Tuesday evening of the second week we will have an organ recital; and Thursday evening an illustrated lecture.

SUFFOLK LETTER

"Young people are worse than they used to be. Children do not mind their parents as they used to do. Parents allow their children too much liberty these days." The above is in the atmosphere. It is in the mind of many. It is in the speech of many. Is it so, or is it the repetition of all the ages of the past? Is youth too optimistic and age too pessimistic? Is it fully true, or is it partly true? If either, what is the cause? It is, no doubt, partly true, but not to the extent of the above quotation. New conditions have changed human society in all its relations. Country people are not so shy when they go to town as they once were; city people are not so important when they go to the country as they used to be. There has been a leveling of city and country life. Ready-made clothes have done much to change the contrast between country people and city people. The automobile has added to this process. The worst roads now are often in the towns, especially the small towns. City people go to the country more, and country people go to the cities more than in former days. People are beginning to feel when they sing, "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," that cities and rural districts both belong to the U. S. A.

When bad roads and lack of transportation kept young people at home, they naturally obeyed home rule and home conditions. They do yet, and more. The public school is responsible for much of what passes for worse conditions. The schools used to be taught by mature men and women, whose example and personality entered largely into school discipline. Now public schools are taught mainly by young people whose example and personality do not count for so much in forming personal habits and character. The emphasis is now on the school teacher—and it used to be on the school teacher.

School is not as serious as it once was. It is not as dignified. It is not as economic. The school atmosphere is frivilous. Games, clubs, banquets, easy-going expenditure of money earned by parents in that other school of hard work and self-denial, temporary teaching between school or college course and lifework—all these things enter into the composition of school life. Children learn so many things at school that they do not learn at home, that it makes it difficult for parents to keep them under home control. There is a growing tendency to discount age and to magnify youth, though the young would not be in school, would not have the money to spend, and would not enjoy the privileges they do, were it not for old taxpayers who support the schools.

The aftermath of war always discounts age. The honor paid to soldiers—the young men in the army and in the graves—is responsible for this undue discrimination between youth and age. The fact that should be kept in mind is that youth and age are complementary to each. Neither could succeed without the other. "Experience is the best teacher," and the majority of teachers in this day are without experience. The great numbers of young people in colleges and universities make it possible for the worst to influence the best; and so many crimes have been committed by students that education loses its standing before a thoughtful generation. Schools should prepare for living as well as for making a living. It is one of the appeals made in this day for students that college people can earn so much more than uneducated people. W. W. Staley.

ELON LETTER.

Practically all the denominational colleges now-a-days maintain summer schools for public-school teachers. Elon has steadfastly declined to undertake such a school, not that she is opposed to public education, but she feels that a Church college ought to offer its plant, especially during the summer, for the training of religious workers. We cherish the thought at Elon that one day the Christion Church in the South will maintain a three months' summer school for Christian leadership here.

We are glad this year that the summer school at Elon is to run for ten days. This will enable those who come to get two units credit toward an international diploma in teacher training. We have tried various expedients for training teachers. None of the methods so far tried has produced better results than the summer school for Christian workers held in our colleges. These summer schools do not exclude other methods of training teachers and Christian leaders, but they rather encourage the trial of other plans in the local schools and communities. The units secured in any standard school can all be counted toward the twelve that yield the diploma.

Too much cannot be said with reference to the need and necessity of trained workers in our Churches and Church schools. The standards of public teaching are being constantly raised. Those whose privilege it is to present the truth of God to growing lives should certainly be as well trained as those who teach secular branches. We are doing good work in our Church schools, it is true, but our good should never be the enemy of our best. We must train our future leaders to do better than we are doing.

The prophet Elijah prayed God to take him out of the world because he was doing no better service than his fathers had done. We ought to take every precaution to guarantee the progress of the Church and to provide leaders for the future who shall be able to take up our work where we leave it and do it better than we have ever been able to do it. When we do this, we are really proving our right and fitness to lead in our day. The qualified leader makes it easy for those who succeed him to do better work than we ourselves are able to do.

There is no better way to do this than to attend our summer schools in Christian leadership ourselves and to see to it that a large group of our young people also attend them. In addition to this, we need to see that our young people attend our own colleges. This is not narrowness—it is broad-visioned statesmanship in the Christian realm. Our colleges and our summer schools are the hope and fate of our future as a Church. We can support them and grow. We can neglect them and they will suffer; but the Church will suffer even more. No denomination has ever been able to survive its schools where its leadership is trained. It is folly to think our Church can do so. It is denominational suicide not to support and patronize our own educational and training institutions. W. A. Harper.

WELCOME TO THE CHAUTAUQUA.

Welcome! thrice welcome! is the greeting the President of the Elon College Chautauqua and School of Methods would extend to every one who attends the 1925 session—July 27th to August 7th.

We welcome you to the new Elon College, with one of the most beautiful and best-equipped college plants in the South. We welcome you to the two weeks of rich and inspiring fellowship with the great men and women of the Christian Church.

We welcome you to our class-rooms for study and inspiration for your particular line of work. We are endeavoring more and more to make this a practical training-school for the leaders in every Church. We welcome you to the uplifting strains of music and the earnest, thoughtful messages in our evening programs. We welcome you to the joyous hours of recreation and song service on the campus.

We are planning for a bigger and better Chautauqua than ever before. We want to help you, and through you to help your Church, your Sunday School, your Christian Endeavor or missionary society. The Chautauqua is yours. We want you to come and enjoy it. It was organized and is being maintained for the benefit of your Church and we are anxious for your Church to share in its benefits. Again we bid you welcome to the Chautauqua. W. T. Walters,
President.

YOUTH AND THE CHURCH.

"What is the matter with the young people?" "What is the matter with the Church?" These are questions that you may hear nearly every day fro mthe lips of various groups of people. So insistent have these questions become that considerable study has been done on both subjects in recent years.

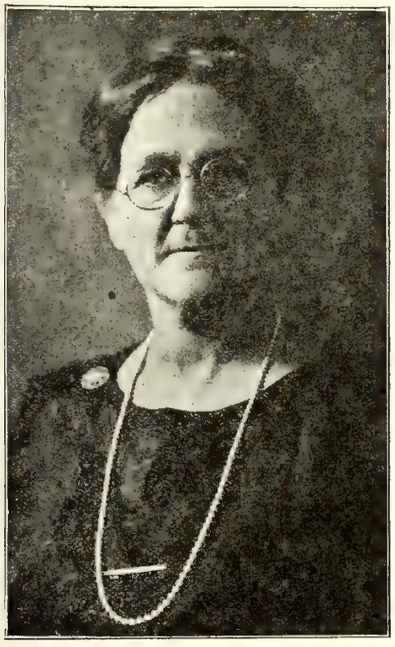
It is the hope of the teacher of this course that many leaders of our young people will come to the Chautauqua with real problems from their own fields and will present those problems for solution. It may be lack of organization, overorganization, the need of correlated effort, the lack of trained leaders, seeming lack of interest in the Church on the part of the young people, or something else that you have worried with for months, or it may be years. All of these matters will come up for a frank discussion, with the hope of some help in the solution of them. There is an abundance of material at our disposal to aid in solving our problems. The teacher has no pet theory to put over, but shall be very happy if he can offer some practical suggestion that those who take the course can take home and put into operation for the betterment of the Sunday School, Christian Endeavor, or Church. The needs of the young people will be uppermost in all the discussions. F. C. Lester.

WHAT SHALL I DO WITH MY LIFE?

The above is the title of a course that I am to teach for one week during the Elon Chautauqua. God's great purpose of service for the lives of His children is not a mere fancy, but a practical reality, to be known and lived out in our present work-a-day life.

What is life for, any way? This question was asked by a group of young people, and I will give you a few of their answers. They are as follows:

"Where should one put his life? It seems as if he might better make money and then do as much good as he can with it."



Mrs. J. W. Patton.

"I'd be willing to go to the mission field, but I'm not sure that's the way to help most."

"Sometimes I think to get into politics and just fight for decency is the only thing worth while."

"I think life is such a dead level these days. I think what we all feel in college, and in fact all my friends not in college, is the need of a meaning, a motive, for it all—an incentive is what I mean."

I believe the last statement embodies all that was in the minds of that group. They are hungry for a reason for the thing called life; eager for a motive; subconsciously longing for an incentive. They find it difficult to see the relation between religion and life; between ideals and challenge, and the world they see about them.

This five days' course of lectures is designed for personal enrichment—to bring those who take it face to face with the better-self, that they may fully realize that God has a plan for their lives which no other person can fill.

MRS. J. W. PATTON.

JUNIOR METHODS IN CHURCH SCHOOL.

When I had finished reading Mrs. Marie Cole Powell's book of the above title, I felt that I was back in school again with a great deal more to learn as a pupil and as a teacher. Now, when I have outlined its chapters and studied about some of the things for our classes at Elon, I neally feel that I have been to a summer normal and taken a course in child psychology. I certainly hope some of the splendid ideas of Mrs. Howell's will find fertile soil in our class membership at Elon.

STEWARDSHIP PAGEANTS AND PLAYLETS.

One of the helpful ways to teach stewardship is through pageants, playlets, readings, dialogues. We are suggesting an interesting and helpful list.

The Ring of Rama Krishniah. By Anita B. Ferris; 9 men, 8 women, 2 boys, 2 girls, a crowd; time, about one hour; stewardship-missionary pageant-play; a very high-class dramatic production; scenes in India and America. Price, 25 cents.

Aunt Margaret's Tenth. By Edna B. Burdick and Everett E. Johnson; 1 man, 4 women, 1 small girl; time, 30-40 minutes; the well-known story dramatized. Price, 2 cents.

The Dream that Came True. A production with nine main characters and others, with single speeches; time, 45 minutes; a very elaborate stewardship pageant. Price, 15 cents.

Tithes and Offerings. A brief presentation, with 4 women and 1 man, or 5 women; time, 25-30 minutes. Price, 5 cents.

Farming Eden. Dialogue between Anthony Pew, a retired farmer, and his wife; time, 30 minutes. Price, 10 cents.

Starting Right. A newly married couple plan their budget with Christian ideals; time, 20 minutes. Price, 10 cents.

Accounting that Counts. A trilogue by 2 girls and 1 man on figuring a budget; time, 30 minutes. Price, 10 cents.

Aunt Tillie Learns to Tithe. Pageant for 12 to 17 characters, mostly single speeches; time, 30 minutes. Price, 10 cents.

The Canvassers and Mr. Brown. A short dialogue on the every-member canvass; 30 minutes. Price, 10 cents.

Thanksgiving Ann. A playlet with 7 characters; time, 30 minutes. Price, 2 cents.

Was Smith His Real Name? Dialogue between 2 men; time, 20 minutes. Price, 2 cents.

Not Exempt. A tithing playlet; 20 to 25 characters; time, 30 minutes. Price, 10 cents.

Two Valuable Books.

Funds and Friends. By Tolman Lee; cloth; 138 pages. Price, $1.50.

This book has been a delight. It has been especially prepared for those who have to do with raising funds for religious and social organizations. Any person charged with the raising of generous funds for such agencies would be greatly aided by it. But there are others who raise smaller funds whom I would like to see possess it, such as the men who train the every-member canvassers, sometimes it is the pastor, or it may be a layman who does the training. It would be helpful to the head of the Department of Stewardship and Finance in larger Churches. All who raise large funds, such as denominational secretaries, would find it helpful. It is published by the Woman's Press, New York City, and has nine great chapters.

The Stewardship of Life. By Agar; cloth; 113 pages. Price, 75 cents.

Dr. Agar is stewardship and Church efficiency secretary of the Baptist Church. This is among his best books. He discusses in a most devotional and practical way such great themes as are now engaging the attention of the Christian world and of the individual Christian who is facing his stewardship privilege and obligation—"Ownership," "Possessor and Possession," "The Steward," "A Planned Life," "Group Stewardship." The treatment is very interesting and thorough. It will be of interest to laymen who are seeking help and information. Pastors will find it a valuable textbook.

These books may be secured from the Christian Publishing Association, Dayton, Ohio.

Do You Believe?

Still the tithing testimonies keep coming in from every section of our brotherhood. They are from our laymen, ministers, Church officials, women, young, old, well-known workers, college graduates, college professors, workers in the rank and file. Have you read them week after week in this column? We want more of them. Would you believe these persons who have been telling each week what tithing means to them on any other matter that they would write about? If their testimony is true, why not believe them on this matter that you already believe down deep in your heart is true, and actually enroll as a tither and practice it. You will not likely practice it unless you enroll.

The witness this week is Mrs. N. G. Newman, Holland, Va. Here it is: "Tithing furnishes a definite and practical system, inculcates business habits, tends to Christianize industry, increases the quantity and quality of gifts, recognizes God's ownership, and man's stewardship, and brings joy and happiness to the giver."

Warren H. Denison,
Secretary.

The Christian Sun will be glad to furnish copies of these books to any one wishing them.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND THE CHAUTAUQUA.

In my morning mail, two notices came to me: "Two thousand Baptist young people are gathering at their Virginia Beach encampment," and "there were over two hundred young people of our Church (Presbyterian) at Efulen from all over West Africa." The great Churches—be they Baptist, Presbyterian, or others—are constantly calling their people together for conference, counsel and inspiration. For the sixteen-year-old boy who attends either of the above-mentioned gatherings—in Virginia or Africa—he will learn other lessons of great worth to him than those he may learn from book or lecture.

He will learn to know, more or less, intimately a score or more of the ministers about whom he has heard and read. They will henceforth become real personages to him. He will hear them talking when he reads their writings; he will see their smile when he hears something about them; and ever after the impress of their personality will be upon him. Their hopes, their plans, their dreams for a great Church and a mighty people begin to take hold of the young man, and he falls in love with the challenge and beauty of it. He begins to think out something for himself about the whole thing. What is his part? Where is his place? Why be counted a nonentity? Why not line up with something large and uplifting? "The thoughts of a boy are long, long thoughts"; and so are they of a girl. Therefore, he is beginning to become a part of something. He knows something first-hand about his Church as a whole.

He will some time, some where ask himself if he should himself become a minister. But also, at either of the above-mentioned gatherings, he will see a number of business men and women. Here are the leaders in their business world making wonderful speeches for their Church and its Christ. They are a part of its program. They have stopped selling, or buying, or building, or making, or directing to come to the Church gathering, and they are just as keenly interested in furthering the Church's plans as any minister there. Again he sets himself to the task of thinking. Maybe God wants me to help harvest and harness the wealth of the material world for His kingdom about which I am hearing so much in this gathering. Big business men are also big Christians, he learns, and wherever he sees again some Christian project or plan fostered by one of the noble business men whom he has met and learned personally to know, he will say, here is a man I believe in and a cause I wish to line up with and help to become a success.

And some where, some time our sixteen-year-old will inquire of himself, is my place in the business world for God? But at the gathering he will see a large group of teachers and a few secretaries. And they, too, will be working zealously and enthusiastically for the Church. He will find they have won great honor, love, and respect by everybody for the good service which they render. He will see that he can find a place without being either a minister, or merchant. For he will see and understand that while they are both indespensable, the teacher and the directing expert both have their places of mighty influence and power. Would God like me to be a teacher? Would He honor me as a secretary? And bless my life! here again he is thinking long and worthy thoughts.

But who are the little group accorded such a fine place? Whose faces are radiant? And who speak with an understanding deep, and wide, and high? The children love them and sing about them. Banners bear their names. Placards post their pictures. Speakers sound their praises. When they pray, God is near, and when they talk, we seem to see His Son. Our sixteen-year-old looks upon them. They talk with him. They are already really great. He is inspired. His vision becomes heavenly. His horizon world-wide, for missionaries are masters of God's map. They pray with him. Again he asks what is it all about? Where is he? What niche is his?

The days pass, and the nights—for there are nights with all their beauty, peace, soul-challenge. He has learned to know all present, to love all and see that he must be a part of it some where. He cannot be outside. He must be inside with his whole life. Either a minister, a business man (including professional men), a teacher, or a missionary he must be. For he has seen the Church as a whole. His heart has beaten with the Church's heart. His thoughts have been after God's.

Will we not make the Elon Chautauqua such a place? Will we not make it such a time? Will we not people it with such a personnel? Will not every Church send some of all its kinds of persons—young, old, happy, sad, wise, and seeking to be wise? And will not all who go bear in mind that the Spirit of the Christ will be there?

JOHN G. TRUITT.

AN EVANGELISM FOR OUR DAY.

The course in evangelism will deal with the art of winning people to Christ. The course will assume that the one sure proof of a man's call to the ministry is his ability to win people to Christ, and that one of the best evidences of sincerity of faith on the part of a layman is his interest in winning his friends or having them won for Christ.

A brief survey will be made of the history of evangelism, showing how the methods of evangelism have changed to meet the needs of a changing order. The major portion of the course will be devoted to a careful study of the type of evangelism that will answer the need of the present day and generation.

The merits of visitation evangelism over other methods of evangelism will be considered, and a year-round program of this type of evangelism suited for both rural and city Churches will be worked out by the members of the class.

The course will deal only with theories that have been tried out and proved successful. One period will be given over to a study of the evangelistic approach that should be made to various types of individuals.

The textbook for the course will be "Visitation Evangelism," by Dr. A. E. Kernahan; Revell, publishers.

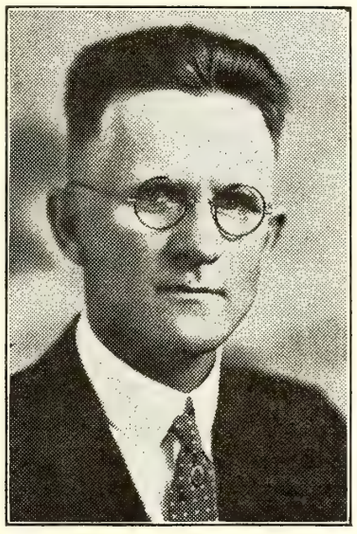
FELLOWSHIP AND CONDUCT.

Some one has said that recreation and religion, leadership and character, play and ideals, fellowship and conduct, all the elements of modern social life, are so closely connected that none of the parts can be neglected without injury to the whole life.

To live a life at its best demands a selection of the best in recreation. The world is full of good for those who seek it. Lazy pastime and questionable amusement, when they crowd out the best, are little less than criminal.

Richard C. Cabot says: "Play is just as much a part of our proper life as is love or work or worship. The life that has no recreation in it cannot be the fully developed life that God intended us to have."

Play is looked upon as an educational agent. Aside from sportsmanship, it is a force of character building and clean living. Social recreation has become a powerful agency in teaching people to "give and take"—to work and live together in society.



Mr. W. A. Welch.

Our Church must meet the challenge and give to our young people a program of entertainment that will afford them an opportunity of expending their energy in a wholesome way. One of the features of this summer's Conference will be a recreational program formed with two purposes in view. The first is to furnish the delegates at the Conference with wholesome recreation during the ten days they are at Elon; the second purpose is to inspire the young people who attend this Conference to seek and promote through the Church wholesome recreation.

Each one attending this Conference, both male and female, should bring suitable clothing to wear while playing. Those having tennis rackets, baseball equipment or any other paraphernalia for games of any kind should bring it along. An opportunity for play will be afforded every person at the Conference.

W. A. WELCH.

MISSIONS—OUR RESPONSIBILITY.

The keynote of the early Church—the task Christ set them in His last command to His disciples before He returned to His Father and ours—was missions. In Acts 1:8, we find that those who were Christ's followers were to be witnesses to Him—beginning at home and spreading to the uttermost parts of the earth. And we of His later Church have been so slow about obedience, and so selfish in keeping for ourselves what the earlier and more obedient followers, His early missionaries, brought to our forefathers. But we as a Church are waking up to the fact that Christ included us in His command, and are asking how we can best obey now in our day and generation. It is to answer this eager, though tardy, inquiry that the facts of wirld-wide missions are being written and spoken and taught in the many schools of missions, and the smaller Church classes. For years, the interested few have recognized that the story of missions is the most fascinating romance ever written, most fascinating because true, and romantic because strange to our common-place living, yet enough like what we know to hold our attention and interest as we hear how others of God's children receive His Son and learn to live according to His teaching.

Since the beginning of modern missionary effort, we have mistakenly divided our witnessing to the uttermost parts of the earth into home and foreign missions, though now that modern inventions have made communication so swift and comparatively easy, the comprehensive term "world evangelization" would seem more in accord with what Christ commanded. "Beginning at home, but not ending there," as one writer has so tersely said. So now, under the title of mission study, we try to learn how those of God's children, who have already recognized that kinship, can best help their brothers and sisters near and far who are estranged from the Father, to know the way back. There are many ways to help—almost as many as there are human beings living on this earth—and modern missions are so varied in their scope that no one lesson, no one school, and no one missionary can hope to tell the whole story of what is being accomplished in the world-wide work of Christ's kingdom. Our study book for this year, "Prayer and Missions," gives us a new idea of the power and force of prayer, and its use in God's plan. Christ alone seems to have known how to so use this powerful force as to accomplish what our Father wants accomplished. The rest of us have learned the lesson of prayer so slowly, even though we have the record of Christ's praying and its results. And now Mrs. Montgomery, in her book, has given us also just some few of the many wonderful results that the history of missions has for us.

Besides this foundation book, the others, Mrs. Cronk's "Brave Adventurers" for the young folks, and the books on Latin-America, as well as those others telling us of other people in our own country who yet need the help and teaching of those of Christ's followers who are nearest them—all these will help us to catch the inspiration of the task Christ's last command set for us, and will help us to interpret our desires to serve Him in practical terms of helpfulness for our neighbors far and near. Christ's definition of that word "neighbor" given in answer to the young man's question, and preserved for us as the story of the Good Samaritan, sets us thinking of those in our day who have "fallen among thieves," and through no fault of their own, been stripped of their birthrights as children of our Father in heaven.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

MISS PATTIE COGHILL, Field Secretary, 11 East Newton St., Boston, Mass.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

July 26, 1925.

SUBJECT: "The Council at Jerusalem."

GOLDEN TEXT: "We believe that we shall be saved through the grace of the Lord Jesus." Acts 15:11.

LESSON: Acts 15:1-35.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Rom. 5:1-9.

REFERENCE MATERIAL: Gal. 2:11-21, 5:1-26; Eph. 2:4-22.

The extension of Christianity far beyond the borders of Palestine, and especially the work of Paul and Barnabas among the Gentiles, presented to the Christian Church its first great and insistent problem. That burning problem really had three issues—issues that are distinct, but vitally related to each other. In the first case, the problem, and the most insistent one, was, were the Gentile Christians to be compelled to follow the demands of the Jewish law? Secondly, "What were the obligations of the Jewish Christians to their inherited law?" And thirdly, "What were the mutual obligations of each when Jewish and Gentile Christians ate and associated together?" Our immediate concern is with the first of these three questions or problems.

It was inevitable that the work of Paul and Barnabas should attract the attention of the Church at Jerusalem. It was just as inevitable that it should arouse opposition on the part of those who held a legalistic and formal view of religion. For it must be kept in mind that in working with Gentiles, Paul and Barnabas were applying the principles of Christianity direct to the Gentiles as such. In other words, Paul and Barnabas were accepting as Christians those who believed on the Lord Jesus Christ, regardless of whether they had first become proselytes of the Jewish Christianity, which was, in a sense, the orthodox Christianity. This acceptance of the Gentiles direct, without the imposition of the Jewish forms, was unacceptable with many of the more strict Jews, and they came down to Antioch "to defend the faith once for all delivered to the saints." They insisted that "except a man be circumcised after the manner of Moses, he cannot be saved." So heated did the discussion become that it was decided that a delegation should be sent to Jerusalem in order to settle the matter once and for all, and Paul and Barnabas, with certain other brethren, went up to Jerusalem to confer with the "pillars of the Church."

It is important that we see clearly the issue involved There was something vital in Christianity at stake. The question was really involved as to the nature of Christianity. Is Christianity a matter of belief in creeds and conformity to ceremonial rites, or is it a life, a matter of the spirit of loving trust and obedience toward God is revealed in Jesus Christ? The battle was really a battle for Christian liberty.

There are two accounts of the way in which the problem was solved, the one in Acts as given in the lesson today, and the one in Galatians as given as a reference. These two accounts agree in general, although they vary in details. Any one who would understand the matter thoroughly must read both accounts.

It seems that Peter bore striking testimony to the gracious work that God had done at his hands among the Gentiles. He emphasized the fact that God had made no distinction between the Jew and Gentile when it came to the matter of giving His Spirit, and went on to draw the far-reaching conclusion that it was through the grace of the Lord Jesus that the Jews, as well as the Gentiles, were to be saved. The Jew could not be saved through the law. The Gentile could be saved without it. The essential thing was faith in Jesus Christ.

Then Paul and Barnabas testified to the gracious work of God among the Gentiles. Their recent missionary tour had given them convincing proof that God's grace did abound even unto the Gentiles—those who had never been under the Jewish dispensation, and who had received the gift of the Spirit in like manner as the Jews. There was but one answer to all this, and James as the spokesman made answer in terms that asserted Christian liberty, even though his answer did involve somewhat of a compromise. He asserted that the Gentiles were not under obligation to be in bondage to Jewish law. But, inasmuch as they lived among the Jews, it seemed expedient that the Gentiles abstain from meats offered to idols, from blood, from things strangled, and from impurity—things which were unlawful for Jews. This involved no compromise of principle on either side, and the issue of the relation of the Gentiles to Jewish law was settled in principle, even if not in actual practice.

Paul had to carry on the fight for a long time, and many of his writings are defenses of the principle here established. The Christian world is eternally under obligation for his uncompromising fight for Christian liberty. But the Christian world, even today, is not living openly in accord with this principle. There are those today who insist upon literal acceptance of creeds and confessions as the ultimate test of orthodoxy. As a matter of fact, the real issue between the fundamentalists and the modernists is here. Christianity is a life, but it inevitably tends to harden into creeds and forms unless care is taken. In our day and age when there is such a pressing need of the gospel, it is well that men are reexamining the foundations of Christianity, trying to find in the vessels into which the Christian experience has been put the water of life itself. And if a group of Christians can again bring to the fore the basic fact that by grace are we saved through faith, it will have made a distinctive contribution to our own day and time.

Teaching Points.

1. The usual test of orthodoxy is belief, and not life.
2. The principle of Christian liberty is constantly being challenged.
3. A personal experience is worth more than a theory.
4. The theory should be made to fit the facts, and not the facts to fit the theory.
5. God is no respecter of persons.
6. We are saved by grace through faith.
7. A man might give intellectual assent to every creed and confession extant and still be un-Christian.
8. The best way to settle arguments is to meet together in the spirit of fairness and brotherliness.
9. Agreement may be reached where each side is willing to forego nonessentials.
10. Solutions can be reached only as men do as seemeth good to the Holy Spirit.
11. "Sometimes we win our greatest victories just by giving in."
12. "A little explained, a little endured, a little passed over, and the quarrel is ended."
13. Christ releases men from bondage to the law.
14. Men may be honest and sincere in their disagreement.

EUGENE H. RAINEY'S WORK AT ELON.

Eugene H. Rainey will endeavor to bring five messages of inspiration and information for young people on the general subject of "What it Means to Be a Christian." These lectures are the result of a wide range of experience among young folks in various walks of life. The facts are gathered from working with young people in the ordinary Church, in college and university groups, among the youth of the slums of a great city, and from the experience of himself and thousands of other young men for the allied armies during the recent war. Youth the world over are asking the same questions. These lectures are attempts to answer these questions in simple terms and plain language.

The second week of Chautauqua will consist of five periods in a Christian Endeavor laboratory. The first period will deal with the origin and purpose of Christian Endeavor; in the second there will be a demonstration of the proper way to organize and promote a Christian Endeavor Society; the third will carry out a helpful devotional meeting; the fourth will show how to conduct a real live social in any society, and the fifth will reveal methods of helpfulness for others, such as your pastor, the aged, the sick, the Sunday School, and persons in missionary fields.

FIRST WEEK.

"What it Means to Be a Christian."

1. "The Simplicity of Our Faith."
2. "What Can We Know About God and Jesus?"
3. "Our Prayer Faith."
4. "Building for the Future."
5. "The Romance of Our Bible."

SECOND WEEK.

"A Christian Endeavor Laboratory."

1. "The Origin and Purpose of Christian Endeavor."
2. "How to Organize and Promote a Good Society."
3. "The Worth While Devotional Meeting Every Week."
4. "The Good-Time Social."
5. "The Christianity of Christian Endeavor."

VACATION PLUS CHAUTAUQUA.

We take our vacations for rest from the regular routine of every-day duties. We do not necessarily have to stop all activity, but we do need a change. Why not make the vacation inexpensive, restful, social and profitable? Why not make the days count for future usefulness? Why not use a part of the time in better equipping ourselves for our tasks?

The Elon College Chautauqua offers a helpful vacation amidst the most pleasant surroundings and at a very small cost. In addition to that, you will have two weeks' daily fellowship with the pastors and Church leaders from all sections of North Carolina and Virginia. If we make it vacation plus Chautauqua now, later we can make it vacation plus Chautauqua plus efficient service.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

Now is the time for everybody to come to the aid of the Christian Orphanage. July, August and September are always discouraging months. The income is always small and the expense account cannot be diminished much. The children eat, work and wear out clothes during those three months just like other months, and whether we have income or not the expense goes on. I want to appeal to our Sunday Schools that do not make a monthly offering to come to our rescue now.

Did you ever try pushing an automobile uphill when the engine could not pull it and when you were doing your best and could hardly get it to move, and some friend came to your aid and put his shoulder against it—how it did lighten the load! We are doing our best. The weather is extremely dry and hot, and the garden is parched up. Our vegetables are almost a failure on account of the drought, and the children must be fed. It will do your school good to join our faithful ones and help feed the helpless. Try it and see.

One offering each month for the Orphanage and one for missions is a mighty goo dplan to adopt and works well in every Church that has tried it.

Don't forget our pretty new building! I know you want to invest something in it. Work will begin about August 1st.

Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

THE SOUL'S SEARCH FOR GOD.

"Who is the image of the invisible God."—Col. 1:14-19.

The human mind ever gropes and the human heart ever cries out for God. Men would know more about Him and His relation to them. Not long ago, a gripping advertisement caught my attention. It was the advertisement of a book, and underneath written in script were these words, "What I want to know, Padre," he said, "is, what is God like? That is your real business, Padre; you ought to know." This question the author attempted to answer in the book. The question is one that every man would put, "What is God like?"

There are many sources from which we may find out something about God. If we watch Him working in nature, we can see much of His power and His might and His protection and His care. Through philosophy, we may arrive at some conclusions concerning the meaning of life and of God. If we are to find the God we know, the only God we can know, we must find Him not in history, or nature, or philosophy. The best source of information is Jesus Christ, who is "the image of the invisible God."

Prayer.—Our Father, we ask for the clear mind after the sweet night's refreshing sleep, for the eager passion to do Thy will, for forgiving spirit, for the undiminishing faith as the years roll on, and for the power that overcomes evil. Amen.

TUESDAY.

PUTTING CHRIST FIRST.

"He must increase, but I (John) must decrease."—John 3:26-31.

It is a principle in art that in the composition of a picture, all the parts shall be so arranged as to lead the eye inevitably to the characteristic feature. Whatever prevents this is a capital defect. Accessories are only important as they help this end. When Varelst, the Dutch painter, made his tulips so glorious that they drew attention away from the face of James II, in whose portrait he had placed them, he violated this canon. So did Hayden, when, in the picture of Christ's triumphal entry into Jerusalem, he made the figure of the beast, on which the Master rode, unduly prominent. So does the theologian who fascinates by his metaphysics, or the preacher who charms by his rhetoric, while the Divine Personality of the Son of God is dimly outlined. Worship itself may hinder the true apprehension of Christ. A liturgy is a fine thing if it leads to God, and a very bad thing if it leads away. God in Christ must be the central figure. He must come first in our lives; we must come last. We must decrease; He must increase.

Prayer.—Our Father, may no experience of this day cause us to lose our love for one another, or our faith in Thee. And bring us to the day's close with a heart at peace with Thee and with all mankind. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

PROCRASTINATION, THE PILFERER.

"When I have a convenient season."—Acts 24:22-25.

All the ingenuity of the police was exhausted in a bootless attempt to snare a sneak-thief who one summer infested the suburban districts. No house was safe. No one knew where he would appear next. On one occasion the man scaled the porch posts of a fine house, while the dining and living-rooms were thronged, and ransacked the upper rooms, getting away with ten thousand dollars in cash and jewels.

Not many of us will ever have our homes or pockets rifled by such a thief. But there is a sneak-thief who dogs our steps and enters our homes, and sits with us, and if we could but see him, we should see many a sardonic smile curl his lips. His name is procrastination. We resolve to pray regularly, or read the Bible daily, or we plan some high thing. It is not our purpose to cheat God or ourselves. Far from it! "When I have a convenient season," said Felix to Paul. In the same spirit, we permit day to fade into night and our resolve is not executed. we have been robbed. The present, this day, this very hour—that is the time to do the good! The "convenient season" may never come. "This day" is the Scriptural injunction. "Straightway" is the word so often used of Jesus and His work.

Prayer.—"Teach us, O Father of infinite mercy, the value of the prayers we pray. Show to us the power of them and the wonder of them, not dependent on our eloquence for their answers, but upon our simple faith. Amen.

THURSDAY.

THE JUST FOR THE UNJUST.

"Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God."—1 Peter 3:13-18.

Unnumbered men and women have given up their lives for ideas which they esteemed more valuable than life. When one recalls how many martyrdoms there have been in the religious, political and industrial progress of the race, it is strange that the earth can grow any flower that is not red. Yet, strangely, in all the list of the world's sufferers, there is one solitary sufferer, one who treads the wine-press alone. Christ died as none ever did. First of all is the fact that His death is the culminating point of centuries of symbolism. All the ancient and elaborate system of sacrifices in the Old Testament points to an ultimate sacrifice, one which should contain within itself the virtue and value of all that preceded it.

Then there is the historic fact that the death of Christ has a vital relation to the faith of vast numbers of men, and hence to their lives. We see it in the first recorded Christian sermon in which the apostle said, "Ye crucified the King of glory." The consciences of the people convicted them, and as they repented and believed, their lives were changed. Ere long, so many were changed that human history itself was turned into a new channel.

Prayer.—Help us, dear Father, to walk through this day with cheerful faces and happy purposes. May all to whom we speak receive a blessing in the word we give them. Bless every one who knocks at our door. In His name. Amen.

FRIDAY.

TEARS AMID THE TRIUMPH.

"And when he drew nigh, he saw the city and wept over it."—Luke 19:41-44.

The road that leads from Bethphage to Jerusalem hides the city from the view, and then suddenly it bursts upon one with a turn in the road. The words are a true description—"As he drew nigh, he saw the city." The sight of the city and capital of His nation with its great temple glistening in the sum brought tears to the eyes of Jesus. They were not tears of a coward who shrank from the impending cross; but they were tears of regret because all He saw that day would in a few years be in ruins, because of the people's rejection of God.

It was a moment of triumph, and yet the tears were on His face, the heart welling in regret, because His own people were not won to His cause. Yet, did Jesus really fail! Outwardly everything was lost; the city and the temple fell beneath the sword of Titus in less than forty years. But did Jesus fail!

Prayer.—Give, O Heavenly Father, we pray Thee, wisdom from on high; for the nations that are distressed with selfish leaders, the lands that are aflame with hate and darkened with fear give, we pray Thee, the gifts that alone can make nations great and happy. Give Thy justice and Thy righteousness. Amen.

SATURDAY.

"SEEING JESUS."

"And Herod said, John have I beheaded: but who is this, of whom I hear such things?"—Luke 9:7-11.

The gossip of Herod's palace was running high on one persistent topic—Jesus, who is He? Some said He was a reincarnation of an old Jewish prophet; others that He was John the Baptist risen from the dead. When they associated this new and wonderful teacher with John, a shudder went through the tetrarch's heart. Reports of Christ's miracles had trickled into the court, and Herod was perplexed. Herod was caught and held fast by a strange power.

With fear mingled with curiosity, this murderous and adulterous pagan desired to see Jesus. One day he did meet Jesus by the courtesy of Pilate. The record says, "He was exceedingly glad to see Jesus,"; he was relieved to find that this Nazarene was not John returned to life.

A man may meet Jesus and go away as sinful as before. Men do not always desire to "see Jesus," that they may be saved. Some want the loaves and the pieces of fish. Simon wanted to see Him as an ornament to his table. Herod wanted to see Him to settle a problem of conscience and philosophy; but Zaccheus wanted to see Him because he felt somehow Jesus could help him to live a new life.

Prayer.—Bless us now, we beseech Thee, eternal and merciful One, as we dismiss ourselves from this hour of fellowship to find that it has brought us together in a better understanding of one another's needs and hopes and joys. Amen.

SUNDAY.

A SACRED PLACE AND A SACRED DAY.

"Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy."—Ex. 20:8-11.

Somebody asks: "Is it wrong to do this, or to do that, on the Sabbath day?" But this problem of the proper observance of the Sabbath cannot be settled by answering such questions. The problem of observing a holy day is bound up with the larger problem of preserving religion and religious influences among us.

Religion demands two things: a sacred place and a sacred day. And both of them deserve to have special safeguards thrown around them. Many people are ready to raise the cry of "blue laws," whenever the subject of Sunday legislation is raised. But what we need to fear in this country more than blue laws are "red laws." They are the kind we will have if the safeguards that have guaranteed the fundamentals of our Christian civilization are ever torn down.

Prayer.—O Thou who dost not demand perfection before we can serve Thee, accept the gifts we bring on Thy holy day, small and meager though they may be. We would give Thee the best we have, the whole-hearted service that counts not the hours lost that have been given to Thee. In adoration, we kneel to pray. Amen.

Kiddies' Korner

MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT, Editor.

My dear Kiddies:

Again it is my good fortune to "sub" for your editor; but as the weather is very hot and I have many other duties, I will only write a short letter. Perhaps you will be interested to know that we have another addition to our dog family—a tiny bird pup named Ezekiel. Rusty is still sitting on top of the world, so she has only the utmost scorn for him. He has lots of grit, however, and will even fight his own battles. Dynamite is quite civil and has a much sweeter disposition than Rusty.

With all good wishes that you may have a happy summer, I am, sincerely,

MRS. T. A. MOFFITT.

Dear Editor:

I enjoyed reading Louise Mitchell's letter. Since I wrote my last letter to you I have had a fine trip to Washington, D. C. My father and I went on a pleasure trip. We visited lots of Government buildings, Washington Monument, the Mint, Capitol building, Pan American buildinig, Lincoln Memorial and also went out to Mt. Vernon, which is a beautiful place. Saturday we went to Keith's Theatre to a fine show. We had guides to take us over these buildings and explain them to us. We went to the White House and went through a portion of it. Mr. and Mrs. Coolidge had gone down the Potomac on the Mayflower. Sunday we went to church that Mr. Coolidge attended. Sunday afternoon we went out to the National Zoo Park. I enjoyed my trip fine for Washington is a beautiful city. I wish every little child could have a nice trip to Washington as I did. I am expecting to go to Georgia to visit my grandparents July 1st. I always enjoy going to grandfather's house and staying. I stayed most all of the summer there last summer.

With love,

KATHREN WHITAKER.

Franklinton, N. C.

KROM A "KIDDIE."

My dear Editor:

I have decided to write you a letter for the "Kiddies' Korner." I am eleven years old and I finished grammar school this year and will go to high school next term. I go to the Main Street Christian Sunday School, Durham, N. C. Two weeks ago our Sunday School had a memory contest on "Lessons in Stewardship." There were ten lessons, each lesson having from two to ten Bible verses and references. The contest was opened to all girls and boys. Five took part in it—four girls, of which I was one, and a boy—and there were five judges. A prize was to be given for the best memory work and expression used. My! my! how the juniors studied for one week. Finally the Sunday arrived. We had the contest before we went to classes. When we went back into the auditorium we were very anxious to know who had won. Our superintendent announced that the judges had decided the prize should be awarded to little Miss Esther Cole. I was so surprised I did not know what to say. I had not only tried for the prize, but for the help it was to me. When I opened the box I found it contained the New Testament and the Psalms.

We take THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and I read it every week. I am especially fond of the "Kiddies' Korner." I would like to hear from some of the Kiddies, so I will put my address at the end of my letter.

One of your Kiddies,

WHAT IT MEANS TO BE A CHRISTIAN.

Up in Northern Ohio, in our "Young People's Week" at Defiance College, more than sixty young people of the Central Christian Convention, representing eight Conferences, have been listening every day in connection with their regular program for the week to lectures by Rev. Eugene H. Rainey, of Franklin, Ohio, on the general theme, "What it Means to Be a Christian." Mr. Rainey knows young people well. He knows how to give them truths which they need in a way which is challenging. As I have been listening to these inspiring talks in our Bible hour at Defiance, I have been very happy to think that our young people at Elon College this summer are to have the same privilege. I believe that the young people of both groups will go home from these hours not only understanding better "What it Means to Be a Christian," but also more eager to find the Jesus way of living for themselves. Mr. Rainey is an Elon graduate, and also a Yale man. He has held pastorates in both North and South. He has seen youth in the army, and in social work in a great city. All of this experience has given him a wealth of knowledge which he is passing on in a fine way to Christian Church young folk. These lectures alone would be worth any young person's coming to Elon Chautauqua.

It also seems very appropriate that, in addition to these lectures, which will be given throughout one week of the Chautauqua, that Mr. Rainey is giving in the second week a practical course in Christian Endeavor methods. Serving in a C. E. Society is one of the best ways we know of strengthening the Christian life. Mr. Rainey proposes to make this a real "laboratory" course, in which Christian Endeavor work will not only be talked about, but actually done. The class will be, for the time being, a C. E. Society, and through assignments and class session work carry on types of work which this great organization seeks to do. One should be able to go home from this course thrilled with the possibilities of Christian Endeavor, and qualified to form a group, organize and carry on the activities of such a society.

Are you a young person in the Southern Convention? Are you eager to know more about what it means to be a Christian? Are you longing for a Christian Endeavor Society in your Church? Do you want the best vacation you ever had while you are learning these and many other things? If you really do, you'll make every effort to be at Elon College from July 27th to August 7th. LUCY M. ELDREDGE.

IV. The Atonement for Sin, or Plan of Salvation.

16. Do we fully understand how this can be?

No; this thing, and many others in the Bible, are beyond our understanding and past finding out.

17. Ought we to believe what we cannot understand?

Yes, if God tells us it is so, we ought to take Him at His word.

18. Why?

Because it is impossible for Him to lie; and His word is truth.

V. The World to Come.

1. What will be the condition of good men, after the death of the body?

They will be with our Lord Jesus Christ in Paradise, and will be happy in the presence of God and the holy angels.

2. Will their joy be very great?

Yes; no tongue can tell the extent of their happiness; and they shall have everlasting joy.

3. Is any man so good as to be worthy of this exceeding great reward?

No; the best men often come short of the glory of God.

4. Why, then, will God give us so much when we have done so little?

Because we believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, who has freely given Himself to take away our sins, that we, through Him, might have eternal life.

5. Why are we saved?

We are saved for Christ's sake, because we love Him and try to serve Him.

6. Will our bodies be raised from the dead?

Yes; as Christ rose, we shall rise also.

7. Will our heavenly bodies be such as these we now have?

We canno tell what we shall be; but when Christ shall appear we shall be like Him.

8. When shall our bodies rise?

On the day of judgment.

9. When will that be?

At the end of the world.

10. Who will be our Judge?

Our Lord Jesus Christ.

11. In what manner will He come to judge the world?

He shall come in clouds, with power and great glory, and ten thousand of His saints, and all the holy angels shall come with Him.

12. What shall then be done?

The archangel shall sound his trump; the graves shall be opened; the sea shall give up its dead; and all men shall come forth to be rewarded according to the deeds done in the body.

13. What shall be done with evil men?

They shall be turned into hell, where their worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched; where the smoke of their tormend shall ascend up forever and ever; nor shall they ever be delivered from the horrors of the second death.

14. What will be done with the righteous?

They shall enter forever into the joy of their Lord. They shall sit down with Abranam, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of God; they shall never more feel pain or grief, for the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them and lead them unto fountains of living waters, and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes.

RICHARDS.

Mrs. Sarah J. Richards, wife of A. B. Richards, one of the largest fruit growers of Frederick County, and mother of Boyd R. Richards, representative in the House of Delegates for Frederick County and Winchester, died shortly after the noon hour July 2, 1925, at her home on the Cedar Creek grade, three miles southwest of Winchester. Her death was due to heart trouble and complications.

Mrs. Richards was 70 years of age, and her entire long life had been spent in this county. She was formerly Miss Sarah Josephine Henestoffle, daughter of Rufus and Solma Henestoffle, of this county. She was married to Mr. Richards 54 years ago. She found time to rear a large family of ten children, and she gave her personal attention to all of the many duties of the farmer's wife of large affairs. In the midst of her home duties, Mrs. Richards cultivated and practiced those ideals and virtues which are the mainstay of the well-ordered home and fireside. She was a woman of the highest character and the most generous impulses and practices.

Her home has been the scene of many delightful occasion in the social world of the county; she dispensed an open, but well-bred hospitality, and the latchstring was almost literally on the outside of the door. Her beneficence to the poor, the afflicted and the unfortunate were boundless, but unostentatious, and leaves behind her only memories of a well-spent life in which charity for all and malice towards none was her guiding principle.

Mrs. Richards always took an active part in Church work. She was one of the charter members of the First Christian Church of this city, and she was faithful in attendance upon all its ordinances and services. In this sphere alone she will be much missed.

Mrs. Richards leaves her husband, A. B. Richards, and these children: L. A. Richards, Washington, D. C.; Harry Austin Richards, at home; Boyd R. Richards, Alva C. Richards, Nelson F. Richards, and Roy W. Richards, all of this city; Mrs. Claude V. Turner, Bartow, Fla.; Mrs. Charles Cooper, of the county; Mrs. Walters, wife of Rev. Wm. T. Walters, Richmond, Va., and Mrs. Ralph G. Pollard, of the county.

The funeral services were conducted by her pastor, the Rev. J. F. Morgan, at the home Saturday, July 4, 1925, at 3 o'clock, and the body was laid to rest in Mt. Hebron Cemetery. The six sons of Mrs. Richards acted as pallbearers at the funeral services, and Mrs. Asa Orndoff, a relative of the family, sang tenderly, "God, Be with You Till We Meet Again" at the house, and "Safe in the Arms of Jesus" at the grave.

The First American Saints.—

The recent act of Pope Pius XI in beatifying eight French missionaries to the Indians of North America will make those eight the first American saints. All of them were martyrs in their work among the Indians. Three of them—Father Isaac Jogues, Brother Rene Goupil, and the boy John De la Lande—fell in 1646 in the Mohawk Valley, New York State. The other five were victims of the apostate Hurons or of the enemies of the Hurons. There were Charles Garnier, Noel Chabanel, Anthony Daniel, Father Brebeuf, and Father Lalamant. These eight who have been beatified will probably be canonized at a future date. The only American upon whom sainthood has been conferred is Rose of Lima, a Peruvian woman who died in 1617 and was beatified by Clement X in 1660 and whose canonization followed four years later. Many pilgrims, conservative estimates say at least a million and a quarter—are expected to visit Rome during this holy year. Of this number, more than one hundred and fifty thousand will be Americans.

Another Coal Strike Probable.—

At a meeting of the anthracite coal miners, held at Scranton, Pa., on July 9th, an increase of wages and a number of other demands for changes in working conditions were demanded. These demands will be presented to the operators by International President John L. Lewis, International Vice-President Philip Murray, and International Secretary and Treasurer Thomas Kennedy. In all probability the operators will refuse the demands of the workers, and in that case a nation-wide strike will be called upon the expiration of the 1923 contract on August 31st. Some of the demands of the workers are a flat 10 per cent increase in wages for tonnage men, payment by the long ton of 2,240 pounds instead of by the miners' ton of 3,136 pounds, a five-day week, a raise of $1.00 per day for day men, and some more technical demands. The strike would, of course, result in a shortage of coal, and Washington is, therefore, looking on, ready to intervene to protect the interest of the public, which in such cases is invariably the sufferer. A probable rise in coal prices brings added interest to the fact that 70 per cent of the coal output of the United States is controlled by eight concerns, either now or until recently connected with railroads. The remaining 30 per cent is produced by more than one hundred lesser companies. Competition is urged as the only practical safeguard against high prices, and information regarding prices, production, and costs is needed in order to bring about equitable treatment for the public, and a United States commission for that purpose is being widely suggested.

Against Week-Day Schools of Religion.—

A very important move against week-day schools of religion has been made by the Freethinkers' Society of New York. In a suit brought by Lawrence B. Stein, a member of the society, Justice Albert H. F. Seeger, of the State Supreme Court, holds that the taking of time from regular school hours for religious instruction is unlawful, and he issued a permanent injunction against the Mt. Vernon school board to prevent their further permitting parents to withdraw their children from the schools for forty-five minutes a week for religious instruction. This ruling of Justice Seeger is at variance with the ruling of the New York Board of Education and with the boards of education of a large number of the States, and of one thousand cities in the United States. Dr. W. A. Squires contends that to give time from the regular school hours for religious instruction does not controvert the established principle of division of Church and State, and also does the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of the Dregon public school law. This decision declares that the religious training of the child is the privilege and the high duty of the parents. Both this great principle and the principle of separateness of Church and State must be maintained. The hitch in the Mt. Vernon case seems to have been that public school buildings were used.

This practice might become dangerous. At any rate, the decision of Justice Seeger is calculated to give trouble and deserves our careful consideration. We should determine the rightness of our attitude on this important matter, and then contend for our rights. It is a certainty that if the coming generation is to be a safe generation to which to trust the future, it must have moral and religious training some how, some time, some where, and we must provide for it.

British Justice and Hijackers.—

On June 19th Harry Sowash and Owen Baker learned that they chose the wrong side of the border on which to hijack a launch load of liquor and to commit murder. On that date they were sentenced in the Victoria Assize Court of British Columbia to hang for the murder of William G. Gillis and his seventeen-year-old son. The Gillises were rum running from British Columbia to the Washington coast, and their launch, "Beryl G.," was hijacked by Baker and Sowash. The hijacking affair occurred one evening last September, and as soon as the drifting launch was discovered, Paul Stromkins was arrested. Stromkins confessed complicity in the bad business and turned State's evidence. No charges were pressed against him. Three other men were implicated by Stromkins—Baker, Sowash, and one Charles Morris, all of Seattle, Wash. Morris fought extradition, and so far has not been returned to the British courts. Baker was taken in New York last February, and Sowash in New Orleans in March, and both declined to fight extradition. They were returned, and in one week, ending June 19th, they were tried and sentenced to hang, while American attorneys looked on. Many lawyers have expressed a doubt as to whether they would have been dealt with so severely in this country, in view of the attendant circumstances. The swiftness and sureness of British justice is one of the very potent causes of the low crime rate in British dominions. We might do well to adopt it, and allow some of our legal technicalities to go into the discard just as some of the British courts have done. It was urged that the murderers could not be convicted because of the absence of the bodies of the murdered, but the courts ruled that the evidence of Stromkins was sufficient, and proceeded with their work of justice.

The Santa Barbara Earthquake.—

The Santa Barbara earthquake is unique in a long list of similar catastrophes, in that the list of dead number so few. The destruction of property was enormous. Some estimates place it at thirty million dollars. The earthquake shock was confined to a small area of about one mile square. A town three miles away was surprised to learn of the calamity which had visited the neighboring city. Santa Barbara, however, escaped the raging and all but uncontrollable fires which attended the San Francisco earthquake in 1906. Out of the ruins, the people of Santa Barbara will begin the erection of buildings not so easily destroyed by quakes. It has been discovered in Santa Barbara, San Francisco, and Tokyo that the modernly constructed buildings with steel reenforcements are not destroyed by quakes. The Santa Barbara shocks on June 29th and 30th occurred during the early morning hours, and in the business portion of the city, where the direst destruction was wrought, few people were present. The city felt numerous tremors in the following days, but practically the whole of the damage was done on the first two days.

An interesting international result of the earthquake was that of practically destroying the very carefully planned humiliation meetings throughout Japan. These meetings were to have been held on the anniversary of the effectiveness of the Japanese exclusion law. The news of the Santa Barbara disaster brought to the Japanese mind the disaster in that country, and the immediate response of America. On account of that fact, some of the humiliation meetings were called off, and others were comparative failures. Wherever a nation acts in the spirit of Christ toward another nation, be it Christian or non-Christian, the Golden Rule invariably works. "One touch of nature makes the whole world kin." Similar suffering in the two lands prevented the stirring up of much undesirable ill feeling between the United States and Japan.

NOTES-PERSONALS

"Every increase in material prosperity increases moral and spiritual obligations."

Dr. W. H. Denison, who will teach "Stewardship" at Elon Chautauqua, gives an important notice in this issue.

Rev. W. C. Wicker, D. D., of Elon College, has spent two weeks recently studying at Union Theological Seminary in New York.

Prof. W. P. Lawrence, of Elon College, has just returned from the Craigville, Mass., summer Conference, at which he gave a course of lectures.

Rev. A. W. Andes, secretary, has prepared and sent out a very inviting program of the seventy-seventh session of the Virginia Valley Central Conference, which is to meet with Bethlehem Church August 12th to 14, 1925.

The women and young people in their societies, aided by special efforts and offerings from Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies, are making heroic endeavor to secure funds for the Rocky Ford Church and Sunday School.

Rev. Roy C. Helfenstein, D. D., delivered an address, "The Individual's Part in the Year's Program," at the University of Delaware July 15th, on the occasion of "Parent-Teacher Day" with the summer school students attending the university.

Rev. P. T. Klapp, who has not had a regular charge the past year, should be pressed into service. No doubt, if you extend him a call he will be willing to take some work for another year. He has been preaching over fifty years, and is as live as he ever was. Give him a call.

Rev. J. L. Foster is open for engagements to assist pastors in evangelistic services after August 1st, and is also ready to consider a pastorate for another year, with the exception of one Sunday in the month, for which he has work already. He may be addressed at Elon College, N. C.

From the elaborate program of the International Christian Endeavor Convention in session at Portland, Oregon, July 4th to 10th, it is noted that our Dr. A. B. Kendall, Springfield, Ohio, was on for an address, which it is presumed he delivered, on July 8th, "Service for Unordained Workers."

The following is gratefully acknowledged: "Mr. and Mrs. David Palmer Barrett announce the marriage of their daughter, Margaret Alice, to Mr. Paul Dalton Rudd on Tuesday, June 30, 1925, Ponce, Porto Rico." Both Miss Alice and Paul Dalton are Elon College graduates of 1924. They are now attending summer school at the University of North Carolina. They have our best wishes and congratulations.

The Eastern N. C. S. S. & C. E. Convention at Oak Level last week was largely attended and greatly enjoyed. The president, Bro. C. H. Stephenson, as usual, delivered a great address on the opening day and set a high standard of excellence for all the speakers that followed him on the program. The convention requested Miss Pattie Coghill to report the session to THE SUN, and that may be expected in next issue.

Dr. Kendall's trip to Portland, Oregon, to attend the great Christian Endeavor Convention yields rich results to SUN readers in his strikingly descriptive and amazingly interesting article presented elsewhere this week. He will tell of the convention, much to the delight of all Endeavorers, in a second article to appear soon.

Our friend, Prof. W. H. Albright, of Liberty, N. C., sends the announcement that the second annual reunion of the Albright family will be held Tuesday, July 28th, at Mt. Hermon Church, Alamance County, N. C. Lieutenant-Governor J. Elmer Long and Dr. W. T. Whitsett are to deliver addresses. The Albrights have played an important part in the history of Alamance County and of the State.

Mrs. W. T. Walters, Richmond, Va., has written a missionary drama entitled, "Lord, Is it I?" This drama is acted by three characters, and no elaborate scenery or change of costume are necessary. It is neatly printed and bound and makes an attractive brochure of eight pages, besides the cover. The price is 25 cents per copy, and may be ordered directly of Mrs. Walters, 3206 Grove Avenue, Richmond, Va. We commend the drama to missionary societies desiring to put on a brief and simple missionary program.

Rev. H. W. Elder, the "Church builder" of our Christian ministers, writes, under date of July 13th: "We are expecting to finish our Church this week, except the painting. We want to have our opening service on the second Sunday in August. It has been the greatest strain of my life, but the Lord and the people have been good to us, and I think we will be able to pay all bills." This refers to the handsome and adequate brick building Bro. Elder and his people have erected in his home town, Richland, Ga.

The Oak Level Church, which was gracious host to the Eastern North Carolina Convention last week, had been enlarged and beautified for the occasion. The people of this good congregation and community certainly showed their appreciation of the occasion by doing everything within their reach to make the occasion memorable and agreeable to all delegates and visitors. Oak Level now has an ample and attractive house of worship and seems to be making most commendable progress spiritually as well as materially.

It is to be desired that very many SUN readers will read carefully what Dr. Lynch has to say in his timely article in this issue, "Hymns for Children." Dr. Lynch teaches that the child will grow to the hymn if you teach the child the right sort of hymn to grow to, and that the "forty or fifty great hymns of the Church" are worth growing up to. And Dr. Lynch "would never quite see why we should have music for children more than children's sunsets or mountains or oceans." Well, now here is something to think about in these "piping times of peace."

As the Mission Secretary's report on Men and millions for June, printed in this issue, shows, there are many yet who are making real sacrifices to meet their obligation and pay their pledges to this most worthy cause. The ones who pay to Men and Millions pay to every interest and enterprise of their Church and help these enterprises in this their time of greatest need. It is difficult to understand how any one who is loyal to and loves the Christian Church and its work can fail to pay the Men and Millions' pledge, save, as one has said, "When there is absolutely nothing with which to pay."

The wet press takes a curious view of the situation. It points to these incidents and says, in effect: "Don't you see you can't enforce prohibition?" We say that view is "curious." We could use a stronger word, but we will content ourselves with pointing out the lame logic of these thirsty —not blood-thirsty—editors. Casting the net and pulling in more than a hundred law-breakers, trying them and sending the guilty to prison looks to us very much like successful enforcement. The law can be enforced, is being enforced. The matter is going along satisfactorily. No, Remus is not stronger than the United States.

AT THE CHURCHES.

Just a few lines to SUN readers to let you know something of my work. I am serving three rural Churches this year, namely: Berea (Alamance), Pleasant Hill (Alamance), and Monticello. There is one outstanding feature about each of these Churches which I wish to mention.

Pleasant Hill seems to be progressing in many ways, especially in the Sunday School. There are nearly two hundred members enrolled. We have an average attendance of about 160. It may be of worthy note to other Sunday Schools when I inform you that the heads of the families attend Sunday School, bringing their children with them. This gives splendid material with which to work, and they are really doing things. This year, two Sunday School rooms have been added to the Church. This gives us a plant of four Sunday School rooms and the main auditorium. The annexation of these rooms makes it possible to accommodate a much larger audience. It has also awakened a new interest throughout the entire community. Our plans and work for the remainder of the year is mostly evangelistic. We are hoping to have a great meeting the first Sunday in September.

The work at Berea seems to be moving along better than I have known it for a long time, as I was pastor of it several years ago. The interest in the Sunday School is very encouraging. We have a membership of about 160, with an attendance of about 120. This school has grown to the above size in a Church where there are no Sunday School rooms. We meet with six or seven classes in the auditorium, some classes having as high as fifty members. It has been a great handicap in the efficiency of this Sunday School, but I am very thankful that the good people of this community have caught the vision of their need and are working with as great enthusiasm to better conditions as I ever saw. At present, we are building Sunday School rooms so as to divide the Sunday School into the children's and adult departments. For the children, Sunday School rooms are being built in the basement, giving each class a separate room. The accordion doors are used so as to throw all of them together when the main auditorium is used. This will give the advantage of having the entire program of the children's Sunday School in this part of the building. The basement is now dug and ready for the contractors. We hope to be able to occupy these before long. We invite all those who are handicapped for Sunday School room to come and see how room may be secured at a small expense.

The third and last one is Monticello. Here we have a really interesting Sunday School and Church. The people are very congenial and pleasant to work with. The Sunday School is not so large in numbers, but very enthusiastic. The outstanding feature in the training of this Church is the wide-awake Christian Endeavor Society which has a membership of seventy. They meet every Sunday night and have their regular social gatherings monthly. It is my privilige to be with them once each month, at their Sunday night meetings. I have never attended services of this nature where there is more enthusiasm than at this Church.

In each of these Churches there is a young man at the head of the Sunday School who is full of energy and has the support of his officers. The Christian Endeavor at Monticello is headed by young ladies. It seems that these officers have the sympathy and support of each member. This, in part, accounts for the splendid results.

May God's blessings rest upon each of these Churches, and especially upon its young people.

JOSEPH E. MCCAULEY, Pastor.

For further information address Miss Pattie Coghill, Secretary, Elon College, N. C.

WHAT IS A CHRISTIAN COLLEGE?

1. It is not a donation by Christian people, with Christian motives, although that is very important.

2. It is not an institution where all the members of the faculty are professing Christians, although that is important.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

CHOOSING A COLLEGE AND DESTINY.

One may think it a light matter to decide on what college one will attend. Parents may deem it a question which they may easily delegate to their sons and daughters. Yet, when the matter is considered, it seems singular that so weighty a matter should be left to such slight consideration or hasty conclusion. It is doubtful if the destiny of the son or daughter is so closely linked with any single act of life as that of choosing the college in which character is really molded, and, as a rule, destiny is fixed. One attends college, as a rule, during that period of life in which plans and purposes for the remainder of life are either initiated or completely fixed and fashioned. In the light of such a weighty fact, nothing should require deeper concern and anxiety than that of the college to be chosen.

On this account, men and women of consecration, wisdom and Christian faith have striven through sacrifice and great tribulation to build colleges and dedicate them to the high ideals which they themselves desired to see wrought out in the lives of succeeding generations.

Elon College is not the outcome of the council, but of many; it is not the creation of one mind, but of a multitude of minds, bringing their maturest judgment and most consecrated wisdom together, that unitedly an institution might be established to work out in the world ideals and practices of a most Christian and godly type. In brief, the college was born out of the mind of the Church and has been preserved and brought to its present position through the sacrifices and devotions of the Church. As such, it is seeking to create, to shape, to fashion in the world a type of manhood and womanhood dedicated to Christian service, free with a liberty found in the teaching and character of Jesus Christ.

Unless Elon College is Christian in character, it fails of its high destiny, for to this end was it born, and for this purpose is it maintained. It holds up this high ideal as that toward which it strives, and in this striving declares to the world its superlative mission among men and women—the creation in the world of Christian character.

The very plan of the buildings indicates the character of the institution. Standing adjacent to, and connected with, the building dedicated to science is the best-equipped building of its kind on any college campus in our country, namely: a building dedicated solely to the purpose of religion and religious training. By this act, the college declares to all the world that it desires all the light that science can give, and all the truth that scientific investigation can reveal; but it wishes this light and this truth inseparably connected with and dominated by that religious truth which finds its highest culmination in the character of Him who said: "I am the light of the world"; "I am the way, the truth and the light."

The college has a great library, equipped with best books on literature, the arts and the sciences, so that students may have full and free range for literary pursuits and investigations in the field of ancient, as well as modern, learning of the highest type.

Yet, as a counterpart of this magnificent building, and attached to it by a convenient passageway, is a stately building of worshipful and reverential type, whose very equipment and furnishings invite to reverence, to thanksgiving and to prayer, whose great pipe organ peals out, on occasion, the most melodious thought of modern and ancient times in music, and whose pulpit, on each Sabbath Day, holds up and proclaims to the world that gospel which redeems mankind and reveals to the world the one whose life is the center of all literature, all wisdom, and all knowledge that is worth while in any and in every library in all the world.

Uniting these four buildings, and at the center of the quadrangle, stands the imposing administrative building in which the week-day business of the institution is carried on, and where the offices of administration and some recitations are maintained. Christian men and women who are as active in the religious and devotional services on the Sabbath as they are in the administrative and academic life of the week occupy these administrative offices. A great plan and a great plant have been wrought out, not only from the mind, but from the heart, of a people who believe in the all-sufficiency of Jesus Christ, not only as the world's only Saviour, but as mankind's greatest Teacher and supreme Leader in all the worthwhile activities of life.

If one does not patronize Elon College it certainly cannot be attributed to the fact that the college is not offering, in ideas and ideals, the highest and the holiest that a great Church and a consecrated people have been able thus far to give. Godly men and women are dedicating their lives to the making of this college, and they are backed and sustained by the daily prayers and devotions of a zealous Christian constituency. The destiny of boys and girls, men and women is fixed very often, and almost solely, by the college they attend. Parents cannot, with impunity, afford to risk the destiny of their offspring to any other college than the best in ideals and in practices—those ideals and those practices which go to make up Christian character.

Again, let it be said that human destiny is wrapped up with the decision that sends the boy or the girl to a certain college. On this account, the very best for making Christian character, Christian career and Christian destiny should be chosen. If that is done by SUN readers, Elon will be filled this fall to its capacity with those who will have the best opportunity possible of shaping their destiny in a most wholesome and helpful environment and under the capable leadership of Christian men and women.

WHAT IS A CHRISTIAN COLLEGE?

It is not a school maintained by a Church, though there would be no Christian colleges but for the fostering care and loyal support of the Christian denominations.

It is not a school wherein professing Christians teach, though no college can be Christian without Christian teachers.

It is not a school wherein courses in the Bible and religious education are offered, though it is difficult to imagine a Christian college in which these subjects are not taught.

What, then, is a Christian college?

It is a college that achieves Christian character in the personalities it molds. "By their fruits ye shall know them," declared the world's greatest Genius in correctly valuing men and institutions. The fact that a college is maintained by a denomination, that its professors are professing Christians, that courses in Bible and religious education are offered will avail naught in entitling an institution to claim for itself the name Christian, unless it produces, out of its students, men and women of Christian character. That is the real test.

We are proud of Elon's fine buildings. We are proud of her scholarly professors. We are proud of her Mooney Christian Education Building, the first of its kind in the world, wherein uplifting courses in Bible and religious education are offered. But we are proudest of her achievement in the character of her alumni. They have, in surprisingly large number, entered the callings that have as their aim and purpose, not financial reward, but service to fellowman. The ministry, the teaching profession, home-making, community service—these are the professions to which Elon graduates have instinctively given their lives. And those of them who have become business leaders, lawyers, doctors, and engineers have exhibited in their lifework the same fine motives which underlie the professions and callings already mentioned. Eternity alone can correctly evaluate the good work of Elon College.

Her motto, "Christian Character, First and Always at Elon," is indicative of her spirit and explanation of her achievement. Our college is not perfect. Yearly she grows more into the ideal likeness of the true Christian college. But she does earnestly endeavor to honestly represent her Master in her life and spirit and to bring up her students in accordance with the aims of Christian character. She does more than aim to do this. She does it—as thirty-five years have proven beyond the shadow of a doubt.

What, then, we inquire again, is a Christian college?

Elon is. Her fruits prove her to be.

TAKING A LONG VIEW.

The greatest railway in the world is admittedly the Pennsylvania System. It is great because it takes a long view of things. Its employees love it, because many years ago it provided retiring pensions for them. They often speak of it as "our company." The "Pennsy," as they affectionately refer to it, does not fear strikes.

It has planted forests along its right of way to supply the cross-ties necessary to keep it in good state of repair. It takes forty years to grow a cross-tie. Each year trees are cut for the required number of ties, and each year the proper number of new trees is set out. This railroad takes the long view. It has succeeded, and, what is more, has deserved its success.

But the Church of Christ has even more right, not to say need, to take the long view than any corporation. The Church lives, and moves, and thinks in terms of eternity. This world is but the vestibule of its activities. Yet how few Churches take the long view, even of the opportunities they have in this vestibule of their privilege!

The Church that takes the long view will be particularly solicitous to train its young people to be leaders in the next generation. It will send them to our colleges, where they will breathe the atmosphere of the Christian Church. I write at the seat of one of these colleges—Elon. We all know that this college incarnates in itself the spirit and ideals of the Christian Church, and the same is true of our other college at Wadley, Ala.—Bethlehem College.

Yet President Harper tells me that, so far as his records show, not one minister in ten evinces any concern to send the young people of his Church to Elon. Even when written to and asked to send names, they do not respond. They are glad when the college secures their young people, but they do not take the initiative to send them to the college. Is it too much to say that our ministers are short-sighted? It would seem so.

But this editorial is written to spur to immediate action in securing attendance on our two summer schools—the one at Elon, July 27th to August 7th, and the one at Bethlehem, August 10th to 16th. Churches that take the long view will see that their ministers attend the one or the other of these summer schools. And ministers with long vision will see to it that representatives from all departments of their Church work attend. These summer schools will turn lethargy to life, apathy to enthusiasm, and bring a new day to any Church that supports them. Write Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, Elon College, N. C., for details.

Why not take the long view, brethren and beloved? Quit your microscope, and try the telescope a little while. You will be surprised to find how much there is in the world which short-sightedness obscures. The long view—that is it! That is what we need.

HYMNS FOR CHILDREN.

I was much interested in a paragraph in the June number of Record of Christian Work on the best hymns for children. It seems that an English journal offered a prize for the best selection of ten hymns for children with reasons for including in the selection each hymn chosen. The response was very general, and, although any one of us would probably change the list in one way or another, it is on the whole admirable. So far as I am concerned, I would want to include in any list for children the following hymns: "Gallilee, Sweet Gallilee"; "O Jesus, Thou Art Standing Outside the Fast-Closed Door"; "The Church's One Foundation"; "The Shadows of the Evening Hour"; "Jerusalem, the Golden, with Milk and Honey Blest"; and "America the Beautiful." So far as the list which follows is concerned, I question whether the hymn, "There is a Green Hill Far Away, Without the City Walls," is not too theological for children, and yet, as the author intimates, it does relate the episode in the life of Christ which every child should know. Another objection to the list might be made on the ground that none of the ten hymns chosen deal with the dedication of life to the service of the world. They are, almost without exception, concerned with personal salvation. They are evangelistic rather than social. I have no objection to the child learning all the evangelistic hymns he can remember. Indeed, I sometimes think we are neglecting this side of religion and in our devotion to the service of man forgetting our mystical relation to God. Yet I think the child should learn at least one such hymn as Washington Gladden's "O Master, Let Me Walk Thee, in lowly paths of service free." "We are but little children weak," may be said to cover this, but it falls far short of Gladden's hymn in scope and beauty.

Here are the hymns which were awarded the prize, with the reasons following:

(1) "All Things Bright and Beautiful." (C. F. Alexander.)
(2) "O Little Town of Bethlehem." (Phillips Brooks.)
(3) "I Think when I read." (Jemima Luke.)
(4) "There is a Green Hill." (C. F. Alexander.)
(5) "Looking Upward Every Day." (M. Butler.)
(6) "Fight the Good Fight." (J. S. B. Monsell.)
(7) "We are but Little Children Weak." (C. F. Alexander.)
(8) "Now the Day is Over." (S. Baring-Gould.)
(9) "When He Cometh." (W. O. Cushing.)
(10) "Gentle Jesus, Meek and Mild." (C. Wesley.)

I have tried, in making my list, to cover as much ground in subject and occasion as the limits allow. As an expression of the praise of God as Creator, I include "All Things Bright and Beautiful."

Though, as a Christmas hymn it is not easy to supersede "Once in Royal David's City," yet, in view of its length and eminently ungrateful tune, I should substitute "O Little Town of Bethlehem."

Among hymns dealing with the life of Christ, "I Think When I Read," and "There is a Green Hill," must surely appear in the briefest anthology.

For a fresh and admirable summary of a child's Christian aspirations, I suggest "Looking Upward Every Day," which, except for the awkward "eye-rhyme" in the fourth verse, seems to me one of the happiest of children's hymns.

The fact that "Man is a soger and life is a faught" is the theme of many first-rate hymns, difficult to select from; of these I include "Fight the Good Fight."

"We are but Little Children Weak," as an expression of service for Christ, is most suitable to children of average age.

"Now the Day is Over" seems easily the best of evening hymns.

Of hymns of the heavenly home, "When He Cometh," though simple in imagery and expression, makes a strong appeal to children.

For the last place, I suggest Wesley's "Gentle Jesus, Meek and Mild." No child has outgrown this hymn. How can he, when it echoes Christ's own words, "Except ye become as little children?"

I have something of the feeling about hymns for children that I have about children's Bibles, children's books and children's music. I should not say that children should not be given a few books expressly written for them, or that they should never read any Bible stories told in simple language, or play any simple music written especially for them; but I think we are greatly overdoing this whole business. It was only the other day that I happened to pick up a volume which had a wide reading thirty years ago, namely: a collection of ten or twelve chapters by different authors on "Books that have helped me." The writers, beginning with Edward Everett Hale, were all very eminent and successful men. In practically every instance, the only books these men had, as children, were the great classics of literature. If one turns to any list of autobiographies on his shelf, he will find the same thing true—Chalmers, Livingstone, Clodd, Newman, Mrs. Ward, Robert Collyer, Carnegie, Sir Henry Jones, Timothy Dwight, Lyman Abbott—I am simply running my eyes along the shelf; he will invariably find that these men grew up on the great books. They knew nothing of children's books. There were none. The result was, they learned to love the great books, getting out of them what they could. And it is remarkable how much they got out of them. I think that we are making a great mistake today in not putting these great books before our boys and girls even in very early ages. I should give a boy "Ivanhoe" about as soon as he asked for something to read. The same thing is true of the Bible. I should give him the King James version and let him get out of it what he can. Personally, I think he would get a lot more out of it than he would from Prof. Van Loon's jazzed edition. My impression is that the boy brought up on Van Loon's edition will never get much further.

I feel the same way about music. There is a feeling abroad that children should be started on pieces especially written for them, and some would even have them begin on rag-time and jazz which appeals only to childlike understanding. Very few real lovers of music ever began that way. They began on Mendelssohn, Schubert and Beethoven, and got what they could out of it. As the years went on, they got more and more out of it, but their taste for it was formed in childhood. I could never quite see why we should have music for children more than children's sunsets or mountains or oceans.

Is not the same thing true to some degree about hymns for children? It is good to teach the children some hymns, like those in the list above, which deal especially with the experiences of childhood, but of more importance still is it to teach them the forty or fifty great hymns of the Church. And this brings me to remark what an enriching experience it would be for all of life if each one of us carried, singing in his heart, the great hymns of the faith. I dread to think how impoverished my own life would seem without the hymns I learned as a boy. I wonder that we do not pay more attention to teaching the great hymns to the children during the Sunday School hour. Instead of choosing any hymns that come to hand, why not begin with "Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God Almighty," and sing that until we know it by heart, and then go on week by week until we had learned them all. Not only would it be a priceless individual heritage, but it would greatly improve the singing in the Church. Several Churches have had large children's choruses who have sat in the front of the Churches simply to add their sweet, fresh voices to the hymns. In these cases they have rehearsed the hymns for the Sunday services with some leader. It is a great experience for both the little singers and the Church, as I happen to know.—Frederick Lynch, in Christian Work.

He has a very poor conception of manhood who would abolish law in order that he might act as a free man. Whatever the skeptic may say against Christianity and against the universe being ruled by the law of God, he must admit that he himself is under the dominion of law equally as rigid and stern as any to which he objects. Everything is governed by law; every system of all the systems of the universe; every realm and kingdom of nature; every system of the human body; and we might come down to the fact that every atom is working under the control of recognized law, and that Providence, through law, is guiding the world in its progress and is thus attaining unto the great end of things, which is to render honor and glory to God and happiness to men.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Church colleges do for their constituencies what military and naval academies do for the States of the Union. It is difficult to appraise what either does in a specific way; but the general effect is manifest to all observers. The comparison of Church colleges with military schools is not meant to put them in the same class, except in what they do; the class of work is different. One is Christian, the other is civic. Both are military, for Christianity is a warfare on evil, as the State fights its enemy. Paul says, "Fight the good fight of faith," and "I have fought a good fight" (1 Tim. 6:12 & 2 Tim. 4:7). If Church colleges were what they should be, and were supported and patronized as they should be, they would make the military schools unnecessary. But as long as military schools impress students with military ideas and obligations, and Church colleges make no distinct Christian impression, war will continue.

"What Elon College contributes to the Eastern Virginia Conference" suggests a study rather than definite results. The life of Elon has been short, but its work has been lasting. There is a general judgment in the lives of institutions as well as in the lives of individuals. The work of Elon in the Eastern Virginia Conference is in its childhood. Even the men and women at work in local Churches, in Sunday Schools, in missionary societies, in Conferences and Conventions, to say nothing of their individual influence in family life and business, have not finished their work; they have just started it. Sixteen of the twenty-six ministers in this Conference are Elon men, and they are pastors of twenty-nine Churches of the forty-seven Churches in the Conference. When Elon College was opened in 1890, there was only one college graduate as pastor of any Church in this Conference. It is safe to say that Elon contributes 75 per cent of the real leadership and constructive service of this Conference. Besides this, one of our Elon men—Rev. D. P. Barrett—has been a faithful and successful missionary in Porto Rico for thirty years; and one of our men is the great president of Elon—W. A. Harper. All of this proves that Elon Contributes much to this Conference, directly and indirectly.

Elon College contributes the following to the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference:

1. Increased activity in local Churches, in Conference and the Southern Convention.

2. Increase in the number of young people who attend college, though they do not all go to Elon. It inspires the educational aspiration.

3. Increase in liberality not only for local purposes, but for educational institutions, missions, orphanages, and relief work.

4. Increase in Church loyalty and pride in Church institutions. These would wane if Elon did not send forth its men and women with education equal to the best.

If Elon will really maintain her motto—"Christian Character first and always"—and create an atmosphere in harmony with that motto on the campus and in the buildings, it will contribute more in the future than at the present.

ELON LETTER.

We do not know when the Christian Church began its educational career. Early in the nineteenth century, our preachers were conducting schools in Randolph, Orange, Chatham, and Wake Counties in North Carolina and in Nansemond County in Virginia. Our people were leaders in the movement for religious liberty, and they knew there could be no liberty without enlightenment. So they promoted education and religion as joint enterprises.

We have learned something these hundred years which they did not know—that education without religion is worse than ignorance. There are two foes of man—only two: ignorance and sin. Education can cure the former, but only religion can heal the latter. They must be dispelled in unison, or dire consequences will follow. That is why there is such a demand today for Christian education. That is why we must have Christian colleges.

A fine Christian man questioned me recently to know what textbook we used in our course in biology in Elon College. He was amazed to find it was the same book a neighbor's son had studied in a tax-supported college. "Does it not make your students atheists and agnostics?" he diligently inquired. When told that out of all Elon's five hundred and ninety-five graduates, only one had gone out without professing to be a Christian, and that one came from a Primitive Baptist family. He seemed incredulous. He seemed incredulous because his neighbor's son had gone to college, intending to enter the ministry, and had been graduated, as he declared, an atheist and agnostic. He could not understand it.

But I could. A Christian college assumes God as the basic concept of all its teaching. "In the beginning, God." So begins our Bible. And so begins Christian education. Every course of study is approached from that viewpoint, and all its teaching fits harmoniously into that concept. The professors in Elon College do not teach textbooks and theories. They teach young men and young women to see God in every relationship of life, in every realm of truth. They are led to sense God in the processes of the universe and of life, not in some of them, but in all of them.

I explained this to my friend in detail. He said, in conclusion: "Well, I see there must be something in what you have so often talked and written about—Christian education." Yes, readers of the "Elon Letter," there is something in Christian education, and it makes all the difference in the world in the Christian character of the young people whether they are educated in a Christian college, where all truth, including religious truth, is taught as a harmonious unity, because it proceeds from God; or in a college where truth is presented as a resultant of blind forces, material and mechanical.

Christian education is complete education. It does not neglect any department of truth. Least of all, does it neglect religious truth, for in religion all truth finds its unity. Not culture alone, not scholarship alone; but both of these, with Christian character, constitute the aim and purpose of Christian education. Christian colleges aspire to achieve these splendid aims as they present God's whole truth to our youth.

SOUTH NORFOLK LETTER.

Dear Bro. Editor:

I guess you are wondering why I don't sit down and write you sometimes and tell you a little something about our work at South Norfolk, but I declare to you I have had so many, many things to do, and still have so many things to do, that I have hardly had time to get a good, long breathing spell. Truly, these are busy days down in this part of God's good country, and they are glorious ones, too. I want to say right now, I just feel it is a joy to be living and to have a part in the program of Jesus Christ and His Church.

On June 21st, we began our series of revival meetings, which came to a close on Sunday evening, July 5th. We had fine congregations and a beautiful spirit prevailing throughout the meetings. Bro. J. F. Morgan, of Winchester, Va., did the preaching for us, and he did it well. Our people here are well acquainted with Bro. Morgan and we all feel as though he is just one of us. His sermons were plain, practical, gospel messages, delivered in his enthusiastic and convincing manner, and from the very beginning of the meeting there was a fine spirit of co-operation. At practically every service there were professions and a large number of reconsecrations. We were not expecting a large ingathering of members as a result of our meeting, but we had hoped, planned and prayed for a revival in our Church, and the results were that we have experienced a gracious revival. Practically the entire membership of the Church, at one service or the other, came forward and rededicated their hearts and lives to Jesus Christ, and to the task of winning souls to His cause; and, of course, after so many reconsecrations, the natural thing following in a revival, there were conversions. There were some forty-seven or more professions of faith, and thirty-seven of these have united with our Church and others have signified their desire to join later. Yes, in spite of the warm, inclement weather, as before stated, large congregations were present nightly, the Church being taxed to its seating capacity at practically every service.

We are still working on our new Church building. The walls are practically completed, and we are now getting ready for the roof, and I want to tell you now, Mr. Editor, it hasn't been any easy task to try to get out day by day to get the money to meet our payrolls on Saturday, which have been amounting to anywhere from $800.00 to $1,000.00 each week for the last six weeks, especially when you don't know where this money is coming from day after day, and at the same time keep up your other pastoral duties; but you remember I told you it was great to be living and to be counted a co-worker in the service of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and to me it is a real joy. Somebody has said that every preacher thinks his Church and his folks are the most important of all and the best of all; and I reckon sometimes they have a right to think so.

These are great folks here at South Norfolk, and it is a joy to try to serve them. I wish I knew how to begin to do what I would like to do for them and to please my Christ, and I wish you would come down some time real soon—don't wait—and see for yourself what these folks are doing and how they are giving and sacrificing to build this Church. I think some of these days when I get time I want to write you a whole book of the sacrifices these poor folks are making for this long-hoped-for and cherished dream—a new Church at South Norfolk.

Mr. Editor, this isn't by any means going to be a little Church, but, as I wrote to our good president of Elon a little while ago, when it is completed it will be second to none in our denomination or any other denomination—and, mind you, we haven't a wealthy member in the congregation. Now, if anybody in our denomination has a dime, a dollar, or a hundred or a thousand of them that they want to invest where it will bring the largest dividend that it is possible, just send it to South Norfolk to the treasurer of the South Norfolk

Christian Church Building Fund, or to the pastor, and I will see that the treasurer gets it; and if there ever was a poor, humble Church membership that needed financial aid, it is our South Norfolk folks, and they need it right now.

Now, I know you will pardon me for writing this great long letter. Really, when I started to write, I thought I would write about a half-dozen lines and quit, but I have hardly made a beginning at this, and the next chance I get I am going to sit down and write you an honest-to-goodness, real letter. Pray for us at South Norfolk.

Your brother in Christian service,
O. D. Poythress.

S. S. AND C. E. CONVENTION.

The fourth annual Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the Georgia and Alabama Christian Conference met in regular session at the First Christian Church, La Grange, Ga., July 4th and 5th, with Mrs. M. J. Halman, La Grange, Ga., president; Mr. W. H. Brewer, Lanett, Ala., vice-president, and Miss Aylmer Goodwin, Columbus, Ga., secretary-treasurer.

The Convention opened Saturday morning with a good crowd and many delegates from the Georgia and Alabama Churches, and the good attendance lasted on through the Convention.

Dr. S. L. Beougher, president of Bethlehem College, made the principal address on Saturday morning on the subject "Training for Definite Service." On Saturday afternoon and night, various subjects were discussed by members and friends of the Convention. Among the speakers were Miss Pattie Coghill, Rev. J. B. Rice, Rev. P. L. Duke, Rev. H. M. Gray, and Rev. C. A. Dickey.

The first service for Sunday was the 6 o'clock, or sunrise, prayer meeting. As this was the first sunrise prayer meeting ever attended by many, much inspiration was received by those present. Mr. Paul House conducted the service.

Following Rev. W. H. Brewer's address, "Religious Training for Children," and Sunday School, Prof. Lynam, of Bethlehem College, spoke. His subject was "The Supremacy of God in the Program of our Colleges."

The Sunday afternoon session closed the Convention. Prof. C. W. Coleman, Rev. R. L. Render, Miss Lois Halman, Mr. H. F. Quillian took part. The business meeting on Sunday afternoon resulted in Mr. M. J. Halman being re-elected as president, Rev. W. H. Brewer was re-elected as vice-president, Miss Aylmer Goodwin, resigned as secretary-treasurer, and Mr. Paul House was elected in her place.

We feel like we had a real successful Convention this year, and are sure that our Churches know more about each other than before. We hope that more of our Churches will be able to send delegates next year, as the Convention will be held in a more central place—North Highlands, Columbus, Ga., on the second fifth Sunday of the year. PALM STREET CHURCH.

The work here is progressing fairly well, and while nothing very startling has happened, yet we seem to be steadily gaining ground and winning our way in the community.

We have a loyal band of workers, who are faithful and very persevering in their efforts for the work of the kingdom. Like others in the Lord's service, we have had our difficulties and have earnestly tried to meet and overcome them, and partially succeeded.

But, this is life! Even in difficulties there is "variety," and if "variety is the spice of life," well, we always have some on hand. And, after all, what would any of us amount to without difficulties?

We observed "Children's Day" on Sunday, June 28th, with appropriate exercises, and a very creditable program was rendered. The theme of the program was "Christian Education," and was missionary in its scope and content. The congregation was most appreciative, and the attendance was an inspiration. The attendance at Sunday School was 176.

Two young men, members of our Baraca Bible Class, have already secured their rooms and made their plans to enter Elon College this fall. Their names are Lloyd Smith and Howard Hughes, the latter being the efficient secretary of our Bible class. We shall miss them very much, and our loss will be Elon's gain. "Here's to Old Elon!"

We heartily wish that more were going from our Church and Sunday School to college this year. The writer received a letter just a week ago, telling of a boy expecting to enter high school this fall, who has saved some money, and as he adds to his store by selling chickens, etc., he will place the money in a bank and call it "College Account," naming the college he hopes to enter some day. Oh, that many others might adopt some similar plan and build for the future.

H. B. Hall.

HOPEDALE.

Hopedale Christian Church was organized February 2, 1919, by Rev. L. I. Cocks, with thirteen charter members. Rev. J. F. Apple was called as pastor. The Church building was finished in March, 1921. Rev. J. W. Wellons preached the opening sermon on March 13, 1921. Bro. Apple served as pastor until November 26, 1922. Rev. H. E. Crutchfield served the Church from November, 1922, until November, 1924. The Church called Bro. Apple back as pastor. The Church was dedicated April 26, 1925. Bro. S. A. Bennett, of Elon College, preached the dedicatorial sermon. Rev. J. F. Apple then dedicated the house to God.

It was a glad day to all, but we have been made to rejoice again over the salvation of lost souls. Revs. J. S. Carden and J. F. Apple conducted our revival, Bro. Carden doing the preaching and Pastor Apple the singing. The Lord blessed us with the greatest meeting we have ever had. There were sixty or more saved, and twenty-four united with the Church. Our present membership now is fifty-six. The Church and Sunday School are growing. There were present at Sunday School July 5, 141.

May the Lord continue to bless the Church, and may the Lord's blessings rest upon Bro. Carden and help Him to lead many more souls into the light by bringing to them the plain gospel truth.

R. H. Coble.

THE NEW HOPE CONVENTION.

The Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the Alabama Conference was held at New Hope in June, and was one of the best, if not the very best, we have ever had.

One resolution was adopted in that Convention of especial merit, viz: "Resolved, That we endeavor to place a Christian Endeavor Society in all the Churches of the Alabama Conference during the next year." The chairman of the Convention was asked to appoint a special committee to organize societies. That committee has been appointed and is anxious to start. We believe it possible to organize a society in each of our Churches. We believe that the young people in many communities are anxious for the organization. But we will only go on invitation.

Now, Bro. Pastor, if you want your young people organized into a Christian Endeavor Society, get busy. If you want that committee to visit your Church, ask them to come. Don't merely give a general invitation, but tell them when and where to come. Get the people ready for their coming. Stir up their pure minds and let's put this one resolution over.

Now, we are taking this method to let you know that we are ready to come to your Church. If you want us, write Henry Lee Swint, Wadley, Ala., telling him when and where you want us.

J. H. Hughes,
Wadley, Ala. Chairman.

WITH THE CHURCHES.

Dear Dr. Atkinson:

Bro. Caviness disappointed us at Mt. Auburn. Just before I left Franklinton I received a letter from him that the people wanted him to stay where he was a week longer. The services are going on nicely at Mt. Auburn. Congregations are large. Nelson, pastor of the Baptist Church; Boyd, of the Presbyterian; Eure, of the M. E. Church, and D. A. Long, of the Christian Church are doing the preaching.

The protracted meeting will begin at Mt. Carmel the third Sunday in the month, and at Pope's Chapel the fourth Sunday in this month. It will, of course, be impossible for me to conduct these meetings, and attend the Elon Chautauqua.

Dr. P. H. Fleming has been chosen pastor of the Church at Mt. Auburn for 1925-26, but no word so far in regard to his acceptance. Of course I am doing what little I can to induce the Churches of my charge to comply with the request to aid the Orphanage and all other requests by the Convention and the Conference. Mt. Auburn continues to give liberally. D. A. Long.

STEWARDSHIP AND PROMOTION.

Warren H. Denison, Secretary.

A Valuable Book.

We most heartily recommend the book "The Competent Church," by Agar, to all our ministers, pastors, and Church officials. We regard it very valuable and suggestive. It is worth more than the dollar it costs.

Our Stewardship Period.

Our people have come to know that November and December comprise the stewardship period of the Church year of the Christians. These two months are to be devoted to the teaching of stewardship. The whole subject is to be studied by the Churches then, apart from the raising of funds. It is now time to prepare for that part of the Church's program. Pastor and stewardship secretary, and department, should not wait longer to plan a real, practical, spiritual, educational program, with study classes, sermons, and other features. Take time to prepare, and we urge you to begin now.

Rev. E. A. Watkins, D. D., Urbana, Ill., stewardship secretary of the Central Christian Convention, is conducting the stewardship part of the program of the Craigville, Mass., Summer School, July 7th to 17th. He will do it well.

We would call attention of all business men in the Christian Church to an article in the July American on "I Believe in Shooting Square with Man and God." Have you noticed how many of the great magazines are now offering stewardship and tithing articles. Read this one.

Two Pamphlets.

We have a few copies of two pamphlets that we shall be glad to furnish free upon request from individuals, one each, as long as they last. One is "Wise Public Giving—Canons on How to Give"; the other is "A Guide to a Joyful Habit." Dr. J. H. Jewett, Dean Charles R. Brown, Roger W. Babson, and Senator George Wharton Pepper give their views on stewardship.

The Every-Member Canvass.

Have you put on the real every-member canvass—not a makeshift—in your Church in 1925? Many of our Churches have done so. There has been a generous call for our free manual on the E. M. C. Many Churches never tried it before. May we not hope that every Church of the Christians will use this plan in 1925-6. Do it if possible with the other Churches of your Conference. We urge all Conferences to set a date for a simultaneous canvass. It is the only acceptable plan.

Tithing Testimonies.

Still they come! This time it is from one of our active Christian business men, Mr. J. J. Pitt, Norfolk, Va., of the Montague Rubber Company. Bro. Pitt says: "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's—that's paying the income tax. Indefinite, intricate task that business men pay lawyers and auditors to assist them in. And unto God the things that are God's—that's paying the tithe. Definite specific procedure that gives genuine satisfaction to the payer. Every business man must harken to Caesar's tax admonition. I am convinced that no business man can afford to slight God's holy proposition" (Mal. 3:10).

Your secretary recently assisted the Crown Point, Shiloh, and Walnut Hills Churches, Dayton, Ohio, in preparing the canvassers to make the every-member canvass; conducted a stewardship institute at Elkhart, Ind., Rev. Alfred Hurst, pastor; and will conduct stewardship classes at Elon College July 27th to August 7th, and at Bethlehem College August 10th to 16th.

STEWARDSHIP TEXTBOOK.

The textbook to be used in the stewardship class at the Elon Chautauqua to be conducted by the writer is "Stewardship for all of Life," by Luther E. Lovejoy. Those who have that text and who expect to be members of the class should bring their book. For those ministers and laymen who may not have one, I will have copies on hand, so that you may purchase them there. It is one of the newest and best books. Of course, we hope for a large class.

Warren H. Denison.

WHICH WAY?

Never have opportunities more golden presented themselves to us as a people than now. Never have we had such a force with which to do "business" for God and the kingdom. Never have we had such an array of strong Churches. Never have we had so many business men responding with liberal hand to the needs of our work. Never have our colleges been so well equipped, nor have they ever achieved results such as are accruing today. Never have so many gratifying reports come to us of growing Churches. Never have such a goodly number of ministers stood squarely on our professed principles as at the present hour. Never have we been better understood in the Christian world than today. Never have we had such glowing prospects for striking a telling blow in great urban centers as now.

But it is the habit of opportunity to spell obligation—responsibility. How are we going to meet our new responsibilities? How shall we respond to these challenges to come up to a larger place of usefulness in the field of service? For many years we croaked, and groaned, because we deceived ourselves into believing that we were poor. "If only we had some laymen of large means!" This was our constant lament. The fact was, laymen of large means were not inspired by our disposition to paddle along the shore. We refused to launch out into the deep.

Who can ever forget the apathy with which the proposal to raise a fund of $500,000 as a Forward Movement fund was received at Conneaut in 1919? But the wave of enthusiasm which swept that assembly when the committee brought in its revised report for a fund of $2,000,000 will live in the memory of those who were present as long as life shall last. Men of means began responding at once.

One of the most colossal blunders we, as a people, have ever made, was when we decided to go into the nursery business. The first thing we planted in our nursery was juniper trees. Here and there these trees were set out, and flourished in such fashion that many a man in the Christian fold prayed that we might die. But the juniper trees are being cut down now, and we are planting olive trees instead. As our brethren seek their shelter, it is to pray for the coming of the kingdom as Jesus prayed for it. And now that our men of means are responding as they have been doing recently, seems a most opportune time for us all to get busy. To many of us, what we can do seems so infinitesimally small that we refrain from doing even that.

The New Jersey Christian Conference Board of Home Missions and Church Extension, presented a plan at the recent session held at Irvington, N. J., which may be of interest to the brotherhood at large. The plan commended itself to the Conference and it was unanimously adopted. Its salient features have already been worked out in one of the four sections into which the Conference was divided for convenience of operation, and division of responsibility and labor. Here is the plan:

1. All moneys coming into the treasury for a fund to be known as the "Revolving Loan Fund" are to be loaned Churches needing help to acquire a working equipment, such as buildings and furnishings, with which to carry on the work of the Lord in this Conference. Money so loaned may be used in its entirety for three full years without interest. At the end of three years it begins to turn back into the treasury at the rate of 10 per cent per annum. Should a payment lapse, such lapsed payment begins at once to draw interest at 6 per cent per annum. Should two payments lapse, 20 per cent of the amount of the loan will then begin to draw interest at 6 per cent. All lapsed payments will thus be charged interest until paid. Prompt payment will result in all the money being returned in a period of twelve years.

2. The Churches are made responsible for the raising of the money for this fund. In order to localize the work for better co-operation, the Conference has been divided into four sections. One section will be known as the Pennsylvania group; another as the general New Jersey group; another as the Irvington group; and a fourth as the New York group. A secretary has been appointed to see that the plan is worked out in each of these groups—a secretary for each group. Apportionments have been worked for each group, totaling for the first two years of the plan's operation, $1,500 a year; and for the next three years of $1,700 a year.

3. The above is but an extension of a plan already in operation for several years. The older plan included only sustentation work. The board is continuing this work, it being larger this year than in any previous year of its operation. But the revolving loan fund is for the special purpose of initiating new work, though it may be used for existing organizations as well. In fact, it is much needed right now for the latter.

4. The Churches are urged to adopt the budget system. By writing into their budgets the amount apportioned to them—or more—they will expect to raise the suggested amount, which will be two-thirds of the work accomplished. Churches usually do what they expect to do.

How it Works.

One of the sections into which the Conference has been divided has already oversubscribed its apportionment, and more than half the amount is already in hand. That is, more than half the amount for that group of Churches. This group has not slackened its diligence in any other line of its benevolences in so doing either.

The above is actual experience. Now, for a hypothetical case, which has not had time to work out in practice. Here is a Church which is planning to build a house of worship for $100,000. It is not planning such a house because it wants to appear as well as its neighbors simply, but because an aggressive program of service demands such a plant. It can raise $60,000. It can negotiate a loan at a bank for $30,000. Along comes the "Revolving Loan Fund" with $10,000 more to complete the sum required. This imaginary Church now finds that about all it can hope to raise annually with which to discharge its financial responsibilities as to its building enterprise is $3,300. It is a growing Church, but its program of activities is growing also. It requires, and should have, an increasing budget each year in order to meet the needs of its community in a wholesome fashion. Its limit, therefore, for discharging its building obligation is $3,300. It would require eighteen years and about ten months to pay off the entire indebtedness of $40,000 at a total cost of $59,505.89, including interest charges.

But what would have happened to this hypothetical Church if the "Revolving Loan Fund" had not been operating? This: it would have required four years longer to discharge its obligation, at an added cost of $14,088.97. In other words, that loan of $10,000, when the Church's need was greatest, without interest, was worth to the Church at the end of eighteen years and ten months, the snug sum of $14,088.97. And yet, the Church has returned the money to the fund at the end of twelve years (a good proportion of it long before that time), so that it may go out to help another Church to the same extent, and so on perpetually. I do not mean that the help will represent the same amount of saving in each case. The amount to be saved in each individual case will depend on the amount of interest-bearing debt, and the rapidity which each given Church may discharge such obligation. But if you doubt my figures, try it out for yourself. Figure a Church with an interest-bearing debt of $40,000, paying in interest and principal of $3,300 per year; and then figure a $30,000 interest-bearing debt, and a $10,000 noninterest-bearing debt, the principal of which is to be returned out of the $3,300 income for that purpose, beginning 10 per cent payments at the end of three years, and see how far your figures differ from my own.

Our denomination can raise $500,000 for building Churches in a five-year period whenever it wants to do so. This splendid sum may continue to be used perpetually without diminution. Get out from under that juniper tree!

If we raise the suggested half-million in five years—and we can!—we shall gladly raise a million and a half in ten years. Why not launch such a movement on a national scale? Who will join us in goingforward? Or, shall we pause until we have lost the momentum secured from the Forward Movement of a few years ago? Which way? P. S. Sailer.

WAVERLY AND WAKEFIELD.

Rev. Howard E. Truitt is busily engaged in the progressive work at our Waverly Church. A two weeks' session of the daily vacation Bible school, a new undertaking for any Church in Waverly, closed Friday night, the 10th. There was a great response, and the average attendance ran up to over 90 per cent. Plans are being made for a larger school for next year. Bro. Truitt and his people are considering plans for building a more adequate Church School plant to care for the increasing needs and growing work.

Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, who is serving our Wakefield charge, has a very promising field. The Church in Wakefield is doing a fine work. They have a very active Sunday School and the interest promises a progressive future.

Bro. Crutchfield has won a permanent place in the hearts of the people of Wakefield, and especially has he won the respect and admiration of the young people of the community. His interest, consecration and enthusiasm promises to yield great results for our Church and the kingdom.

On Sunday afternoon, the 12th, I was privileged to visit the historical Barrett's Church—the scene of Uncle Wellons' conversion—and the people there are doing a good work still. It was from places like Barrett's that so many of our leaders received the vision of Christian service.

Rev. Bro. Crutchfield's charge takes in Wakefield, Ivor, Barrett's, and Burton's Grove. Together, these Churches have purchased a parsonage, and, as a field, they offer a wonderful opportunity for the Christian Church.

Wm. T. Scott.

FIRST CHURCH, NORFOLK, VA.

Last night the commencement exercises of our daily vacation Bible school were given in our Church. The audience declared their opinion of the school was that it was a good success. They had been noticing the fine progress of their children for three weeks, and they were not surprised when they were permitted to see a good program representative of the work that had been done. The opening exercises of the daily program were first in the exercises of the evening. Then Miss Esther Hall, superintendent of the beginners' department, offered five little songs which she had taught her children to sing and a dramatization of the Good Samaritan. Miss Hall had been assisted by Miss Edna Day.

Following the beginners' contribution was that of the primary department, which was headed up by Miss Elizabeth Brothers. This department gave songs, memory work done in concert, and the dramatization of the birth of Christ. The junior department, Miss Judith Black, superintendent, then recited in concert the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians, and then they named the books of the Old Testament and gave the main themes of each of them. Following this, an offering was made to defray the expenses of the school, which were $65.00. And then the closing song and benediction. In the Sunday School auditorium was displayed on a dozen tables handwork, including scarfs for the Orphanage, posters, painted jars, sixty-six wood blocks lettered as books of the Bible, paper animals and house pets, furniture galore, cut-out books, and handkerchiefs, the articles mounting high into the hundreds. They made an impressive sight, and loud were the commendations of parents, visitors and friends.

The pastor was general superintendent of the school, buying all the materials, planning the courses of study, calling and presiding over teachers' meetings, and attending picnics and parties. I also directed the handwork done by the boys in the junior department. Members of the faculty other than those already mentioned: Mesdames A. V. Allen, R. D. Hall, Misses May Bell, Geneva West, and Emma Morgan. All these workers and others who helped in various ways deserve the thanks of the Church. Miss Black was given board and room and, as a token of appreciation for her services, a purse of $22.50. The pupils made an offering of over $10.00 to the mountain work of our Church. While the weather was excessively hot, both teachers and pupils were very faithful indeed, and once again the members of the First Christian Church of Norfolk have shown they can do the thing they undertake. John G. Truitt, Pastor.

MAKING MISSIONS INTERESTING.

One reason why missionary meetings fail to interest is that they are not properly planned. Read up on missionary methods. Get books on the subject from the United Society of Christian Endeavor, Boston and Chicago. Cut from the Christian Endeavor World accounts of successful missionary meetings. Keep a missionary scrapbook in which to paste or write such plans. Good meetings do not happen. They are the result of hard work.

A REPORT OF INTEREST.

For some months, Rev. J. L. Foster has been acting as financial agent for Christian College, Franklinton, N. C. He has visited several Churches of our colored brethren, and reports the following cash and subscriptions secured, which he regards as highly significant in that it reveals the interest the negroes of the Christian Church are taking in their college:

White Rock, Durham, Rev. J. L. Collins, pastor, cash $11.00, pledges $385.00; Children's Chapel, Graham, N. C., Rev. W. M. Lake, pastor, cash $5.00, pledges $145; Cary, N. C., Rev. J. A. Henderson, pastor, cash $1.25, pledges $280.00; Christian Chapel, Apex, N. C., Rev. J. A. Henderson, pastor, pledges $195.00; Holly Springs, N. C., Rev. G. T. Hall, pastor, pledges $250.00; Manly Street, Raleigh, Rev. W. S. Matthews, pastor, cash $20.00, pledges $200; Antioch, Suffolk, Va., Rev. J. B. Jones, pastor, cash $1.90, pledges $85.00; Bethlehem, Suffolk, Rev. L. T. Watson, pastor, pledges $210.00; Sand Hill, Aberdeen, N. C., Rev. S. W. RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

By H. S. Hardcastle.

MISS PATTIE COGHILL, Field Secretary

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

August 2, 1925.

Subject: "The Epistle of James."

Golden Text: "Be ye doers of the Word, and not hearers only."—James 1:22.

Lesson: The Book of James.

Devotional Reading: James 1:12-18.

The book of James has but little theology in it, but it is full of practical religion. And, after all, this is the better thing, for religion is more a matter of life and practical living than of theology. Indeed, theology at its best is the orderly presentation of the things by which men live, and theology that does not issue in practical religion does not meet the needs of the average man and woman. There are many parts of the Bible which men may not be able to understand, but even the humblest Christian can read James understandingly. It is simply written, but it is profoundly conceived; it is plain, but it is vital.

There are many, many helpful truths in the five chapters of the book, and one should read the entire book, not only once, but several times, in order to get its message. But the verses as printed involve enough to furnish a basis for the ordinary Sunday School lesson. James evidently shared something of his brother Jesus' ability to say much in little, for he has packed a great deal in the few verses that have been selected for the lesson itself.

"But let every man be swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath." Here is a challenging statement. Swift to hear! As a minister, I am coming to wonder more and more as to just how much people really hear when they come to Church. It would be interesting to know how much of the average sermon the average Church-goer carries home with him. (Perhaps that is not the Church-goer's fault.) It certainly is true that in many cases failure to make preparation before coming to the service of worship, preoccupation with other things while in the Church, inattention, and other factors reduce what the average Church-goer hears, really hears, to a minimum. Having ears to hear, they hear not. Perhaps it would be a good thing to have these words displayed in a conspicuous place in every Church. Swift to hear. Be ye hearers of the Word. One reason why folks are not more doers of the Word is because they are not hearers first.

"Slow to speak." We may be slow to hear, but too many of us are swift to speak. It does not matter much what we speak so long as we are speaking, it seems. If we know the truth, if we have words that edify, well and good. But if we do not have the truth or words that edify, we speak gossip and slander and idle things, for we think we must speak. The apostle's injunction "slow to speak" needs to be inscribed in our hearts, for by our words shall we be justified, and by our words shall we be condemned. Think twice before you speak, and then keep quiet.

"Slow to wrath." It is so easy to become angry. There are so many things to anger us, and we have so many limitations and so much lack of self-control. Disregarding Paul's advice, we "give place to wrath." And then we are sorry. Becoming angry never helps things. Or us. As some one has said, "When we lose our temper, it is never quite as good when we find it again." Every one of us should strive to exercise self-control in all things, and especially to control our temper. If we are to give place to wrath, let it be righteous indignation against the evils of our day and time.

"Wherefore, putting away all filthiness and overflowing of wickedness, receive with meekness the implanted word, which is able to save your souls." Some one has said that the average life is like a beautiful lake or pond, which makes a fair display under ordinary circumstances, but which reveals unseemly and vile things if perchance the water is drawn off. We know that in our lives, in the best of us, there are evils and filthiness, and wickedness, and we need to wage an unceasing warfare against these evils, which James suggests are "overflowing." Let no man despair, for Jesus Christ came in the world to save us from our sins. But let no man think that Christ's mission can release us from an implacable fight against the sins which do so easily beset us. And if we do this we will have little time to meddle with the affairs of others. If we keep our own backyards clean, we will not have much chance to see the trash in our neighbor's backyard.

"But be ye doers of the Word, and not hearers only." These are two fundamental principles in education—the one "learn to do by doing"; the other, "no impression without expression." The man who does not do, really does not know. The way to know a thing is to do it. In fact, there are many things, especially in religion, that we can never know until we do them. Jesus said, "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." The people who are most miserable in life are the people who are not doing the things they ought to do. They are just about as miserable as to people who are doing the things they ought not to do. Here is a critical issue with Church-going people. Too many people like to go to Church to hear great musical programs and stirring gospel sermons, and yet do not link up these things with living. The Church will have a far-reaching revival when Church members live through the week what they hear on Sunday. And when ministers practice what they preach!

"If any man thinketh himself to be religious, while he bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his heart, this man's religion is vain." James thought that the tongue was about as vitally related to religion as the heart, for he devotes an entire chapter to the tongue. Read James 3 and see what he has to say about the tongue in its bearing on religion and life.

"Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and the widows in their affliction, and to keep oneself unspotted from the world." Many attempts have been made to defile religion, but it is difficult to pour the meaning of the terms into words. James has at least embodied its elements in this verse. He says that religion is a matter of inner purity of life, expressing itself in outward acts of kindness, and all born of a faith in God as Father. The life of filial trust and obedience expressing itself in kindness is religion.

REIDSVILLE.

In the absence of our pastor, I feel that the readers of The Christian Sun would like to hear from the Reidsville Christian Church. Our pastor, Rev. R. A. Whitten, left Sunday P. M. July 5th, after the evening service, to spend his vacation in attending the summer course of the Moody Bible Institute, in Chicago. The Church gave Bro. Whitten this much-needed vacation, and may God bless him in this work.

Prayer service was conducted Wednesday evening by the Baraca Class and will be conducted next Wednesday evening by the Philathea Class. A large attendance is hoped for. Class No. 5, which is the Junior Philathea Class, conducted a lawn party on the Church lawn Saturday night, and it was enjoyed by those present very much. We had 221 present at Sunday School this A. M., and the finance committee of the Church asked that the organized classes help to raise money to pay off the Church debt, and they pledged as follows: Philathea Class, $50.00; Baraca Class, $50.00; Bible Class, $121.50; officers and teachers, $50.00. Several other classes say that the Sunday School will raise more than $300 of the amount, and other different branches of the Church are going to take the matter up at their next meeting, and I am sure that we will soon have the debt lifted from our Church.

T. J. Mitchell,
S. S. Superintendent.

The best thing for the young convert is to establish good habits which will automatically make the actions of his life righteous. It is as easy to form good habits as bad ones. Life has its personal and social implications. The best habits, therefore, are private prayer, diligence in reading the New Testament, Church attendance, stewardship of money and time, genuine sensible devotion to business or calling, and a reasonable amount of time for play, social life, and rest.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

The new building program is progressing very nicely. We are receiving many splendid, incouraging letters. One Church has raised its quota in cash and sent it in. Some Churches have complained because we did not ask for as much as they wanted to give. I want to say that no Church is debarred from raising a larger amount than we ask for. If you want to double the amount asked for, we will be happy, and you will be happy too. We do want every Church in the Southern Christian Convention to have a part. We know if you invest you will feel more interested.

We want to ask all the Sunday Schools to see to it that you give one Sunday's offering each month to the Orphanage to care for our one hundred and fourteen little children, and the weather has been so very dry that we have not been able to raise any vegetables this spring, which makes us very dependent, and we ask you to aid us by making this monthly offering.

OUR BEAUTIFUL WORLD.

I love the sun, I love the rain,
I love the sky so blue;
I love the trees, and grass, and flowers,
And everything—don't you?
I love the frost and ice and snow,
I love the cold wind, too!
Our big world is so beautiful,
I love it all—don't you?

A STUDY OF THE PSALMS.

Chapter I.

It is the purpose of the editor of this page to devote a series of weeks to a study of the psalms, as literature, each day's reading carrying a certain selection and a brief statement of facts (as accepted), with comment that may be a devotional uplift which may help each and all worshipers herein to a clearer understanding of how the psalms came to be written and of the meanings that lie back of them. This week's page is an article of introduction, and leaves each to pray with the guidance of his own thoughts.

The psalms are a collection of song-poems of the Israelites. Poetry and religion go together. In moments of religious experience, when the soul is in harmony with God, its utterances burst into poetry and song. This is what happened to the writers of the psalms. In them the hopes and fears of the ages are collected. Here the longings and the yearnings, penitence and griefs over sin, sorrow and anguish over calamity, and joy and gratitude for forgiveness and restoration, finds utterance.

Here, pleas and prayers and despairs and hopes stride side by side. The joy and woes, the light and shadows, and practically everything common to the experience of the human race is treated.

We love the psalms for these very things. It is because of this that they bring to our hearts individual comfort and personal communion with God. And what more could we desire? However, if we know the time and conditions when each psalm was composed, why composed, and how used, we would understand much better its true meaning. It would appeal with more vividness and interest. For instance, when we read, "My soul thirsts for Thee in a dry and weary land," and we know that the writer was in the wilderness of Judah suffering the pangs of drought, we immediately know that it is more than a figure of speech.

According to Bewer, Shotwell and others, the Old Testament is to be read with a certain fundamental acceptance that certain things were paramount in the minds of the writers, and, being written by priests and prophets, every story and account is set forth with such a point of view. For instance, they believed that the true followers of the Lord were blessed with the favor of the Lord in health, prosperity and long life; and that the unfaithful and sinful were cut off or punished by the Lord, and from these there was no variation or shadow or turning. Therefore, if a man of God was taken sick or had misfortune, it was impossible. Surely he had sinned—shame on him; and even his relatives would forsake him.

Take Jonathan's fable of the trees' choice of a king (Judges 9). When it is understood that this is an inspired fable to teach that good and useful people are too busy to accept the office of a king, and that only worthless people are too willing to become monarchs, we understand and know where the true values in human agencies lie, and the fable is of great importance.

When we read the funeral song of Amos (ch. 5:1) and his subsequent denunciation of Israel, and have in mind that he was attending a harvest feast in Bethel, where his long broodings and listenings to the voice of God reached the ecstatic state, and the certain outcome of it all has thus crystalized into a vision of God's certain dealings with them, we can then understand why that harvest feast was such a great day for religion in Judah.

Amos' subsequent story of the plumb-line is the portrayal of an artist who engages in verbal maneuvers to catch the ears of the people in the market-place, and teaches that as "a crooked wall must fall, so a nation that is corrupt must perish."

We can appreciate the beautiful prayers of Isaiah (63:7-64:12) when we understand that the prophet had turned from the vindictive spirit expressed in Psalm 137 to witness in Palestine the incredible influence of Chaldean occupation and the ruins of the city and the temple.

In the story of Jonah, it is not important that it is true or untrue, but that, like a sermon from God Himself, it is to reveal the purest and truest ways, and is an eternal question which every one must answer. All must learn that God is not God of the Jews only, but the God of all men, who pities and cares for all, even for Israel's worst enemies, and who wants all to repent and be forgiven. This story belongs to the finest of all literature. Mr. Bewer says: "The author never thought that his readers would be so much without poetical imagination as to strip it of its fantastic beauty and nullify the wonderful lesson he had to teach." That the people of Ninevah fasted and repented is a greater miracle than the miracle of the fish. Why not forget the authenticity of the story and dwell upon its truths? One may withhold his admiration for such a solemn, impressive, and effective presentation, but in all biblical stories, whether prosaic, poetical or historical, or whether embellished by imagery or oratory, as the occasion might demand, the conviction of a righteous and merciful God is brought out grandly and the dogma of the Jehovah Church rules. Everything else is subordinated, and secondary causes and considerations are of minor importance. Never do the prophets, nor the people, get away from the one fundamental that God watches jealously over His people and punishes or delivers in accordance with their behaviour.

But this idea had to be broken down to some extent. God is hastening the time when His people shall realize that He is God of all and that suffering is not always a consequence of sin.

A prophet whose work is preserved in Isaiah 56:66 said that it was not a temple of wood and stone that must be prepared for the dwelling-place of the Lord, but that the hearts of the people must be His dwelling-place, for He makes His home with people of contrite and humble spirit; and that the priestly code of God in the temple and the whole sacrificial system were worse than useless.

Such a declaration, it is easy to see, smacked of wholesale reformation and naturally stirred up hate, for Haggai and Jeremiah were recognized prophets who were teaching and leading the people differently. Hence, the word (Isa. 66:5), "Your brethren that hate you that cast you out for my namesake have said let the Lord be glorified, . . . but it is they that should be put to shame." This prophet could not prevent the building of the temple, but he could keep up his doctrine of reform, and he did.

Let us turn to Ruth. No lessons are appended and no moral affixed to the book of Ruth. The author was far too great an artist for this. There was a fight in Israel over mixed marriages. Inter-marriage among foreigners was forbidden. The well -known Samaritans were a product of inter-marriage with foreigners, and therefore a despised people. Out of this fight the story of Ruth and Naomi came, which made it plain to everybody that God is no respector of race and nationality; that He looks at the heart and rewards goodness like Ruth's most richly. True religion alone is what counts with Him, and that is a matter of heart-life. Gradually, heart-life, and not liturgy, is becoming the emphasis.

Let us turn to Job. In the most of the Old Testament, it is assumed that the righteous and wicked are rewarded according to their deserts.

The validity of this doctrine is challenged by the author of Job and Ecclesiastes, who could not reconcile it with the facts of life. With this in view, we learn from Job that one may suffer the most horrible disease and greatest misfortunes and yet be in favor with God.

Thus when we turn to the psalms, though it be a collection of songs, each has its particular origin and purport built around the same ideas. We are told that Psalm 110 was composed to be sung at the triumphal ceremony which combined in Simon, the Hasmonean, the offices of priest and kind, "after the order of Melchizedek." Psalm 1 has been placed first in order to introduce the character of the whole, emphasizing its legal character, and Psalm 2 emphasizing its Messianic character.

Psalm 107 is an ode to the turning point of the people's experience, and describes their hunger and thirst, and praise to God for His satisfying grace.

There are psalms of public worship, private devotions and individual prayers those used in the temple service were sung by the temple choir, and they were sung responsively, the people chanting the response.

Other psalms were prepared specially for the pilgrims who journeyed to the annual feast. They were sung as the people marched along, and upon coming in sight of the temple all joined in Psalm 121. As they entered the temple, with mingled joy and awe, they published Jehovah's righteousness and goodness by chanting Psalm 122, which tells of the joy they had received.

Psalm 15 is not liturgical. In it the influence of the prophets is felt in which the endeavor is to place the temple service on a moral basis. Only the pure in heart and clean of hands may stand there. This was sung responsively just before entering the holy place for the sacrifice. Psalm 81 is a prophetic sermon sung by the priest to deepen the piety of the temple worshipers and to make religion not only a matter of outward form, but of inter-disposition and moral will. Psalm 29 celebrates God's glory in the thunderstorm, while 46 is a song of faith sung in the hours of wonderful deliverance from a terrible national danger.

Psalm 109 is one of the worst. It is vitiated with vengeance, breathing fearful curses upon enemies and used at public worship as a "sacred song, but when it is recalled that they believed that health and prosperity are the reward of piety, and disease and misfortune the result of wickedness, we can account for it. Such was their salvation. It was religion to them and a conceded right that suffers long for an opportunity to pay back in kind the bitterness of being forsaken by even their close relatives.

Psalms 103, 139, 91, 58, 119, 42, 63, 32, 23, 30, 16, and a great many others were used in home worship. They express deep personal piety when the soul is alone with God. In these the heart speaks out of its depths, prays for help and forgiveness, gives out thanksgiving and praise when the heart is free and unfettered by system or liturgy.

As far as it may be possible for the next few weeks, every day we will select a psalm for our meditation. We will ask our Heavenly Father to let our souls flow along with the psalters in rhythmic rise and cadence, revealing our deepest feelings and desire, and with each day's meditation let us pray freely our soul's desire to Him, and praise fully our adoration for Him.

THE BIGGEST ORANGE.

Herbert was hungry, and the big bowl of golden oranges upon the table in front of him seemed to invite him to take one. Not that Herbert would have one, of course, but he walked over just to smell of them. He knew they came from Peter's uncle's ranch in California.

"Get away from there!" called a sharp voice.

Herbert started and looked around. No one was in sight, but he scampered back to his seat to wait until Peter came down. Peter would offer him an orange.

The one upon the top was the largest and the brightest, the smoothest and the shiniest orange that Herbert had ever seen.

Then Peter came running into the room. "Mother said you were here," he said. "I was training my dog in the yard. Did you hear me?"

"Did you say, 'Get away from there!'" asked Herbert, turning red and commencing to laugh.

Peter nodded, but looked puzzled. Then he saw the oranges. "Have one?" as invited.

He walked toward the table so that his back was between the bowl and Herbert. When he held it out to the other boy, the biggest orange was gone from the top.

On the way to school, Herbert kept wondering about that biggest orange. Of course, he would not have taken it himself, but he could not help but wonder where it had gone. Then he saw that Peter's pocket bulged out. Peter had taken the biggest orange himself. Peter was a pig.

When they were in school, Kurt Malcomb came in late and brought the teacher a red apple. Herbert looked at Peter. Perhaps the biggest orange was for Miss Thurston, too. But Peter did not come forward.

When recess came, Herbert ran over to his friend. Maybe Peter was going to share the fruit with him; perhaps that was why he had taken the biggest one.

But Peter did not seem to want his friend around. When he turned to speak to another boy, Peter hurried off just as fast as he could go. Herbert decided he had gone out behind the wood pile to eat the big orange all by himself.

"Peter is a pig," he said, as he ran to the farther side of the school ground to play ball.

Soon after, Jack caught at his sleeve. "Oh, Herbert," said he, "there's the biggest orange I ever saw on your desk. Why didn't you bring it out?"

Herbert brightened. So Peter had meant the orange for him after all; or perhaps he was ashamed. He ran into the school-house as fast as he could, but there was no orange on his desk. Jack had been mistaken.

"I hope I don't have to walk home with Peter," thought Herbert after school. "I'll pretend to go and get a drink, and he will think I have gone, and start on."

Peter was not in sight when he came back, so Herbert went to the closet for his hat and coat and the gay cretonne bag that held his books. There was something in the bag—something round and big. Herbert took it out. It was the strange, shiny orange! But it did not feel like an ordinary orange; it was queer and tinny.

Herbert ran out to the gate as fast as he could. Peter was lingering down the street, and he smiled when he saw the orange.

"It's a trick orange," he said; "Uncle sent it in a box with the others to fool me. I'll show you how to open it."

It was filled with candy—Herbert's favorite kind. Peter laughed. "I was afraid you would touch it this morning," he said; "I wanted to surprise you. I went across to the store at recess to get the candy. I put it on your desk, and then I decided to take it outside. I couldn't find you, so I hid it in your bag. How do you like my surprise, Herbert?"

"'I think," said Herbert, and his friend wondered why his face was red. "I think it is the finest surprise I ever had."—Dewdrops.

GOLDEN KEYS.

A bunch of golden keys is mine,
To make each day with gladness shine.
"Good morning!" that's the golden key
That unlocks every day for me.
When evening comes, "Good night," I say,
And close the door of each glad day.

When at the table, "If you please!"
I take from off my bunch of keys.
When friends give anything to me,
I use the little "Thank you!" key.
"Excuse me!" "Beg your pardon!" too,
When by mistake some harm I do.

Or, if unkindly harm I've given,
With "Forgive me!" I shall be forgiven.
On a golden ring these keys I'll bind;
This is its motto: "Be ye kind."
I'll often use each golden key,
And then a child polite I'll be.

DAYTIME PREFERABLE.

An old Southern planter was discussing the hereafter with his body-servant.

"The first one that goes, Sam, must come back and tell the other what it is like over there."

"Yes, Massa; dat suits me exac'ly, Massa. But if you die fust, would you please come back in the daytime?"

MISSIONARY WORK AMONG OUR FRIENDS.

Rev. M. T. Sorrell, our consecrated and energetic pastor in Carroll County, Va., tells us elsewhere in this Bulletin "What Has Been Accomplished in Our Mountain Work." Miss Margaret H. Morey, his accomplished and consecrated assistant and co-worker, who is unselfishly dedicating her life and services to the work, modestly portrays "Our Opportunities in Carroll County." Herewith are presented to the eye scenes which tell more vividly than words the opportunity and the need, the prospects and the privileges of Christian service in the Fancy Gap and Rocky Ford communities. From the time Miss Iola Hedgepeth began the work five years ago until this good hour, no one acquainted with the situation has doubted that a worth-while Christian service had begun among a people worthy, responsive and appreciative. "All we need in this community is a chance—a chance at schools, Churches and the gospel. These will make us, and these alone can make us a law-abiding and happy people."

This expresses not only the mind of one, but the sentiment of an entire community, so far as one of its oldest and sturdiest citizens can interpret it. It has been well said that our mountain friends, remote geographically from contact with the rapid strides of trade, school and Churches, are "our contemporary ancestors." They are our people, having inherently sturdy and austere traits of character. Lack of schools, Churches and Christian activity is not a fault of theirs, but of the meager economic conditions and the ancient moral standards under which they live.

It, therefore, behooves us who have had superior advantages economically and morally, to share them with these our friends and "contemporary ancestors."

Our first objective was the building of a combined Church and school "on top" of a mountain which at once commands the view and the patronage of outlying valleys and populous communities. We maintain a school here seven months in the year and regular preaching twice per month, with Sunday School throughout the year. In this school the past year, the county paid for six months one of our teachers at a salary of $49.50 per month. (A county or a district pays its teachers in proportion to taxes received, and this will explain in a measure the scarcity of schools and the meager pay for teachers here.) We supplemented the salary to the extent of $65 per month, but were glad that the county recognized the work we were doing and joined with us in the work. We have the prospect of assistance from the county for at least two teachers for the coming year, provided, of course, we employ competent and approved teachers and do the character of work done in the county schools which we are seeking to do.

We have a flourishing Church—both congregation and building—at this place.

Now, for more than two years we have promised a Church at Rocky Ford, near the mountain home which has been opened to us for preaching, for day school and Sunday School teaching, and in which we house a congregation with a Church membership of thirty-three.

Brother Rigney and his family live in the main part of the building and kindly allow us to use the shed, measuring 12x14 feet, attached to the end of his house, and for which we are very grateful. In this shed we have been teaching, preaching and worshiping as a congregation, having school six months in the year, Sunday School throughout the year, and preaching twice per month. The shed is indicated in the picture which is presented herewith. Any reader will be impressed with the absolute necessity of a house of worship and a place for holding service here. This house is to be erected some little distance from the Rigney home, and just on the State highway leading from Hillsville, Va., to Mt. Airy, N. C.

The community has kindly given us an acre of ground on the mountain-side contiguous to this road, and have also offered their services to help in putting up the building, in furnishing logs and lumber, and in doing all they can to get a Church and school house. One has seldom seen a people so anxious as the Rocky Ford community is for this building.

Mr. Frank B. Simpson, a very competent and kindly architect, of Raleigh, N. C., has generously drawn and donated plans and specifications for the new building. Brother Chas. Johnson, a capable contractor and builder, and a member of our Wake Chapel Church, and who himself was the foreman and contractor in erecting the present Wake Chapel Church, has generously donated a month of his time and labor to the work of building our Rocky Ford Church. This we are hoping to do during the month of August.

Our women and young people are deeply interested in this work, and are leading in constructing the building and giving to the work. They must realize within the next few weeks approximately $2,000 if the work is accomplished as scheduled, and paid for when completed. Carting all dressed lumber and finished products for building up the mountain from Mt. Airy, N. C., and getting rough lumber out of the surrounding valleys and mountains is the task that requires not only man-power, but money also.

Unless you, dear reader, can furnish some of this man-power for service, will you not kindly send a dollar or a few dollars to Miss Margaret H. Morey, treasurer, Fancy Gap, Va., and in addition thereto, get your Sunday School or missionary Society to take a special offering for our Rocky Ford combined Church and school building? This will be a timely service in behalf of friends who will be grateful to you for time and eternity. Miss Morey will acknowledge, through "The Christian Sun," all donations received and will account to the Mission Board for all these funds, so that our mission treasurer may have full account of what is done in this behalf.

Gratefully and sincerely,

J. O. ATKINSON,
Mission Secretary.

TREND OF LABOR AWAY FROM STRIKES.

The principle of Jesus Christ for the settlement of disputes is arbitration. This idea has been gaining rapidly in the latter days. The World War has accelerated it because of the cruelties, crime and sacrifice that came with it.

One of the chief storm centers of American life has been in the relation of labor and capital. The strike and the lockout have been a favorite way of carrying on their disputes. It seems a change of vision is coming. The Philadelphia Bulletin says that the trend is away from strikes as a method of settling disputes and points to the recent creation of a committe of American Federation of Labor leaders to make an exhaustive study of the possibilities of arbitration.

Matthew Woll heads the committee, and associated with him are James Duncan, veteran vice-president of the American Federation of Labor; William Mahon of the Street Car men; Perkins, of the Cigar Makers; Baine, of the Boot and Shoe Workers; Clark, of the Flint Glass Workers, and Hugh Frayne, the organizer.

Presumption as to the result of this inquiry would be reckless. It is not necessary. There is enough significance in the fact that, officially, the American Federation of Labor has taken cognizance of the trend of the age away from fighting and toward arbitration for the settlement of controversies. It is important that labor leaders recognize that there are means for the attainment of the workers' due other than resort to the strike. Whatever prejudice may remain, this is evidence that the mind of labor is opening toward that avoidance of costly strikes, which never yet won enough to balance the loss.

BROOKS—JOHNSON.

At the writer's home, Mr. Thomas V. Brooks and Miss Alice W. Johnson were united in marriage July 4th. A few friends witnessed the ceremony. Mr. Brooks was formerly of Greenville, Tenn., but has for several years been in military service. Mrs. Brooks is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Johnson, of Jonesboro, N. C. They will live at Fort Bragg, N. C. May they long share together the best of the Father's blessings.

VI. The Christian Church.

1. Of What is the Church composed?

The Church is composed of all who have exercised repentance towards God and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ.

2. Do all these belong to one order of Christians?

No; there are many denominations, but all who believe in Jesus Christ truly are members of His Church.

3. Mention some of the denominations of Christians.

Episcopalians, Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians, Lutherans.

4. Do these differ concerning the doctrines set forth in the first part of this book?

No; they differ only in matters of less importance.

5. When did our Church take its rise?

It began to exist as a separate organization in the year 1794.

6. Where was the meeting held, at which our Church was organized?

In Surry County, Va.

7. Who was the leader in this enterprise?

The Rev. James O'Kelly.

8. Why did he and his brethren form a new Church?

Because they thought the Christian world too much divided into sects and parties.

9. But were they not themselves seeking to form a new party?

No; they only sought to form a Church upon the common doctrines held by true believers, so that all Christians might unite themselves into one body.

10. What, then, were the principles upon which they organized the Church?

They took the following as their groundwork:

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) The name CHRISTIAN is the only appellation by which they will be known, to the exclusion of all party or sectarian names.

(3) The Holy Bible, or the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, is their only creed or confession of faith.

(4) Christian character, or vital piety, is the true scriptural test of fellowship or Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

11. Are not these five principles enough, without any other declaration of faith?

No; for, though they are good in themselves, yet they are not comprehensive enough in their meaning to keep out dangerous errors.

12. How long did the Church continue without any other declaration of principles?

About seventy years.

13. Why did a declaration become necessary?

To keep false and unholy doctrines out of the Church.

14. What doctrines are false and unholy?

Those which deny the great leading truths of the Gospel.

15. Are these doctrines denied by any calling themselves Christians?

Yes; some one or more of them are denied by several sects in our country and others.

HANBURY.

On February 13, 1925, the death angel came to Grace Hospital, Richmond, Va., and took from our midst Bro. George Lafayette Hanbury, in the sixty-eighth year of his age. Everything that was possible for loving hands and sympathetic hearts to do was done to alleviate his sufferings and stay the hand of death, but God knew best and called him home. Bro. Hanbury was a loyal member of old Berea Christian Church, near Great Bridge, Norfolk County; for many years he was superintendent of the Sunday School and also held position as deacon of the Church and was held in the highest esteem by all who knew him.

He leaves to mourn their loss his devoted widow, Mrs. Lucy Lee Hanbury; eleven children and sixteen grandchildren, also two brothers and two sisters and a host of relatives and friends. Burial was in Riverview Cemetery. Funeral services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. B. F. Black and Rev. John G. Truitt. May God comfort the bereaved family. O. D. POYTHRESS.

CAVINESS.

Mrs. B. M. Caviness passed from this life to her reward on July 11th, being 68 years, 5 months, and 2 days old. She has been a member of the Pleasant Grove Church for fifty years. The funeral was conducted Sunday, the 12th, at 2 P. M. She is survived by her husband, one son and one daughter and nine grandchildren.

She was a woman of sterling Christian character, a good neighbor and a good mother. May God bless the family, and may they meet in heaven. The funeral services were conducted by the writer, assisted by C. E. Gerringer and H. F. Starr. D. R. MOFFITT.

GASTER.

Mr. Thomas Gaster was born May 11, 1860; died June 29, 1925. Several months ago he suffered a stroke of paralysis. During these months he had been a great sufferer. He had for many years been a member of Shallow Well Christian Church. In the cemetery there he was laid to rest to await the resurrection morning. A large congregation bore sad and silent testimony of their esteem.

The nearest relatives were a cousin and Mr. Garland Cox, an adopted son in everything but name, in whose home the deceased had lived for years. May the Lord bless and comfort those who weep.

R. L. WILLIAMSON.

If we were to live here always, with no other care than how to feed, clothe and house ourselves, life would be a very sorry business. It is immeasurably heightened by the solemnity of death.—Alex. Smith.

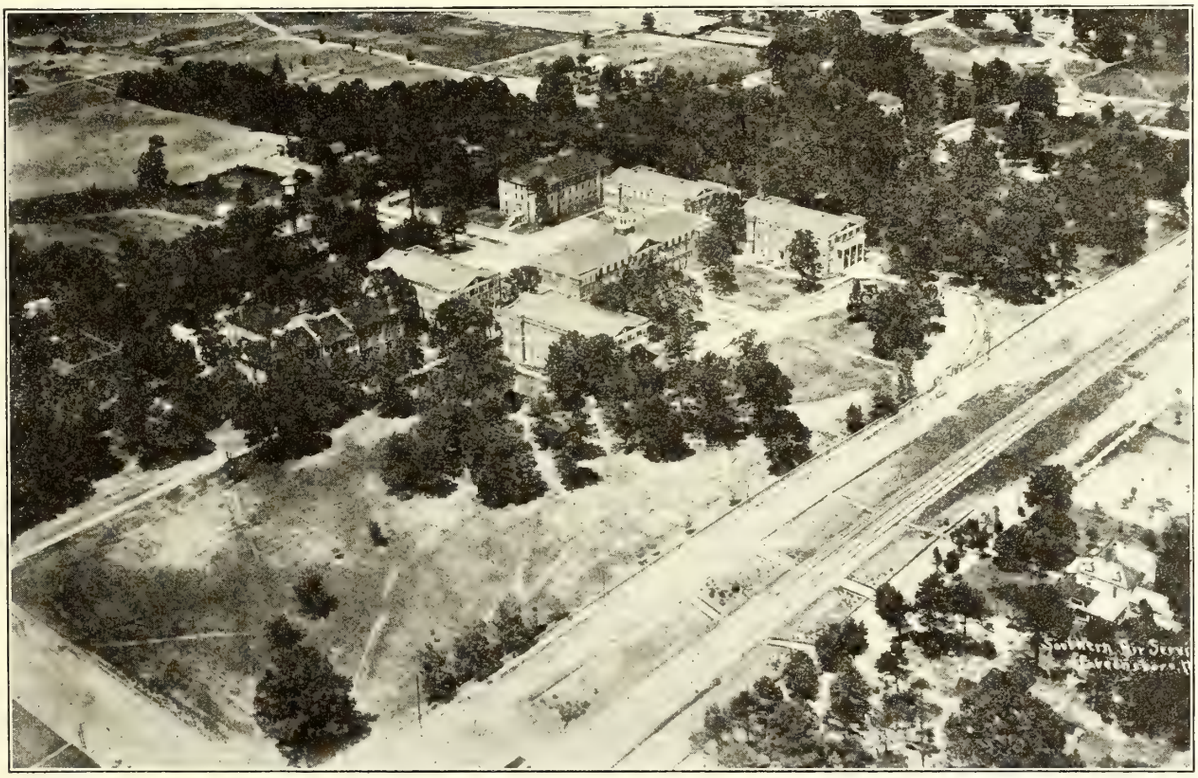
THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

By Rev. S. M. Lynam.

150 Years Ago.—

The United States is this year celebrating the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the opening of the Revolutionary War. It was then that the Thirteen colonies upheld the then ancient English traditions of liberty against the German King of England. In April, General Charles G. Dawes, Vice-President, celebrated the memorable ride of his ancestor and Paul Revere; and in June, former Secretary of State Charles Evans Hughes delivered an address at the anniversary of the battle of Bunker Hill. Then it happened that on the 3d of July President Coolidge delivered an eulogy in memory of George Washington in Boston, where that day 150 years ago the 'Father of his Country' took charge of the American army. In that speech, besides paying a high tribute to Washington, the President took Washington's advice concerning foreign entanglements, and he spoke some very appropriate words to the European countries. He advised that if they could not enjoy mutual trust, that they form leagues for mutual protection. He also said that steps toward peace would have the moral endorsement of the United States, but intimated that very little else might be expected. The President evidently holds to the American tradition, and it is well for us to do so still, in view of the state of old-world politics.



Elon College. Airplane View of Buildings and Grounds.

An Interesting Contest.—

An English journal has been conducting a contest to determine the ten leading children's hymns. The contest provided that reasons for the selection be given. The list which won follows: "All Things Bright and Beautiful," "There Is a Green Hill," "We are but Little Children Weak," all by C. F. Alexander; "O Little Town of Bethlehem," Phillips Brooks; "I Think when I Read," Jemima Luke; "Looking Upward Every Day," M. Butler; "Fight the Good Fight of Faith," J. S. B. Monsell; "Now, the Day Is Over," S. Baring Gould; "When He Cometh," W. O. Cushing; "Gentle Jesus, Meek and Mild," Charles Wesley. This list does not mean that all will agree, but it does furnish food for thought, and the "Observer" in Christian Work wonders if it is wise at all to have children's hymns and children's Bibles and children's books; and he gives some very cogent arguments against them. It is true that the men who grew great a half-century ago had none, and they read the masters in every field, and sang the masters, too, and got out of them what they could. It may be true—at least it is worth thinking about—that mediocre songs and music and books and Bibles like Mr. Van Loon's jazzed version tend to turn out men and women with mediocre qualifications for the great work of the world.

Fosdick Stirs Up Baptists.—

Though his friends regard Harry Emerson Fosdick as a most peaceably inclined man, he seems to have a knack of stirring up the Churches. After having been forced out of a Presbyterian pulpit in March, he, the latter part of May, accepted the pastorate of the Park Avenue Baptist Church, New York. That Church accepted the conditions which Dr. Fosdick laid down for them that they should hold open Communion and receive members from other Churches not requiring immersion or any form of baptism where the candidate did not feel it necessary. When the Park Avenue delegates arrived at the Seattle convention of the Northern Baptist Church they discovered that they were no longer a Baptist Church in the eyes of many of the brethren, 364 of the 1,276 delegates voting not to seat the four delegates from the Park Avenue Church on the ground that they were no longer a Baptist Church. They were seated, however, and Edwin Rhoades, a Toledo lawyer, was chosen moderator to succeed ex-Governor Milliken. The Northern Baptists also followed the lead of the Presbyterian General Assembly by choosing a commission to work out a system of peace and harmony in the Church, both as to doctrine and policy. The thing which the Park Avenue Church has just done at the request of Dr. Fosdick has been one of the cardinal principles of the Christian Church from its inception. We also believed that every Church in the Baptist convention was a law unto itself, which principle seems about to be challenged.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Elon College Number!

Bethlehem Chautauqua, Wadley, Ala., August 10th to 17th.

The Chautauqua met at Elon College Monday, and is now well on the way.

Read in this issue the article on the Chautauqua and School of Methods to be held at Bethlehem College, Wadley, Ala.

Four Richmond Churches—Methodist, Presbyterian, Episcopal and Christian—are holding union Sunday evening services during the summer months.

The "Suffolk Letter" in this issue suggests a subject for consideration at the Chautauqua. How to cultivate reverence for holy things is not to be treated lightly.

A Sunday School was organized in Bethlehem Church, Warren County, N. C., Sunday, July 12th, with a membership of forty-five. Mrs. Val Alston Bell, Macon, N. C., formerly of Liberty (Vance) Church, was elected superintendent. It is expected that a series of meetings will be held in Bethlehem and Antioch Churches in August. These Churches, located not far apart, the Roanoke River intervening, however, in Warren County, have not had a pastor for two or more years, but offer a field for real service and development.

Rev. M. A. Pollard, Elon College, N. C., recently assisted Rev. M. T. Sorrell in a ten-day series of meetings at Elk Spur, Carroll County, Va., two services being held at Rocky Ford. As one result of the meetings, there were fifteen accessions to the Church at Elk Spur, and three at Rocky Ford. Among those joining at the former were a man and his wife, the former of whom is eighty-nine, and his wife past eighty. The majority joining, however, were young people. Bro. Pollard speaks most encouragingly of our mountain work.

We are presenting elsewhere a document of singular interest and concern. It bears the title "History of Elon College" and the signatures of two who are yet amongst us and of two who have gone to their reward. This gives a glimpse of the past and should be preserved. It shows something of the growth and development of an idea and brings to the reader names that have been prominent in our annuals for some years. The history does not purport to be complete, for the college is still making history. It does, however, bring the salient facts of that history to the mind of the reader up to the beginning of Dr. Harper's administration. THE SUN'S editor could wish that the two living members of the committee, Dr. Watson and Dr. Newman, would have brought the history up to the present. But this is left for some future historian, and that added to the present contribution will certainly make exceedingly interesting and reliable information.

We hope very many SUN readers will carefully peruse that which Dr. J. U. Newman has offered on behalf of the committee of which he was one. Elon is making a history that is well worth preserving, and we shall appreciate its present and understand its future more fully as we acquaint ourselves with its present. The paper presented elsewhere makes this acquaintance possible, and as such is a valuable contribution.

MOONEY BUILDING OFFERS LEADERSHIP TRAINING.

Leadership training for Christian work has been an ideal cherished by the founders of Christian colleges. To this end, money was donated and programs of college work carried with them a large emphasis on training for Christian service. The colleges were expected to give much emphasis to matters of religion and the Christian life. As the years passed, many changes in curriculum became necessary. New courses were added; in fact, the changes demanded the addition of many new departments in college curricula.

These changes also called for new buildings and equipment with added financial resources to meet the needs. What college has not found it imperative to erect a "science" building? The needs of the day, the demands of the public, the pressure of standardization have all been forcing the Christian college to enlarge its curriculum and plant, to take care of these new branches of learning that must be taught.

This pressure has taxed the energies of college executives and called for financial outlays beyond the voluntary givings of the college constituency. Under the burdens of these conditions, most Church colleges failed to make a corresponding enrichment of the curriculum that gives special emphasis to religion. Neither have proportionate advances in the building and physical equipment been provided. Consequently the colleges, while much better prepared for teaching in general, are not better prepared for the teaching of religion than they were twenty or thirty years ago.

The advantages afforded Elon College by the Mooney Christian Education building and the program provided with it give the Christian Church in the South a unique opportunity for leadership training in Christian service.

We are proud of the fine, commodious new buildings at Elon. The Christian Church should rejoice in the opportunity of the greater Elon. We should be glad for this enlarged physical equipment, for the enriched curriculum that is made possible, for the opportunity of broader training and culture. As Christian people, interested in the religious life, we should be especially proud of the Mooney Christian Education Building. I am glad that we have a magnificent science building—a building well arranged and equipped with excellent apparatus for the teaching of science. I am also glad that there is beside it a building equally fine and well furnished for the school of Christian education. Here the growing people of Elon College may pursue courses in Bible and religious education with adequate facilities for efficient teaching and actual laboratory work carried on in connection with the courses.

This means that Elon College is really trying to train young people for Christian leadership. Courses are outlined and pursued that actually give to young people practical work in Christian leadership. Christian leadership is to be achieved by leading in Christian work. Christianity is primarily a life, a way of living, not speculation or theory.

Elon College, with its new facilities, with its enriched curriculum, with the Mooney Christian Education Building, offers to the Christian Church an unrivaled opportunity for leadership training in Christian service. What shall we do with it? Can we put into this task the same measure of loyal Christian devotion that enables our fathers to do efficient work with equipment not so good? This is the challenge before us. May the administration and faculty be granted a large measure of the spirit of our Master. May the homes and Churches send up to Elon a fine body of their choice young men and women who are interested in the Church and loyal to the great ideals of our Christian faith. Then let us all work together for the larger interests of the kingdom of God and we shall have a fine group of trained leaders for Christian living and Christian service.

BETHLEHEM SCHOOL OF METHODS.

This summer school of religious education is conducted especially in the interest of pastors, Christian Endeavor and Sunday School workers, although many features of the work will be interesting and profitable to all who may desire to attend. The session of 1925 will begin Monday, August 10th, and close Sunday, August 16th.

The faculty will consist of some persons who were members last year, with several new additions; all having been chosen because of their special fitness to give instruction in their special subjects. As we have not the program before us, we can not give the faculty in full, but it gives us great pleasure to name the following persons who will carry out their part on the program in a worth-while way: Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., Mr. Hermon Eldredge, Rev. W. H. Denison, D. D., Rev. McD. Howsare, D. D., Miss Pattie Coghill, A. B., and others.

The following courses have been chosen for this summer: "The Teaching Value of the Bible," "The Investment of Life and Training for Leadership," "Principles of Teaching," "Organization of Community Life," "Study for Teachers of Beginners, Primary Children, and Juniors," "Agencies for Religious Education for Adolescence," "Adult Department of Activities," "Sunday School Administration," "Missions," "Modern Methods of Evangelism," "Stewardship and Promotion," "Pastors' Conference and the Rural Church," "Pageantry and Music," and "Recreational Activities."

This week-day Church school will teach you just the things you want to know, for it deals with objectives, administration, equipment, educational methods and curricula. The school offers a short course in leadership training. No one can be a leader unless he can "sell" himself to others; and he can do this only through a developed personality. To him the School of Methods presents the supremist message which has as yet come to the world. Greece said, "Be moderate, know thyself"; Rome said, "Be strong, order thyself"; Confucianism says, "Be superior, correct thyself"; Buddhism says, "Be disillusioned, annihilate thyself"; Hinduism says, "Be separated, merge thyself"; Mohammedanism says, "Be submissive, bend thyself"; modern materialism says, "Be industrious, enjoy thyself"; modern dilettantism says, "Be broad, cultivate thyself"; Christianity says, through the Chautauqua and School of Methods, "Be Christ-like, give thyself."

The Chautauqua was excellent last year, but let us double the attendance and increase the efficiency this year. Do not let anything get in your way; be present at all hazards. The registration fee is only 50 cents, and board and room for the week, $5.00. The people of the United States spend one billion five hundred million dollars annually on public education, the purpose of which is to make good citizens. This is a good investment, but something more is needed—it must be supplemented by religious education. The Church is furnishing this opportunity through its week-day schools. Your opportunity for religious training will come to you at Wadley, Ala., August 10-17, 1925, if you are in reach of this school—what will you do with it?

ROCKY FORD REJOICES.

There is rejoicing in Carroll County, Va., over the special manifestation of our Father's love and power. On Wednesday, June 17th, Bro. Sorrell began evangelistic services on the site for our new building at Rocky Ford. The men of the neighborhood had helped him in getting the tent on the ground and arranging seats.

There was rain, also heavy fog at times during the ten days, and it seemed unreasonable to expect the people to gather in a place so poorly protected, yet they never failed. The interest was good from the beginning. Bro. Sorrell preached earnestly the plain gospel, denouncing sin of every form.

A large crowd attended the closing service on Sunday night. The Spirit was working in the hearts of those present. While the services were in progress, a number of persons accepted Christ. There was one addition to the Church. Many others will come in, we believe, when we have a suitable building in which to worship.

One week after the close of the meeting at Rocky Ford, special services began at Elk Spur. Bro. Sorrell was assisted by Bro. M. A. Pollard, of Elon College, who preached each evening to an attentive audience. Each message was presented in an interesting and forceful manner, and a lasting impression was made upon the minds of his hearers. It was evident that the words came from the lips of one whose heart is attuned with the Spirit of God. There were fourteen accessions to the Church, two of these coming from another Church.

Some of the good people of the Fancy Gap M. E. Church and of the St. Paul's Brethren Church came and helped with the singing, which was in charge of W. C. Strickland. Their friendship and willingness to co-operate is highly appreciated. Our services closed on Sunday night, July 12th, at which time the auditorium was filled, and it was necessary for some to find seats in an adjoining room.

On Sunday afternoon, Bro. Sorrell and Bro. Pollard held the usual service at the home of Bro. H. T. Rigney (Rocky Ford). Two young men joined the Church, another accepted Christ and will probably join later. Bro. Sorrell has already stated that we are planning to begin our Rocky Ford building by the first of August, and we are reminded that more money is needed.

Dear readers, will you not come to our rescue and make what has long been a dream a reality?

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

OUR ELON ISSUE.

This issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN is dedicated to the past achievements, the present status and the future glory of Elon College. No one is more sensible than the editor of how far short of this high ideal this issue of the paper falls. It may be observed, however, that if one will read closely what is printed herein, one will get a fair idea of what the college has really achieved, of what the present plan really is, and of what such achievement and such a plant give promise of for the future. We could wish that parents who read THE SUN will this week read much of it aloud to their children. We are going to have a whole generation of Elon advocates and devotees only as we rear such a generation from childhood in our homes. We have got to inculcate the Elon spirit and the Elon ideals into the mind and hearts of our youth.

An incident at the Eastern Virginia Convention last week was exceedingly gratifying to the editor and revealed a spirit that should be cultivated amongst us. Rev. F. C. Lester, pastor Christian Church, Franklin, Va., was giving an exhibition of work done at a daily vacation Bible school recently held at his Church. In this exhibition at Antioch there were a dozen or more children who gave a remarkable demonstration of what they had been taught and of what they had learned during their school. At the close of the exhibition, Pastor Lester said to his class, "Shall we now sing of that which is to us the best college in the world?" At this signal, the class sang those thrilling words, now familiar to many SUN readers and to a tune which we wish all SUN readers were familiar with. Elsewhere in this paper we are printing that song, the words and the notes, so if there are children in our CHRISTIAN SUN family who do not know the song, they may learn it and sing it to the joy and the delight of their hearts and of their homes. It will take much training and practice to sing the song as Bro. Lester's class of little folks sang it, but it is well worth trying on the part of any members of THE CHRISTIAN SUN family. We hope many will preserve this issue of THE SUN, or cut this song out, with the notes, and learn to sing "Here's to Elon!"

When one stops for a moment to consider the contribution of our college already to our Church life and Christian homes during these years of its existence, and when one realizes the remarkable equipment which the college now possesses, and the high ideals toward which she is striving, one feels like singing "Here to Dear Old Elon."

Rev. F. C. Lester was not missing the mark nor overestimating the matter when he told the children of his class to sing a song of that which was for them the best colleeg on earth. For us, this is true. It may not meet the high ideals of each individual in the Christian Church. It may not have measured up in the past to what all individuals could wish. Its achievements may not have been all that some have coveted for it. This, however, remains: It is the best that we Christians have thus far been able to build and equip for ourselves. As such, it has done more for us, is doing more for us, and will do more for us as a Church and a people in the Southern Christian Convention than any other college on earth.

Original Administration Building. This building is in ashes, but the character it molded will live on forever.

A few years ago there were many who said we did not have the equipment that a college should have; that we did not have as large a faculty and as well supplied laboratories, and such like, as other colleges had. This can no longer be said. Strange to say, however, that the feeling of those days seem to have been brought over to the present and held to without cause an dwithout explanation. The editor is reminded of a statement made by a distinguished American sociologist some time ago, who said that much of the complaint and discontent in American life had been brought over here by immigrants who had grounds of complaint in their own country. They had come to this country and found that for which they had clamored, but instead of being elated or even satisfied, still kept up their clamor and propaganda. There are many who have clamored for that which we now have at Elon College; and even now, when we have it, instead of being elated over the achievement, are clamoring still either from habit or from thoughtlessness.

What Elon College needs today is not new and better equipment, for we have that which is newest and best. That which we do need most of all is a loyal, devoted constituency, which constituency will praise the institution for what it has done, and give unstinted patronage and support to that which it is trying to do and longs to do. Loyalty! loyalty to our own dear Elon College is the note that should be struck, sounded and sung throughout our borders and bounds for the next few weeks especially.

Our enlarger plant and equipment simply demand that we shall have an enlarged enrollment. This we shall have if those who should be loyal will prove their loyalty in doing what they can for the college, zealously and earnestly, until the opening day of the next session—September 2d.

THE ELON TYPE.

About six weeks ago, the "Elon Letter" carried some valuable and suggestive information relative to our college. THE SUN, at that time, did not comment on those statistics, but has had in mind to do so, and is glad of the opportunity offered it in the Elon Number, which we issue at this time.

To refresh the mind, we will quote the salient facts out of that article. Elon has graduated 595 young people. Of these, 21 have passed to their reward, leaving a sum total of 574 living graduates. These graduates are engaged in the following life callings: business, 79; education, 251; engineering, 9; fine arts, 2; law, 17; ministry, 92; medicine, 15; government and other public service, 35; home-making (women only counted), 74.

The Elon graduates are Christian men and women. Ninety-two of them are ministers, and many of the married women are ministers' wives. Only one who is not a Christian has been graduated, so far as we have any record, and the vast majority are active in Christian service. Education leads the list, with more than half engaged in that profession. The State Superintendent of Public Instruction is authority for the statement that more Elon graduates enter teaching as a lifework than enter that calling from the University of North Carolina. The State gives its highest grade certificates to Elon teachers.

The Elon type, it appears to THE SUN, is dedicated to the service of God and humanity. The altruistic professions predominate—the professions in which life service, and not financial reward, is a primary consideration. And those who do enter business and engineering and the other gainful callings, we speak out of our own personal knowledge, exemplify in their daily personal and professional life the beautiful principles of the Christian Gospel.

The Christians built this college to teach their sons and daughters learning and religion. The aspiration of the college has been to produce men and women of Christian character. We do not hesitate to declare it to be our firm conviction that the college has made good its high hope and exalted expectation.

If the members of the Christian Church value the soul's welfare of their sons and daughters, they should certainly pause long and pray earnestly for divine guidance before deciding to patronize other colleges than our own. The Elon type is the type we need. Don't forget it, dear friends.

HISTORY OF ELON COLLEGE.

Early Beginning.

Elon College is an evolution—the evolution of the desire for a college on the part of the Christian Church in the South. The pioneer in the field of religious education among the people who later founded Elon College was Elder Daniel Wilson Kerr, who, according to the North Carolina State records, in 1826 was teaching in Wake County, and of whose work the following mention is therein made (1826): "The Wake Forest Pleasant Grove Academy, situated on the Oxford Road, twelve miles north of Raleigh, N. C., was incorporated, with Elder Daniel W. Kerr as principal."

Twelve years later he was principal of Junto Academy, which was incorporated in 1838. In 1842 Junto Academy was burned, and when rebuilt was called Mount Zion Academy, located in Orange County, N. C. Seven years later, Elder Kerr then moved his school to Pittsboro, N. C., where he continued to teach until his death in 1850. With the death of Elder Kerr, his school closes, but to him is due the honor of having first conceived the idea of having a fitting school for his Church.

Campus View, Winter Scene. "And Winter, slumbering in the pure air, wears on his smiling face the first dream of Spring."

but to him is due the honor of having first conceived the idea of having a fitting school for his Church.

It is true that he began the schools he headed on his own initiative, but they were endorsed by the Conferences of the Church and were regarded by him as denominational schools, but not as sectarian in any sense.

Two years after the death of Elder Kerr, or in 1852, the seed of his sowing bore a finer sort of fruit in the establishment of Graham Institute, in Graham, Alamance County, N. C., with Rev. John R. Holt, a graduate of the University of North Carolina, as principal. This school was established by members of the Church, of whom Rev. Josiah MacCulloch, of the N. C. & Va. Conference was the leading spirit. At first this school was conducted as a high school for boys, but in 1857 it was chartered as Graham College, with Prof. W. H. Doherty, of Antioch College, Ohio, as president. President Doherty was a graduate of Oxford, and had been associated with Horace Mann. Under his administration, it prospered greatly until the Civil War, when its doors were closed, the buildings sold and later converted into a tobacco factory.

In the year 1865, W. S. Long, who had been a student in Graham Institute, and afterwards in Graham College, and who had taught in Virginia during the Civil War, opened a high school in Graham, and later he obtained possession of the property formerly known as Graham College, and later it was chartered as Graham Normal College.

Elon Is Founded.

The importance of establishing an institution of high grade had been advocated from time to time in the Conferences and Conventions of the Church. The need of an educated and trained leadership in all departments of the Church appeared to be imperative.

Accordingly, the committee on schools and colleges of the Southern Christian Convention, who were W. S. Long (chairman), Dr. J. P. Barrett (secretary), Rev. J. W. Holt, F. O. Moring, J. W. Harden, and Dr. J. U. Newman (by request), met in Graham March 28, 1887, and leased the grounds and buildings of Graham Normal College, and then elected W. S. Long president, with J. U. Newman, Captain S. A. Holeman, Prof. H. J. Stockard, and later Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Dr. E. L. Moffitt, Miss Alberta Moring and Miss Lena Beale as a faculty.

Finding the equipment of Graham Normal College inadequate and not exactly commensurate with the needs of the institution, the committee on schools and colleges met in Graham July 3, 1888, and directed the chairman to visit various points and investigate advantages and ascertain inducements offered for the location of the college.

The General Convention met in extraordinary session with the Church at New Providence, Graham, N. C., September 11, 1888, to hear and consider the report of the committee on schools and colleges. The persons present at this meeting were W. W. Staley (president), Rev. J. P. Barrett (secretary), W. G. Clements, W. S. Long, J. W. Holt, M. L. Hurley, J. C. Holt, P. R. Harden, David MacClenny, J. W. Harden, J. W. Wellons, C. L. Holleman, F. O. Moring, and J. A. Turrentine. Other brethren present not members of the Convention were E. T. Isley, J. W. Fonville, and Dr. C. J. Jones, and Dr. J. J. Summerbell of the Northern branch of the Church.

The report of the committee on schools and colleges, signed by W. S. Long, J. P. Barrett, F. O. Moring and J. W. Harden, was presented to the Convention and considered, item by item, carefully and adopted, with but one dissenting vote.

A board of fifteen trustees was elected: E. A. Moffitt, J. M. Smith, J. H. Harden, F. O. Moring, S. P. Reed, E. T. Pierce, W. J. Lee, P. J. Kernodle, J. F. West, E. E. Holland, W. W. Staley, J. W. Wellons, W. S. Long, G. S. Watson, M. L. Hurley.

A provisional board was appointed, charged with the duty of conducting the business of the college, selecting a location, and transacting all matters pertaining to the college until the regular meeting of the Convention by W. S. Long, J. P. Barrett, G. S. Watson, F. O. Moring, J. H. Harden. On September 14, the Convention adjourned, having appointed Dr. J. P. Barrett financial agent, who, however, could not accept on account of his heavy work as an editor, and in whose place Dr. W. S. Long was chosen.

The provisional board visited all the places making offers for location of the college, and after ing offers for location of the college, and after careful consideration and prayer found themselves unable to agree on a location. Time was given for consultation and further consultation. But after much time had been spent, the board met and again voted as before—two for Graham and two for Mill Point, the present site of the college. The chairman hesitated to vote because he wanted united action on the part of the board; but when he found this to be impossible, he gave the casting vote in favor of the present location, December 20, 1888. The main reason for his vote was to place the college without the corporate limits of any town or incorporated institution, that it might be able to control its environment. He knew from experience what it means to contend with town aldermen about bar-rooms. The location consists of fifty acres, donated by W. R. Trolinger, seventeen acres by W. F. Ireland, and three acres by Alfonso Gerringer, making seventy acres.

Mr. Lewis H. Holt, the county surveyor, was

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Protestantism has accomplished great things for mankind in the field of religious and civil liberty. It anticipated all other human achievements for the production and wider distribution of knowledge and material conveniences. It has broken down in large measure aristocracy in society and monarchy in government. The work is not complete; but it is still working in that direction. Invention, manufacture, transportation, and the distribution of world-products for the use of multitudes are the by-products of Protestantism. Spiritual, educational, and material activities have followed this leader of thought, of individual and organized opportunity for human achievements.

It can hardly be said that it has been more missionary than Roman Catholicism, for that element in Christianity has been active down to the present time. That spirit goes with Christianity in all forms. Wherever the Spirit of Jesus Christ is present, the missionary impulse operates. Romanism has planted its Churches and its teachings almost over the whole world. But Protestantism cannot be accused of being non-missionary, though it may have been slow in its processes, short in its contributions, and weak in its representatives. It has, also, made progress in the field of education and works of charity. Both of these go with Christianity in the individual or organized effort.

But Protestantism has been behind Romanism in reverence. There is no more obvious and universal thing in Protestant Churches than a lack of reverence. The atmosphere of a Roman Catholic Church produces reverence in all who enter it. In a Protestant Church, people enter irreverantly, engage in noisy conversation up to the time when service begins, and there is no atmosphere of reverence. It would be a fine change in most Churches if the congregation would recognize the presence of God in the Church, enter quietly, sit meditatively, cultivate the spirit of inward prayer, and do this until a Church atmosphere is created. Many people enter the sanctuary more boisterously than they would enter a private residence. Here is room for reformation, for the creation of a holy atmosphere that will make worshipers feel reverent in God's house.

In this day of so many new movements, new methods, and new organizations, there is room for one more suggestion. If some Church would try this out it might help to make Protestants more reverent in the place of worship. Perhaps the Sunday School in the Church auditorium has done much to remove reverence from God's house. If so, this suggests what is being done by many congregations—the erection of Sunday School rooms apart from the main Church. It will, no doubt, appear that reverence can be created by using the Church for worship only. No matter what the cause for irreverence may be, nor the remedy to correct it, it still remains true that the atmosphere of the Roman Catholic Church is more reverent than the Protestant Church.

ELON LETTER.

There is a widespread feeling that there is no special need now for Christian education; that education in one type of institution is as wholesome as another, and that, to all intents and purposes, the resultant of the educational process is equivalent no matter where the education is received or under what auspices. In order to be able thoroughly to understand the necessity for Christian education, it will be well to examine the aims that influence people in their endeavor after education, and what influences educators profess to be governed by in their educational work.

There have been many different aims for educational effort. The first, perhaps, and the most persistent is what we may describe as the development of the powers of the mind, or, to use a briefer phrase, mental discipline. According to this view, it does not make much practical difference as to what we study, just so the materials of the curriculum have the ability to produce mental muscle. In a former generation, it was esteemed that Latin and Greek and higher mathematics had this talismanic power in especial degree. Consequently, they were known as the humanities. There is something to be said for this idea of mental discipline. It is true that education does tend to promote mental power, and that the inborn abilities of a man can be strengthened and developed by the educational process.

A second aim of education is directly practical in outlook, aim, and method, as well as in content. According to this view, it makes all the difference in the world what subjects we study. We are no longer looking for power, but rather for power in a particular direction, and useful information is the ultimate aim to be sought in all educational effort. "Of what use," the advocate of this view inquires, "is it for a farmer to study Latin or the president of a cotton factory to study Greek?" A man should decide in what direction he will invest his life, these practical-minded people think, and then he should shape his studies in line for that vocation. There is no doubt but that this is the vogue for the most part in educational circles today. There are some, however, who think that those who take this, what they are pleased to call, bread-and-butter view of education, are not educated at all, but that they are merely trained and skilled for a certain calling.

A third aim that has been quite influential in the history of education, and especially of young women, is what we may style "cultural" for lack of a better term. There can be no doubt that education does tend to produce persons of culture, and that culture, in spite of the misuse of the term in our day by the war lords of Germany, is no mean possession, and its pursuit no disgraceful undertaking. According to this view, we are not looking for mental power nor for skill in the performance of any particular duty in human society, but for an agreeableness of manner and wholesome delight in what we call the emenities of life. Literature, art, music are esteemed to be especially valuable in contributing to such culture and refinement of life and manners. This type of education is being berated in these latter days, but a great deal can be said for it. It is the aim of the cultural view of education to qualify persons to enjoy their leisure hours. Increasingly the conquest of nature and improvement in mechanical devices make possible a larger leisure for a larger number of people. Our educational system must not break down at this critical point. It must educate people to use their leisure hours profitably and to do what a philosopher has called "invite the soul," whatever that may mean. We may laugh at the philosopher all we wish, but we may mark it down as a certainty that no civilization can survive whose people are unable properly to use their leisure hours.

A fourth view of education, and one which appeals very decidedly to the social conscience of our time, is the so-called adaptation theory by which the purpose of education is esteemed to be the fitting of the individual to live in the group or society in which his lot is to be cast. This is a special development of the second theory which we have already discussed, the so-called practical, informational, or vocational theory; but its advocates seem to think that it is something new under the sun, and particularly when they link it up with what is known in the most recent vernacular of the educational world as the project method. Now, the project method is nothing more nor less than appealing to the mind of a student in the realm of his own interests. There is no doubt that interest plays a large part and is a decisive factor in the acquisition of learning, and there is also no doubt that it is the duty of a student to adapt himself, in accordance with his taste and interest, to live the most effective and serviceable life he can in the particular group or society, or profession, if that should be preferred, in which his lot is to be cast.

Campus View in Early Spring. "Nature, with folded hands, seemed there, kneeling at her evening prayer."

These four theories summarize briefly the aims that have influenced individuals and educators in the educational world, but there is something lacking in all of them. It is conceivable that a man may use his mental power in such a way as to advance his own interests at the expense of his brother-men. We have no assurance that a giant intellect will always express itself in altruistic service. We have abundant evidence to the contrary, that the development of the mind oftentimes makes a man a more dangerous force in society. We even have evidence that this is true in regard to a nation, and we have a striking illustration of it in modern Germany. This same element is lacking in the aim of education that we have called practical. There is nothing included in that thought which would necessarily keep the man possessed of such practical knowledge from using it for hurtful and anti-social purposes. The knowledge of chemistry, for instance, which is of very practical benefit to the world, was during the recent war made to serve the purposes of human destruction in the creation of poison gases, and the same thing is true of culture, as innocent and refined as it is in the popular conception. People of culture may be tempted to form themselves into a caste and to make of themselves snobs, and to feel that they are inherently better than other people. Likewise, in the conception of education, which regards its highest good to be the enabling of a man to adapt himself to his environment, there is nothing to preclude the thought that a man should adapt himself to an environment that has in it elements and forces which will ultimately mean the death of all that is esteemed to be high and good in human brotherhood. In a sense, the adaptation theory may content people with things as they are, and so halt human progress.

What is this element that is lacking? It is the unselfish, altruistic, reformative, transforming use of the power, the information, the culture, and the capacity for adaptation which education is designed to confer. Where is this altruistic, transforming element to be had? What is its source? its origin is to be found in the Christian religion. It is summarized in the phrase "Christian character." How does Christian character eventuate in the educational process? How can we be sure that the impartation of knowledge, no matter what the ultimate purposes of that knowledge may be, will always yield that splendid product which we know as Christian character?

The answer to this question is to be found in the aim of education conceived in Christian terms, and that aim is not the development of mind power simply, not the impartation of useful information simply, not the production of a true and uplifting culture simply, nor yet again the ability to adapt one's self to one's environment. Christian education is not adverse to mind power, but rejoices in it. Christian education does not oppose useful information, but is glad when the fund of such information increases. Christian education welcomes all true and genuine culture, and it is itself a most potent force in enabling a man to adapt himself to the place and station in life in which he finds himself. Christian education claims that it includes all that the other theories of education can possibly include, but that it goes further than any of these aims and undertakes for itself the high goal of transforming the character of students in terms of Christian idealism.

Is Christian education able to do this? Does it have this transforming power? I think that it has, and I believe that the records of the denominational colleges in the country justify the expectation that they will continue to exercise this transforming influence in molding the lives of young people and in motivating them so that when their world years come, no matter in what direction they may invest their lives, they will exhibit in every relationship the compelling attitude of Christian character.

We live in a day of great controversy. The Christian world is divided between the fundamentalists and the modernists; between the scientists and the religionists. It appears that Christian education is absolutely necessary if we are to come safely through this crisis. Christian education does not teach facts, it teaches truth. The fact is that on a certain day God fashioned the body of man and breathed into it the breath of life, so that man became a living soul. The truth is that every man has in him a spark of the divine, and this spark is no more extinguishable than God Himself is extinguishable. The body returns to the dust from which it came, but the spirit returns to God who breathed it into the body of man. The fact is that once, while a great storm was on the Sea of Galilee, Jesus walked on the water and kept Peter from sinking when he presumed also to walk on the water. The truth is that this same Jesus is present always to extend a helping hand to any man who is in need of assistance. The fact is that on a certain day late in the afternoon, Jesus fed a great multitude with a few loaves and fishes. The truth is that this same Jesus always provides for every necessity of His children. Christian education is concerned with truth and is not limited blindly to facts. Truth is eternal; facts are incidental. Christian education gives a complete and ultimate view of every situation, because it spiritually comprehends every factor in every situation, comprehends it in terms of God.

This controversy which divides the modern Christian world into hostile camps is explained by the fact that the discoveries of scientists are being taught as material and mechanical explanations of the universe, including the origin of the life of man, with God eliminated from the process. These schools teach facts; they do not teach the truth. They teach facts; they do not teach

STEWARDSHIP AND PROMOTION.

Stewardship Schools.

It it most encouraging to learn how many Churches in nearly all denominations are making a school of stewardship a permanent feature in the year's program. Classes are held, some for officials only, some for adults, some for young people, some for junior boys and girls. Some Churches have classes for certain ones of the above each year; some vary them for different years, according to the number and needs. It will transform many lives if they will make a real study of some suitable stewardship book. We shall be glad to suggest suitable study books for our pastors and stewardship secretaries. It will pay any Church to conduct some stewardship classes. Why not decide to hold one or more for the six weeks beginning November 1st? You will need to plan for it now.

A Practical Question.

"Dr. Denison, will you tell us how to organize a stewardship department in our Church?"

Answer: Let your Church vote to have such a department, and elect among its regular officers a stewardship secretary who shall head-up such a department. Then the ideal Church will have the following finance officers: a financial secretary, a current expense treasurer, a benevolence treasurer. These three regular officers of your Church should be made members of your stewardship department. Then your official board should add to the members of this department several more carefully selected persons, one usually from each department of the Church, such as the Sunday School, Missionary Society, Ladies' Aid, Christian Endeavor, so that under the direction of this department and its head (secretary), all the departments of the Church may be taught Christian stewardship. I have here on my desk a copy of the constitution of one of our Churches which says this "Department shall consist of an executive secretary elected by the Church, and four or more members appointed by the official board." "This department, co-operating with the pastor, shall seek to emphasize the stewardship of life and possessions. It shall have charge of the financial program of the Church and the adoption and working out of the budget, and shall arrange for the every-member canvass. It shall be responsible for the annual audit of the Church books, or any other audit required, and make report of the same to the Church. It shall see that new members are early solicited and furnished with duplex envelopes."

"The financial policy of this Church is that of free-will offerings, the budget, every-member canvass, weekly offerings, duplex envelopes, separate subscriptions for current expenses and benevolences, promptness in payment of obligations by check or voucher. Special offerings and unforeseen calls may be presented when approved by the official board. Opportunity may be given, without urging, to add to regular benevolent offerings on denominational days." That is very accurate and splendid.

What an Array!

What a strong list of tithing testimonies we have had the privilege of presenting week after week in this column. They are from our own folks—those known for their life and works. Does their testimony mean anything to you? We cannot help but wonder why we do not hear from certain ones. Here is one from our well-known worker Mrs. Alice V. Morrill, Defiance, Ohio:

"Much of the pleasure derived from doing any task is the consciousness of being well prepared. This condition of preparedness is one of the joys of tithing. An unexpected call comes for financial aid; I have just paid my taxes or some other bill is due and I have nothing to give, although I really want to. But if I am a tither, neither taxes nor bills have any effect on my ability to give to benevolent objects. A tithing giver is a prepared giver—a cheerful giver, a growing giver."

ELON AND THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH AS SEEN BY A FIELD REPRESENTATIVE.

If every member of the Christian Church could spend a short time in the field among our Church people in the interest of our institutions, there would be a different attitude and a more loyal one toward our Church's program. I speak principally of our college—Elon. It seems to be easy for our people to shift the responsibility of running our college, and of promoting its interests upon a few, and then to criticize when things do not go according to their individual notions.

It has been my pleasure and opportunity to serve Elon in our Eastern Virginia Conference during the past month, and could my readers have gone with me I believe they would have been impressed similarly. Elon is dear to the hearts of many of our people there, like other places, but for some reason she does not receive the support that is rightly hers, namely: the boys and girls of our Church. There may have been a time when Elon was not equipped to serve as well and as effectively as some other institutions, but that is no longer true. However, for some reason, the majority of our Church's young people go to places other than to Elon—and for courses that Elon is equipped to give as efficiently as any college. To my mind, there are two reasons for this: first, there is lacking that unity for the cause for which our Church stands, and secondly, our pastors do not emphasize the importance of choice of schools. And, understand me, that this is true not only in one Conference, but in practically all of them. It is not my purpose to criticize, for if I am anything I try to be an optimist, and I am sure that those who know the deep desire of Elon students and friends will appreciate what I mean to do in writing this. What I want and pray for most is the day when our people at large shall look upon Elon in her rightful place, serving our great Church in her great program of Christian education.

Our people, as a whole, as I have found them, accept Elon as their college, but still feel no particular responsibility that they should fill her halls of learning with their sons and daughters. But I met one brother who had been a member of the Christian Church for thirty years, I suppose, who had a daughter prepared to enter college, and when I talked to him of Elon he said, "I haven't anything against your college."

In Eastern Virginia there is a strong tendency towards State institutions, and I am wondering where this strongest Conference of our Southern Church is to look for its Christian leaders in the next generation. This or any other Conference cannot expect to promote the cause of the Christian Church as she should unless the coming leaders receive their education in the atmosphere of the Christian Church's college, and Elon is prepared to equip those future leaders. Mothers and fathers should feel and think Elon—the college where the development of Christian character is emphasized along with the development of the mind and body—so much that their boys and girls would naturally develop a choice for Elon as their alma mater.

I may be wrong, but I believe it to be as much a pastor's duty to direct the young people of his Church in the choice of the college where they receive their training for life and where their lives are molded for useful service, as it is to bring them into the Church. Many young people, to my own knowledge, who have been active in Sunday School and Church work, have been completely changed after spending one year in certain of the colleges where religion is not emphasized. They have become uninterested and scarcely attend Church. Parents and pastors place themselves under serious responsibilities when a young life is turned from Christian service simply because of a wrongly chosen school or college. Of all people, our pastors can help Elon most. They can keep themselves informed as to what she has to offer, and by presenting her in an attractive way to their young people as their own college. It was for our own young people that Elon was built, and should the day come when we have no college we will have no Church.

I went into one home where there was a fine young lady who is planning to enter college this fall. She, with four or five others of our own Church girls, made plans to enter an institution other than our own. As best I could I presented what Elon had to offer, and she said she was impressed. I then asked her why she had not planned to enter Elon. She replied, as a matter of fact, "Why, I had never thought of Elon." Now, some one hadn't been on his job. To my knowledge, this young lady's pastor had been on the field since she first entered school.

Surely, the future of Elon is a bright one, and we must work and pray for a keener loyalty, devotion and interest on the part of our Church at large, that she may serve our own young people. The result will be the promulgation of the kingdom's interest, and our great Church will go on with the search for truth in an atmosphere that is Christian and sympathetic and just.

Elon College, N. C.

ELON AND OUR CHURCH IN N. C.

Elon College has made, during the years of her existence and history, and is making at present, a most worthy and worth-while contribution to the Christian Church in North Carolina; a contribution that cannot be easily measured as to its value or fully computed as to its worth. At the same time, what Elon has done and is doing for the Christian Church in the Old North State is evident to all who have paused to think of this matter with an open mind. The fruits of Elon College in our denominational life in this State can be seen, felt and known in every community into which Elon men and women have gone, and there are but few communities, if any, in this great old Commonwealth that have not in some way felt the impact of the college's influence upon their life. And the larger the impact, the more keenly have the results been felt and appreciated.

What has Elon College done for our beloved Church in this good State? Many, many things. But space will permit the mention here of only a very few.

In the first place, it is known that Elon has given to our Church in North Carolian a vision the Church did not have, and never would have experienced but for the college. "Where there is no vision, the people perish." Just as truly, it may be affirmed that where there is no vision, the Church must perish. Before we had a college in North Carolina, the Church was largely without vision, and is far too much so in many places today, but what would the condition be if we had had no college? No one is able to say exactly just what the results would be, but it is safe to assert, however, that the opportunity that has been discovered and entered into would have been impossible apart from an educational institution such as we now have. Elon has given us new eyes and a larger range of vision, through which we have seen new fields, discovered larger opportunities, and experienced in a fuller sense our responsibility in the kingdom of Christ. And that vision is growing and expanding with the passing years.

A second contribution of Elon to our North Carolina work is that of a spirit of confidence and self-reliance. Whereas we once doubted ourselves and our ability to achieve, we now believe in ourselves and that we are able, through God, to carry on big things for Him. There is a spirit of assurance among us that was unknown before the day of Elon College or even in the earlier years of the institution's history. Numbers of our people can recall, and do recall, with what trepidation and misgivings our people faced the effort to build a college, and something of that spirit was still with us when we undertook to launch our Orphanage several years later. This lack of confidence in our ability to do big things was so pronounced that even after Elon's first building was well on the way, it was thought advisable by many that the undertaking be abandoned and the building sold to some manufacturing concern. But the dauntless faith and intrepidity of purpose of Dr. W. S. Long and of those who stood with him in this enterprise sent them out with an unrelenting determination, and the work gradually but surely advanced, and the college was finally opened and entered upon her splendid mission of educating leaders for our Church. With this achievement attained, a new spirit found its way among our people, and other and larger fields were entered, with the result that larger and stronger Churches began rising here and there, and along all fronts could be seen the unmistakable signs of new life and progress. Our belief in ourselves is stronger today than ever before.

A third contribution the college has made to our cause in North Carolina is that of the more efficient leadership that has been released and sent out into our Churches to man the fields and to direct the activities of the same. About everything Elon has done and is doing for the Church in this State can be traced to this source. The worth-while things that have been brought to pass because of the college's contribution to our Church life have been possible only through the men and women who are products of that institution. And Elon's work has gone forward in such a splendid way until now practically all of our Churches are under the pastoral care and leadership of men graduated from this institution. Then, too, there are scores of men and women in the ranks of our laymen who are interested and faithful and are rendering a noble and fruitful service in their local Churches. There are indeed few Churches among us now that are not in some measure the beneficiaries of this service on the part of the college. And the number is increasing from year to year, thus supplying us not only with more workmen but with more efficient workmen, through whom may be expected a more far-reaching service as the years advance.

So the work goes on. Our usefulness as a denomination, as a branch of the Church of Christ in the world, is being expended from year to year.

Basket-Ball Squad. Football, Basket-Ball, Baseball, Tennis, Track—what inspiration they add to College days!

Elon College has introduced us to other denominations, given us a worthy standing with them, and is making known to the South the fine things for which we as a Church stand. Never before has our Church in North Carolina been able to reach, serve and bless so many people, so many communities, as today. With our present Elon, our splendid Orphanage, with a number of our Churches taking firmer ground in some of the strategic centers of the State, and with increasing numbers of young men and women being sent out from the college each year trained for Christian service, we may in confidence, placing our faith in Christ, look for greater achievements in the years that lie before us. A door of opportunity swings open toward us. God give us the grace and the faith to enter this door for Him.

Burlington, N. C. G. O. LANKFORD.

ELON'S CONTRIBUTION TO LAYMEN.

Elon has been the salvation of the Christian Church not only through its laymen, but through its ministry as well. The laymen of all Churches are being awakened and are beginning to see their obligations and face the responsibility. Time was when we had a poorly educated laiety and ministry, and we are suffering as a Church today on that account.

All honor, however, to the dear old men and women who fought for and established our Church, and in many instances they accomplished more than we do today with our much-greater advantages.

For most a century we didn't try to locate Churches in the cities, and when we did we went out in some isolated corner as if we were afraid somebody would find us. We fed other Churches with our brightest men and women.

With an educated and trained laity and ministry, we are beginning to get our Church on the map. We know that the most successful business firms locate on the most prominent streets in the city. Our laymen realize we must work doubly hard to win back what we have lost. The trained Christian laymen of our Church have lacked the progressive minister, and wherever we have locate da Church in the cities, as good and as well equipped as any other Church, we have held our own and surpassed many and are recognized as a real factor in helping to win that city for God and His service.

Our laymen are realizing that we must use common sense in Church work as well as in business. If we had had this leadership fifty years ago we would have double the strength we have today. We should teach our principles more. This would make a more loyal following. We have boasted of being broad. We have been too broad to advocate the principles that we believe in and should love.

The Methodists, Presbyterians and other Churches teach their creeds to their children until they can repeat them. The loyal Baptist can tell all about immersion. But how many of our members know that the five cardinal principles of our Church have never been equaled, and offer the only basis for the union of all Christians?

Let us hope that our School of Methods, Chautauqua, and even our Elon, will give more attention to the teaching of these principles to the boys and girls of the Church, and thereby prepare them to be more useful in their local Church and more loyal to our colleges and other institutions.

Elon deserves our whole-hearted support and patronage (many of our own people don't give this), for to her we must give credit for the wonderful progress we have made in the last twenty-five years by training our ministers and laymen for greater and more efficient service.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

By H. S. Hardcastle.

MISS PATTIE COGHILL, Field Secretary

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

August 9, 1925.

Subject: "Beginning the Second Missionary Tour."

Golden Text: "He shall have dominion from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth."—Psa. 72:8.

Lesson: Acts 15: 36-16: 5.

Devotional Reading: Psa. 67.

Paul had an evangelistic heart. He had a passion to win men to Christ. While he was in Antioch, therefore, he taught and preached the Word.

Paul also had the pastoral heart. He was concerned not only with winning men to Christ; he wanted to build men up in Christ. He saw the need for training in Christian living and Christian thinking, and he also saw the responsibility that this need laid upon him. One of the chief characteristics of Paul's ministry was his emphasis on the pastoral side of his work. The modern minister might well follow Paul's example. In this day of programs and drives, it is becoming quite the usual thing to gather large numbers of men and women into the Church. But these converts—in many cases they are not even converts—must be trained in Christian ways of thinking and living, and this is just as important, in a way, as securing the decision. To become a nominal Christian and to let the matter rest there is to become no Christian at all. The last state of that man is often, if not usually, worse than the first.

"And after some days, Paul said unto Barnabas, Let us go again and visit our brethren in every city where we have preached the word of the Lord, and see how they do." Paul felt a personal interest in these brethren. He wanted to see how they did. He wanted to encourage them and to inspire them. He wanted to do this badly enough to go back to the cities from which he had been expelled and in which in some cases he had been not only persecuted but actually stoned. "Give us the courage that prevails; the steady faith that never fails."—Van Dyke. Paul was not a hireling, for the hireling fleeth because he careth not for the sheep. Paul was a good shepherd, for he was willing to lay down his life for the sheep. The world needs more ministers of Paul's type, men who will not only hazard their lives for Jesus Christ, but for Christ's flock.

Good, sincere, Christian men disagree. Paul and Barnabas disagreed as to the advisability of taking John Mark with them. Barnabas thought Mark ought to have another chance. Paul thought that his failure to stick by them on the first missionary tour had forfeited any claim on Mark's part to go with them on this proposed tour. Each man was insistent, so insistent that they could not reach a compromise, and they parted company. Barnabas took Mark and went to Cyprus. We hear no more of him historically, but his impress was felt on early Christianity, for it was John Mark, we must remember, who gave us the first gospel committed to writing, and it was Barnabas who stood by Mark and thus probably saved him to Christianity. The percentage of those who have failed in life would be less if we had more of the Barnabas type who stand by men to give them a second chance. The story of Christianity might have been different if there had not been a Barnabas.

Paul chose Silas and started on his tour of visitation. Going overland through Syria and Cilicia, and confirming the Churches, he came to Derbe and Lystra. At Lystra, he found a young man, Timotheous, or Timothy, by name—a young man well reported of in his community. Paul was a keen judge of men, and he saw in this young fellow a servant of Christ who was destined to become a leader. Inasmuch as Timothy was the son of a Greek, and in view of the fact that Paul was to come in contact with many Jews of that section, he circumcised Timothy. There is no difficulty involved in submitting to practices when there is no principle involved.

There is not a great deal of information in regard to Timothy, but what facts we do have are very suggestive. He came of godly ancestry, for Paul later speaks of the unfeigned faith that was in both his grandmother and his mother. He had had thorough religious training, for Paul refers to his knowledge of the Scriptures which Timothy had had from his childhood. He became a devoted friend and aid to Paul and served in the furtherance of the gospel even as a child serveth a father. He was very faithful in the work of the Lord. Best of all, he was a true minister, for as Paul writes to the Philippians, "I have no man like-minded who will naturally care for your state, for all seek their own, not the things which are Jesus Christ's." Timothy was later ordained as bishop of the Ephesians. Throughout his ministry, he worked with zeal and power. Timothy is typical of those choice young men who have been found by discerning men, and who because of intimate association with great men, native ability, and consecration, have risen to places of usefulness and power.

Paul, Silas and Timothy went through the cities, exercising a ministry of encouragement and evangelism wherever they went. It must have meant a great deal to the Churches to have these men teach and preach, and it is small wonder that the Churches increased in number daily.

Something to Think About.

1. It is important to win men to Christ; it is just as important to build men up in Christ; it is even as important to send them out for Christ.

2. The minister of Jesus Christ should have the evangelistic and the pastoral heart.

3. Faith in a man often helps him to redeem failures in his past life.

4. Even good Christian people will disagree, but there is no justification for hard feelings.

5. A man may not appear largely in history, but his impress is deep on the life of the age.

6. A man who makes a failure at one thing may be a success at another. Mark was not much of a missionary, but he was a great gospel writer.

7. Good home training shows in the long run.

8. A good name is more to be desired than riches.

9. The minister of Jesus Christ must see the possibilities in the lives of his people.

10. Christianity has in it a powerful appeal for youth when it is seen in its true nature and mission.

11. He who gives himself to a ministry of encouragement does a most vital thing.

12. Eternity alone will reveal all that is involved when a person is won to Christ.

men and women. They teach facts, but they teach them in such a way that God is not assumed as the fundamental conception by means of which we are to understand the world and man. No discovery that science can ever unearth will be able to heal the breach between the fundamentalists and the modernists until Christian education teaches men to find God in the processes of His universe, until Christian education convinces all men that there is no explanation of the universe except through God.

Two institutions will be offering courses of instruction in the same subject. They will use the same textbook or group of materials. The facts they present in their classes will be identical, but the result in one case will be the production of a mind thoroughly trained and appointed, but that conceives of the world as a mechanism, as a blind and unreasoning force. The other, however, will look beyond these facts and find their explanation in the immanence of God, and what the one esteemed to be a blind, mechanical process will be regarded by the other as the method by which the great spiritual Creator, in orderly procession, unfolds His mind and purpose and design in the world which He created, and over which He rules.

So long as there shall be need for a spiritual interpretation of the facts of history, of science, and of life, just so long will there be need for Christian education, with its ability to transform the powers of a man and to refashion them, so that every act and thought and aspiration of those who are truly educated will reflect the beautiful principles which we have learned to associate with the concept Christian.

ASSETS AND INCOME OF ELON COLLEGE 1924-'25.

A. M. Pullen & Co., certified public accountants, Richmond, Va., have just made their report on the assets and income of Elon College for 1924-'25. I am very glad to furnish this abstract of their audit, that the people of the Church may know what a valuable institution they have here at Elon.

Assets.

Endowment	$ 430,699.46
Plant	1,172,671.32
Total	$1,603,370.78
Income 1924-'25	82,475.56

Explanation.

The college holds $400,000.00 of Southern Christian Convention bonds, given it to add $100,000.00 to its endowment and to offset the indebtedness incurred in its rebuilding program. These bonds are not included in the above assets, though they really belong there. These bonds have not been sold. The Convention membership is asked to pay the interest on them only, for the present, and it is a certainty that they will gladly do that. Shortly, the opportunity to contribute to this good cause will be given our people.

Thomas C. Amick,
Business Manager.

"The cross did not fail; His words have not failed; the principles of His pageant of peace are the only hope of the world today. Nothing that is done with a great spiritual purpose ever fails. The prayers of a mother; the constant urging, and solicitude, they do not fail; though a son wave a palm over the grave of a fair and honored name. Some day these prayers will be answered.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

We were made to rejoice last week when Mr. B. N. Duke, of New York, sent us his check for five thousand dollars on our new building fund. Mr. Duke has always been kind and considerate of our work here and has often remembered us with checks to help us in this work. Mr. Duke has a very tender heart and has much sympathy for the fatherless ones. We wish we had many such friends as he. We could enlarge our work and reach out and help many little children who are appealing to us. We pray that God will spare this great man for many years yet to be a blessing to the needy ones and to help give a chance in life to those who are helpless.

Our Churches are giving us much encouragement on our new building funds. Our good friends of Wentworth Church, N. C., went over the top and sent it in to us in real cash. Our Wentworth people, though small in membership, are big in heart and do things in a fine way.

All the Churches that have sent in have gone over the top and some have complained that we did not ask them for enough.

We want to ask all the Churches to send in their subscriptions by August 1st, if possible, so we can tabulate and see how we are progressing. If it is not possible to do this, send it in as early after that date as possible. But let every Church have a part. CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

A STUDY OF THE PSALMS.

Chapter II.

MONDAY.

THE LORD IN THE TEMPER.

Psalm 99.

"Holy is He!" (V. 3.)

This is a psalm of four stanzas, of six lines each, the last line of each stanza, except the third, is the refrain sung by the people, "Holy is He." This makes the entire psalm of high poetic value. It is a song of praise for the fidelity of God to Israel during their vicissitudes, ups and downs, fortunes and misfortunes.

Let us now read the psalm with this fidelity and poetic beauty in mind. Partake and give thanks. "Holy is He, Holy is He; Jehovah our God is Holy." Amen.

Dear Father, we bow at the throne of our hearts and praise Thy great and good name for all Thy benefits toward us. We pray that all righteousness and justice, and equity; all nature in field and flower and flaming skies, which do keep Thy testimonies, may exalt themselves before us, and we may worship Thee with our whole hearts, and exalt Thee in all our doings. Thou art holy forever. In His name we ask it. Amen.

TUESDAY.

PILGRIM SONGS.

"Arise, ye, and let us go up to Zion unto Jehovah our God."—Jer. 31:6.

Three times a year the children of Israel attended great annual festivals at Jerusalem. They journeyed in caravans from their abode in all parts of Palestine to attend feasts.

One connot overestimate the importance of these feasts. It consisted of many days of much merrimaking and worship at the temple. They believed that God dwelt there in His holies, and the worshipers entered literally into the presence of God.

On the given day, the watchman rang out the call given in our text. Jeremiah has preserved this. Then the bands of pilgrims got together from all directions and started for Jerusalem. Isa. 30:29 tells us how they marched and sung. Psalms 120 to 134 is a charming collection of the songs they sung on the way.

One of the most beautiful of these songs is 126, which describes the conditions of the returned exiles. Their glad thanks for the home-coming are followed by their humble plea for full deliverance, and they believed that out of their present tears would spring a great harvest of joy.

Pause a while and count thy blessings. "Name them one by one." Meditate upon the many times the Lord hast brought thou out of trouble and turned thy dry places unto living springs, and give thanks.

Prayer.—Our Father, teach us day by day how never to forget that Thou hast done great things for us, whereof we are glad and give thanks. May we endure every cross with fortitude, knowing that Thou "doest all things well to those that love and serve Thee." In HisL name we ask it. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

JEHOVAH OUR KEEPER.

"I will life up mine eyes unto the mountains; from whence shall my help come."—Psa. 121.

This psalm is one of humanities' most exquisite treasures. David, who unquestionably wrote this, remembered how, when he was a shepherd hunting his last lamb, he called from the mountainside, "Whoo-ba-ba-ba!" and the lamb in the valley looked up and answered in a helpless bleat. As he seeks utterance for his own soul, like the lamb he looks unto God the Great SShepherd, and as he writes a psalm for the pilgroms approaching the city he puts it in these words. As the people approach the city upon the hill, they sing this song. Read it now and approach God's altar in thy prayers in that worshipful spirit. As they contemplated going in and out the temple for many days, they knew He would keep. Thus the last line.

Prayer.—In Thy name, our Father, we dedicate our lives to Thee this day, humbly praying for power to look to Thee all day, who art our strength and salvation. In His name. Amen.

THURSDAY.

THE OPENING SONG.

Lesson: Psa. 100.

They have entered into the temple now, and as they ascend to the altar and the services begin with processional songs, the choir calls on the whole earth to sing. When done, the last two lines of the psalm are taken up by the people and sung as a refrain. They sing, "Jehovah is good. His lovingkindness endureth forever, and His faithfulness unto all generations." Let us put ourselves as about to worship God, and now read the psalm aloud and give thanks.

Now hear the priests address the people, exhorting them to obey God's commands with a true heart, that their festivities and devotions may be acceptable unto Him. And now the celebration has begun.

Prayer.—Our Father, give us a yearning desire to serve Thee and to come into Thy presence with joy. In His name we ask it. Amen.

FRIDAY.

THE BEAUTY AND GLORY OF THE TEMPLE.

The pilgrims have now entered the city and are within the courts of the temple. To a great many, this is the first time they ever saw it. They had heard much of it, and now they beheld it with their own eyes. With mingled joy and awe, they enter the temple and meditate upon the kindness of God and make their vows to Him. They walk around and look at everything, each tower and gate, each bulwark and palace, the decorations and ornaments, jewels and chalices, symbols and seraphim; for each had a story all its own which they were glad to know at first-hand and which they must tell to their friends, and especially to their children when they get back home.

Psalm 48—let us now read it. This is what they sang. Compare Psalm 84.

Prayer.—Dear Lord, dwell Thou in the temple of our hearts now. Make known Thyself unto us in the midst of our dwelling-place. Give unto each of us the experience that we have seen Thee, and to each a longing to live in Thee now and forever. In Christ's name. Amen.

SATURDAY.

Lesson: Psa. 122.

And now the feast is over. Their worship has been completed. They are leaving the temple and the city, homeward bound. As they go on, we hear them singing, "Pray for the peace of Jerusalem. They shall prosper that love Thee. Peace be within Thy walls and prosperity within thy palaces. Brethren, peace be within thee." For the sake of the temple and all that it meant to them, they would follow the precepts of the temple all their days.

Now, let us read the psalm, and then read again the 6th to the 9th verses. This is the song David wrote for their devotion and praise as they departed from the feasts. Do we have benedictions like this for conclusions of our worship?

Prayer.—Dear Father, make us glad to go to Church and the sanctuary and dwelling-place of the Lord. Transform our hearts from all that we lack to living fountains of blessings for God and humanity. Amen.

SUNDAY.

LOVE FOR JERUSALEM.

Lesson: Psa. 137.

We can hardly get an adequate conception of the love that the Israelites had for Jerusalem. Even the songs they sang did not express it. When God fills the heart, it is impossible to express the ecstacy and thrill of it. Yet at this feast they experienced the power of common worship that bound them together with one another and with God. The great festival, songs, music and sacrifices had made lasting impressions on them. So with profound devotion, they joined in the singing as they marched along toward home, "If I forget Thee," sang they; "O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her skill, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth."

Let us now read the psalm.

Prayer.—Our Father, deeply root our faith and our delight in Thee and center our affections in Thy love. Amen.

A MIGHTY WORD FROM THE PRESIDENT.

President Calvin Coolidge was addressing, the other day at commencement, the graduating class of the United States Naval Academy, when he said something that all of us Americans, along with the rest of mankind, ought to eat, devour and inwardly digest:

"I am not unfamiliar with the claim that if only we had a sufficient military establishment no one would ever molest us. I know of no nation in history that has ever been able to attain that position. I see no reason to expect that we could be the exception. Although I believe thoroughly in adequate military preparations, what I am trying to argue is that they are not sufficient unto themselves. I do not believe the American navy can succeed if it represents much more than that. We must place it on a much higher plane. We must make it an instrument of righteousness. If we are to promote peace on earth, we must have a great deal more than the power of the sword. We must call into action the spiritual and moral forces of mankind."

REFUGEES IN GREECE.

The Greek government, recognizing the vital importance of the workshops prompted largely through the efforts of the American Friends of Greece for the rehabilitation of the refugee women by giving them employment and finding a market for their products, recently offered the organization a plot of land, formerly part of the royal palace grounds, in the center of Athens, on which to erect a building for a training school, special workship, warehouse and sales-room.

Because of advantages enjoyed by the American Friends of Greece, such as the free service of Mr. W. S. Thompson, architect, volunteer labor and building material at cost, it is estimated that this building can be erected in harmony with its surroundings at a cost of $25,000 to $30,000.

The establishment of such a plant will go far toward giving unity and permanence to the constructive service being carried on by the American Friends of Greece through workshops located in refugee centers.

It is regretted that no funds are in hand for the purpose. Effort is being made to secure funds that will justify the organization in accepting the proposal of the Greek government.

Kiddies' Korner

MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT, Editor.

"The songs we sing, and the smiles we wear
Make the sun shine everywhere."
And, Kiddies, try this one, too—

"Smile a smile!
While you smile,
Another smiles,

And soon there are miles and miles of smiles;

And life's worth while
If you but smile."

But here's something to do that will make you happy all the day; here it is, dears:
"Are you almost disgusted with life, little man?
I will tell you a wonderful trick
That will bring you contentment, if anything can:
Do something for somebody, quick!

"Are you awfully tired with play, little girl?
Heavy, discouraged and sick?
I'll tell you the loveliest game in the world:
Do something for somebody, quick!

"So whenever you find yourself feeling blue, Something for somebody else, go do!"
Now, listen, Dears:

The summertime is here, and we are all feeling too tired every day to play; we feel too tired to sing; we feel too tired to rest—ha! so go swimming, quick. Take your little neighbor along that hasn't been swimming yet; make him happy all over—do something for somebody quick, and pretty soon the clouds will bring a wonderful little rain, and the earth will seem all fresh again.

How would you like to write me a vacation letter? Please do take your paper along with you this year, but don't do as the little girl who took her paper last vacation and forgot her pen and ink—now, how's that! Good-by vacation Kiddies.

Your editor,
MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT.

FOR EVERYTHING.

For the fruit upon the trees,
For the birds that sing of Thee,
For the earth in beauty dressed,
Father, mother and the rest,
For Thy precious loving care,
For Thy bounty ev'rywhere.

For our comrades and our plays,
And our happy holidays;
For the joyful work and true
That a little child can do;
For our lives but just begun,
For the great gift of Thy Son.

—Mary Mapes Dodge.

MOTHER AND CHILD.

Mother, why can't I see the wind
When it scatters the leaves and blows my hair?
I think I can find it by looking behind,
But it never is there.
Mother, why can't I see the wind?

Dear child, to understand, give me your hand and watch it move.
That much you see, but not the power that made it come to me.
Hidden, this power behind;
Hidden, the wind that blows your hair;
But now you know some things we can be sure of
Which do not show.
O God! how close art Thou,
Though hidden now beyond our sight;
Bless us, we pray, and bid Thine angels
Guide us day by day.

—May Elton Davies.

SOMETHING TO DO.

Into Thy loving care,
Into Thy keeping,
Thou who art ev'rywhere,
Take us while sleeping.

Let Thine almighty arm
Closely enfold us;
Nothing can hurt or harm
While Thou dost hold us.

HISTORY OF ELON COLLEGE.

then engaged to survey the land given to the college, establish boundaries, secure deeds, make a plat of the village, showing campus, streets, etc. Early in the spring of 1889, the trustees met in Graham, and the provisional board reported its action, signed by W. S. Long, J. P. Barrett, and G. S. Watson. The report stated its action in detail, and after explanation was endorsed. The trustees directed the provisional board to procure a charter and to go forward with the work of getting funds and erecting suitable buildings. The president of the college then committed the work of teaching into the hands of the other members of the faculty, placing Dr. J. U. Newman at the head and devoted his entire time to the work of putting up college buildings.

The first subscriptions were made by W. S. Long and W. W. Staley. The first public appeal for funds for the institution was made at Berea, Nansemond County, Va., and resulted in raising $636.05. The first cash donation was made by John P. Bland, Pittsboro, N. C. The president, aided by Colonel J. A. Long, his brother, prepared a charter for the college, and after submitting it to the other members of the board, had it presented to the Legislature of North Carolina for its action. At this time a very difficult question arose. No name had been given the college by the Convention, and while many names had been suggested, all were too long and none were acceptable to the post-office department or the president of the Southern Railroad, Col. A. B. Andrews. Finally the president of the college presented the name Elon to Col. Andrews and the post-office department and it was approved by them. Elon, the Hebrew for oak, strength, or beauty, was suggested by the beautiful grove of oaks standing on the campus. The president wanted a name for the college that would at the same time fit the institution and be acceptable as a name for the railroad station and post-office. Thereby the college would get perpetual advertisement without expense.

The charter was granted March 11, 1889. The first dirt was dug out for the administration building by the president May 7, 1889, and on May 21, 1889, the first bricks were laid by Lizzie Jane, the youngest daughter of the president, the contractor, John W. Long, showing where to place the bricks, and in August of that year, the contractor carried her to the top of the tower, where she laid the last brick, when a large crowd that had gathered yelled and sang.

The corner-stone was laid by the Masonic fraternity June, 1889. The trustees met under the gum tree in front of the old east building and prayer was offered by Rev. J. W. Wellons. The provisional board reported its action, which was adopted. The college opened its doors for students September 2, 1890. Four years later the president resigned, having served four years after the opening of the college and three years while it was building. He was succeeded upon his resignation by Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., who served as non-resident president for eleven years, with Dr. J. U. Newman as his dean for nine years and Dr. J. O. Atkinson for the other two. Upon his resignation, Dr. E. L. Moffitt was chosen as president and served until June, 1911. Dr. W. A. Harper was chosen as his successor, and is serving at this time.

RUDD—BARRETT.

A beautiful wedding was solemnized at the home of the bride's parents, Rev. and Mrs. D. P. Barrett, 37 Concordia Street, Ponce, Porto Rico, at 8:30 Tuesday evening, June 30th, when Miss Alice Barrett became the bride of Mr. Paul Dalton Rudd, of Brown Summit, N. C. The home was beautifully decorated with roses and tropical ferns.

The bride's father officiated, the double ring ceremony being used. The bride was attired in white Georgette, carrying a bouquet of white roses and ferns. The maid of honor, Miss Regina Olyn Barrett, wore green and carried pink roses and maiden-hair fern. The bridemaid, Miss Mabel Barrett, also wore green and carried a bouquet of ferns.

The groom's attendants were Messrs. D. P. Barrett, Jr., as best man, and W. E. M. Caldwell. "Oh, Promise Me" was played during the ceremony. Only a few intimate friends were present. Immediately after the ceremony, refreshments were served.

Mr. and Mrs. Rudd sailed on the steamship "San Lorenzo" July 2d, for the States. They will visit the groom's parents and later attend the summer school at the University of North Carolina. May God's richest blessings attend them through life. A FRIEND.

TAPSCOTT—M'CAULEY.

On June 21, 1925, Mr. J. H. Tapscott and Miss Bessie McCauley, of Union Ridge, N. C., were united in marriage by the writer at his residence, Burlington, N. C., in the presence of a few of their many friends. The happy couple have many friends who wish for them a long and happy life.

APPLE.

Dora Cassie, daughter of R. O. and the late Mary Alice Huffines Brann, was born May 12, 1886, and fell asleep June 29, 1925, age 39 years, 1 month and 17 days. Early in girlhood, she united with Apples Chapel, and remained a consecrated member until death. April 11, 1909, she was united in marriage to Z. A. Apple. To this union were born five children—four boys and one girl.

Sister Apple was a member of a family of seven children—three boys and four girls; one brother and two sisters and mother preceded her in death. She is survived by husband, five children, father, stepmother, two brothers and one sister. Her suffering was long and severe, but she bore it triumphantly in the faith of Jesus Christ.

Funeral was conducted by the writer at her request, assisted by Bro. Green, her pastor, and her body placed in the Church cemetery under a bank of flowers. God bless the bereaved.

INTERNATIONAL C. E. CONVENTION.

Dr. A. B. Kendall reports from the thirtieth International Christian Endeavor Convention, which was held at Portland, Oregon, from July 4th to July 10th. The convention was attended by thousands and thousands of Christian Endeavorers from all parts of the United States and Canada. There were several representatives from foreign lands.

The theme of the convention was "Fidelity to Christian Endeavor Principles." Emphasis was placed upon the evangelistic, community and missionary activities of Churches and the part played in these programs by the Christian Endeavor Society.

According to the reports made at the convention, the Christian Endeavor movement is growing in towns and cities of North America and in foreign lands. The report made by General Secretary Edward P. Gates showed that 9,732 new Christian Endeavor Societies have been organized during the last two years. The membership throughout the world is approximately 4,000,000 in 80,000 societies.

The program for the next two years, which has been outlined, will include increased denominational loyalty and more interdenominational cooperation. A definite program to attain standards decided upon at the convention has been given for each month for the next two years. In September, for instance, the goal of the international leaders is to enroll 500,000 young people for Bible reading and Scripture memorizing. It was said at the convention that there never was a greater need than today for a more sincere study of God's Word and work.

One program definitely decided upon is to recruit thousands of young people into the Church. This recruiting will require personal effort by each Christian Endeavorer. According to the leaders, young people can best be won to Christ by young people.

The event of greatest interest at the convention was the retirement from active service of Dr. Francis E. Clark, who forty-four years ago established the Christian Endeavor Society at Portland, Maine. Dr. Daniel A. Poling, co-minister of the Marble Collegiate Church, New York, who was born in Portland, Oregon, about forty years ago, was elected president of the United Society. Dr. Clark was elected president-emeritus. In honor of his long service on a non-salaried basis, the trustees have arranged to establish what is called the Dr. Francis E. Clark Recognition Fund of $100,000, whose income will be devoted to the support of Dr. and Mrs. Clark so long as both shall live. After they have been called to higher service, the fund will be known then as the Francis E. Clark Memorial Fund, the income of which will then be devoted to the extension of Christian Endeavor work throughout the whole world.

Local Christian Endeavorers are confident that the attendance of the delegates from local societies will greatly help in the formation of new societies in this community and the recruiting of many young people not now associated with the Christian Endeavor movement.

CHURCH ORGANIZATION.

This will be a very practical study of Church management, organization and efficiency. No one textbook will be used by the class, but those having a late textbook on this subject should bring it. Do you have "The Competent Church," by Agar; "Modern Church Managament," by McGarrah; "Making Good in the Local Church," by Elliott; "Modern Church Finance," by McGarrah; "The Efficient Layman," by Cope; "Modern Methods in Church Work," by Mead; "The Way to Win," by Fisher, or any other good text, bring it with you for reference. We desire to make this course helpful if you have any need of better methods, better organization, greater efficiency, Church programs, competent officers, etc., in your Church.

GARDNER.

Mrs. Lydia Jane Gardner, wife of W. S. Gardner, passed from her labors to reward July 2, 1925, at the age of 67 years, 11 months and 8 days. She had been a faithful member of Park's Cross Roads Christian Church since childhood. A good woman has gone. She leaves to lament her going her husband, one son, Luther B.; two daughters, Mrs. Mattie L. Dorsett and Mrs. Alice Bray; eight grandchildren, besides other relatives and many friends.

May the Heavenly Father comfort and bless each of them. Burial services by the writer, at her Church, above mentioned, assisted by the pastor, Rev. J. H. Dollar. T. J. GREEN.

MURCHISON.

Died at his home, in the Pleasant Hill Christian Church neighborhood, July 1, 1925, Theodore Murchison, aged 67 years, 4 months and 9 days. He was twice married. His first wife was Emily Jane Mason. She died July 26, 1877. He and his second wife, Eliza Jane Walters, were married February, 1897. She and six children survive him.

Bro. Murchison was a member of Pleasant Hill Church, and had been for about fifty years. As I knew Bro. Murchison, he was a quiet, peaceful, unassuming man and faithful to duty as he saw it in home, Church and community.

The funeral services were from Pleasant Hill Christian Church, conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. W. S. Taylor. His remains were laid to rest in the Church cemetery. Sweet be his rest till Jesus bids him arise.

Burlington, N. C. P. H. FLEMING.

MURRAY.

Benj. Franklin Murray was born December 26, 1877; died July 2, 1925. He was caught on a saw-mill carriage and rushed on the saw, which instantly took his life. This took place near Bennet, N. C. He was twice married, and leaves a wife and six children. He was laid to rest in the cemetery at Pleasant Grove in the presence of a large congregation of people. Funeral was conducted by the writer, assisted by the pastor.

JOHN M. ALLRED.

FOY.

Sister M. J. Foy left for her home in the spirit land July 12, 1925, aged 71 years, 6 months and 28 days. She leaves a husband and many friends to mourn their loss. She was a strict member of Apple's Chapel Christian Church, and had been for many years. She had the respect and confidence of the people who wnkeher, and as an evidence of it, a great number of people attended her funeral. God bless the bereaved. Service by the writer. P. T. KLAPP.

By Rev. S. M. Lynam.

Mrs. Wilson Visits League.—

With the general public unaware of her actions, Mrs. Woodrow Wilson quietly visited the League of Nations on July 6th. She did this in order better to understand the workings of the great international power which owes its existence to her husband. Mrs. Wilson did not desire the pomp and ceremony which would surely have been hers had her coming to the Geneva headquarters of the League of Nations been announced.

To Settle Australia Scientifically.—

A plan by which 450,000 people are to be located in Australia, which needs population, has been arranged with the British Secretary for the Colonies. Thirty-four thousand families, averaging five persons each, are to be assisted by the United Kingdom to move to Australia. Australia, as her part of the agreement, is to raise a loan of 34,000,000 pounds, or about a billion and three-quarters dollars to be lent for developmental purposes. By this plan, Australia should be very well populated during the next ten years.

An Urgent Request.—

The Post-Office Department at Washington has sent out an urgent request that the sender of every letter should place his name and address in the upper left-hand corner of the envelope. This would prevent many letters from going astray, and would save the dead-letter office much labor and expense. This is an opportunity for each of us to aid the government to save money. Also each of us should be careful to write legibly the address to which we are sending the letter. If every one would do that, the saving would run into the hundreds of thousands of dollars for clerk hire.

Herrin Made Over.—

Herrin, Ill., has for years been the synonym for a bad town. The Klan and anti-Klan movements have been strong there, and have clashed in open warfare several times, and the town has been filled with murder and flying bullets. Things are different in Herrin now, according to the newspapers. The immediate cause of this change is an evangelist meeting by Howard S. Williams, popularly known as the Mississippi Thunderbolt. Most of the population of the great mining center were converted under Mr. Williams. He points to reformed Herrin as an example of what Christ can do for a town when His message is simply delivered, and His story simply told.

Defective Sight Increasing.—

According to a report presented to the National Education Association, one out of every eleven children in the public schools in American cities, and one out of every seven in the rural schools of the United States have eyesight so defective as to seriously handicap them in their school work, and this condition of things is steadily growing worse. It is high time that parents and teachers should begin carefully to conserve the eyesight of their children through study and care. Poor lighting and the wrong kind of lighting in the homes, schools and Churches is largely responsible for this alarming condition among the children of America.

Wm. Jennings Bryan Dies.—

On July 6th, William Jennings Bryan died quietly while resting in his room at a hotel in Dayton, Tenn. Mr. Bryan was three times candidate for President on the Democratic ticket, and has been for many years a power in the political life of the United States. Recently he has been the ardent champion of the fundamentalist cause, and at the time of his death had just completed the prosecution of John Thomas Scopes for the violation of the Tennessee anti-evolution law. He won this case, and Scopes was fined $100, but an appeal was taken to the State Supreme Court. Mr. Bryan was planning to go on a lecture tour immediately to take the cause of the fundamentalists before the people. He was perhaps the best-known American citizen, and his death is a distinct loss to the nation.

War on War Profits.—

In an interview given in Paris on July 11th, Mr. Bernard M. Baruch, the New York financier, outlined in detail his plan for taking the profits out of war. To this end, Mr. Baruch will give between two hundred and fifty thousand and three hundred thousand dollars to the Walter Hines Page School of International Relations in connection with Johns Hopkins University. Mr. Baruch said, in part: "My plan simply seeks, by an industrial arrangement in time of war, which will mobilize things and dollars as well as men, and which will distribute them equitably under a series of careful regulations, to take the profit out of war. Owen D. Young thought enough of this as a peace measure to propose that I erect a foundation for its study at the leading colleges of five powers. General Pershing agreed, and I have undertaken to do it. The procedure will consist of a full course of lectures explaining the plan and its workings." To take the profits out of war will be to take a long step toward peace.

Cancer Germ Discovered.—

Probably the most prevalent and dreaded disease during the past few years has been cancer. This was caused by the fact that the germ which caused cancer was wholly unknown to the scientific and medical world, and not being acquainted with the germ, it was impossible to find a cure for this disease. Dr. W. E. Gye, associated with J. E. Barnard, are the discoverers of the cancer germ. Both are Englishmen, and Dr. Gye comes from a home of poor working people. He worked for a while as a porter in a London railway station for two dollars and a half a week. With much privation and struggle, he worked his way through school and through medical college, from which he graduated in 1912. The discovery of the cancer germ does not mean a cure, nor does it mean that the disease is yet destroyed, but it does mean that a very great step has been taken in that direction. This discovery is far more important to the world than one which would result only in the taking of more lives in war. It is great to read of a discovery like this. So many discoveries of modern times have been like the other type. Peace hath its victories no less than war.

Proposes the Whipping Post.—

The alarming increase of lawlessness throughout the country, and in New York in particular, has brought forth the striking, but serious, proposal that New York restore the whipping post and the "cat-o'-nine-tails." The proposal was made by two officials of the Y. M. C. A. They gave as their reason for the proposal the fact that where the whipping post and "cat" have been tried, offenders so punished do not appear as offenders a second time. This is true, they contend, in Delaware, England, Canada, parts of Virginia and Maryland, and some other communities where that form of punishment is meted out. They declare that imprisonment is ineffective, and that violence must be met with violence.

We part company with the "Y" officials on this point, for it is very true that violence begets violence as sure as anything in the world. We must prevent crime, but we must find a new way of doing so. This brings up the question, "Why there should be crime." We must not only find out how to cure, but more important still, how to prevent crime before it occurs. Many men have been sent to prison for the wrong purpose. Prisons should not be built to punish, but to reform, to re-create men, and fit them for life which shall be wholesome. The whipping post may prevent crime (we have our doubts), were it practiced freely, but it cannot build character and so make men permanently better, and unless it can do so, we must needs beware of its dangers.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Here is hoping that some wide-awake and promising pastorate will be able to secure the services of Dr. W. T. Walters, who has resigned our Richmond pastorate, where he has done a fine work in building our Church and organizing a splendid congregation.

Mrs. M. L. Bryant, Mrs. W. V. Leathers, and Miss Stacey came direct from the great Northfield, Mass., Missionary Conference to the Elon Chautauqua, and certainly were filled with missionary zeal and an enthusiasm for missions that was delightfully contagious.

Dr. W. T. Walters, chairman, and Miss Pattie Coghill, secretary, deserve great credit for "putting on" the very successful Chautauqua at Elon last week and this. It was the "best yet," both in attendance and in interest. The more than 200 in attendance seem to be having the time of their lives.

Rev. E. T. Cotten has resigned his work at Oshawa, Ontario, to accept the pastorate of Franklin, Ohio, Christian Church, the change to take place about October 1st. Bro. Cotten is an Elon man, who has made good in his work in Canada, according to the Christian Vanguard, and we are glad to see him getting back closer home.

Dr. Roy Helfenstein, Dover, Del., gave a series of exceedingly interesting lectures at the Elon Chautauqua on "Evangelism." He explained and eloquently advocated visitation evangelism as being the most potent method of winning the unsaved to Christ. Dr. Helfenstein believes that when pastor and laymen visit an unsaved man in his home or at his place of business and make an appeal to him face to face, to give his heart to God, he will most likely yield.

Of the ministers attending the Elon Chautauqua and meeting together for a half-hour's worship period—8:30 to 9 A. M.—under the leadership of that veteran and beloved pastor, Dr. W. W. Staley, were J. U., N. G. and C. E. Newman, I. W. Johnson, Jas. Lightbourne, B. J. Earp, E. H. Rainey, F. C. Lester, C. H. Rowland, Stanley C. Harrell, O. D. Poythress, W. D. Harward, W. S. Alexander, G. O. Lankford, W. H. Denison, and possibly others whose names do not recur to us now. It was indeed good to be there, and we often wished that all our ministers were present.

Rev. H. C. Caviness, Cary, N. C., one of our capable and faithful ministers, has been for some time giving all his time to evangelistic service. He is to begin a meeting at Big Oak Church, Rev. C. E. Gerringer, pastor, with three services a day August 2d. Following this meeting, he goes to a Church near Richmond, Va., the fourth Sunday in August and the days following. September 13th, he goes to our Church at Bennett, N. C. Bro. Caviness is open for engagement in October and November for evangelistic work, but feels that he should take a settled pastorate next year. Here is a fine opportunity for some of our Churches now looking for a pastor to get a good, strong man for next year. Bro. Caviness has only been with us for a year, but has endeared himself to our people where he has preached, and is regarded by those who have heard him as a very strong, capable and consecrated preacher of the Word.

Dr. A. B. Kendall, our Christian Endeavor Secretary, Springfield, Ohio, attended the great International Convention at Portland, Oregon, July 4th to 10th, and writes most interestingly of his trip and the convention for THE SUN.

VALLEY LETTER.

The next session of the Virginia Valley Central Conference will meet at Bethlehem, on the Valley Pike, twelve miles north of Harrisonburg, six miles south of New Market. Those coming by rail from the North can take a bus at New Market; those from the South can take a bus at Staunton or Harrisonburg. R. C. Myers, Broadway, Va., is chairman of the entertainment committee. Communications may be addressed to him or to the pastor, A. W. Andes, Harrisonburg, Va.

The Conference will begin at 10 o'clock Wednesday, August 12th, and will close on Friday afternoon.

Speakers from outside the Conference are Rev. A. W. Sparks, of Everett, Pa., field secretary of the Ray's Hill and Southern Pennsylvania Conference; Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Dr. W. A. Harper, and Prof. P. J. Kernodle. Bro. Sparks has made a great success of his work in his Conference, and will tell us how it is done. The other speakers named are too well known to our people to need any introduction or commendation here. Their former visits to our Conference are a sufficient guarantee of the value they will be to us this year.

Come at the beginning on Wednesday and stay until the close of the session on Friday. Too many of our people are falling into the habit of going to Conference only one day. That may mean a nice automobile ride and one good dinner, but it is a poor way to attend Conference. Those who attend and the Churches from which they come get but little of the spirit and inspiration of the Conference in that way. And, then, the work of the Conference is often greatly hindered by delegates coming and going at all hours. Let's give the Lord's work at least a fair share of our valuable time. A. W. ANDES.

ROCKINGHAM PASTORATE.

Antioch.

Since nearly all of the medmbers of this Church live at quite a distance from the Church, the congregations at Sunday School and for preaching services are never large, but those who can attend are wide awake and full of zeal. Interest in all departments of the work has been constantly increasing ever since I have been serving the Church.

We have here a live Sunday School, with a class in teacher-training, a workers' council, etc., a young people's mission study class, and a very active Ladies' Aid Society. The Sunday School won the banner of the S. S. & C. E. Convention this year in competition with the other Sunday Schools of the Valley Central Christian Conference. The Ladies' Aid Society, in addition to its usual routine work it does in behalf of the Church, has recently furnished wall paper for the parlor of the parsonage and helped the Linville members place linoleum on the kitchen floor of the parsonage. The Antioch Sunday School is also continually increasing its monthly offerings to missions and to the Orphanage. It is to have a one-week daily vacation Bible school August 2d to 8th. Then, too, the Church has agreed to subscribe to Uncle Charlie's special building fund for the Orphanage—the amount allotted to Antioch. I believe this is one of the most spiritual Churches I have ever had the pleasure of serving.

Linville.

This is another wide-awake Church. The Sunday School, for more than a year now, has been growing by leaps and bounds, the present enrollment being 166, not counting cradle roll and the home department. The pastor organized a C. E. Society when he first took charge of this work. This society has not had very smooth sailing all the while, but interest in it, too, is gradually growing.

This Church has a Woman's Missionary Society of which she is justly proud. Our congregations are larger, by far, here than at any other point in the pastorate. The members of this Church, as well as those of Antioch, certainly do know how to co-operate with each other and with their pastor and put their knowledge into practice. In each Church, harmony, love and Christian unity prevail, and "service" is the slogan. This Church is also in a healthy spiritual condition.

New Hope.

Interest in the Lord's work is also growing at this point. A Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor has recently been organized here and is working very enthusiastically. The Sunday School, while not as large as some, is doing fine work. Several more members of this Church have recently joined the organization in the county known as Cadle's Crusaders.

Mt. Olivet.

Interest is growing here, too, and the cause of Christ is progressing well. This Church, too, has an active Sunday School and a C. E. Society. Also, Miss Verdie Schowalter, the hustling president of the Woman's Mission Board of the Virginia Valley Central Conference, recently succeeded, with a little help by the pastor and others, in organizing an active Young People's Missionary Society here, with Mrs. J. F. Louderback, of Shenandoah, as president.

The new Church building which Bro. Edward Herring is having erected and which he expects to donate to this Church and to the denomination, is nearing completion. We are planning to have it dedicated the third Sunday in August.

Beulah.

Well, we have a flourishing Sunday School running here this summer, under the leadership of Bro. O. K. Hoskins, of the Methodist Church. We usually try to have preaching services here two Sunday afternoons in each month. As to the advisability of continuing our work here, I just don't know what to say.

DANVILLE.

The revival services began at Third Avenue Church, Danville, Va., June 7th, and closed Tuesday night, June 16th. The attendance was very good at the night services. Thirty-minute prayer and song service preceded the preaching of the Word. The singing was very lively.

Rev. S. C. Crutchfield, Wakefield, Va., was present and conducted every service from the first to last. He did excellent preaching and was heard with close attention. His messages were plain and biblical. Bro. Crutchfield made some very warm friends during his brief stay.

Rev. P. T. Klapp, former pastor, was here visiting part of the time during the meeting, and aided very much by filling Bro. Crutchfield's appointments so that he could stay on a few days longer. This we greatly appreciate.

There were six professions of faith in Christ and two additions to the local Church. The Church was strengthened and encouraged by these services. While the response was not as much as we had expected, yet we believe there was some good done. For all that was accomplished we give thanks unto the Lord, who doeth all things well. L. L. WYRICK.

THE FRIEND OF PASTORS.

History, I suppose, is not a recorder of sentiment. And many of its most beautiful pages are never writ save in the hearts and memory of men. At least I do not find it in our Church records that a certain man and woman had the good fortune to know and love intimately a former pastor and his wife. This man and woman, always peace-loving, God-fearing, Church-going people became, through the most beautiful and undying friendship with that pastor, more than just ordinary members of a Church; they began to be listed among that rare number that made real sacrifices for their Church. Yes, I mean real sacrifices; sacrifices that trimmed the "nest egg" saved up for a "rainy day" whenever the husband, by some wind of adversity, might be without a position. Sacrifices that gave a full tenth in days of prosperity and then kept their giving up in days of adversity. In other words, they made a frank and full surrender of their all to Christ, and there was nothing unwholesome, weak, or unbusiness-like in their methods of doing so. They saw this pastor that they loved so much weaken and sicken and die. Their friend was dead. His widow was no less loved by them, and through the bitter months that followed, and all the years since, there has been a friendship and a faith sustaining and divine in its beauty existing between them, and what that friendship has meant for the First Christian Church is not and cannot be written into its records.

So yesterday, when Mrs. Annie Jones Speight was brought for the last time to Church and I had the sad honor of reading the last rites over her dead body, I knew that a friend of pastors had departed from among us. For this remarkable thing was true of her life: she offered every successor of Rev. M. L. Bryant a like friendship, and no pastor since his day but has had the full support and help of both herself and her husband. For months, she lay ill, and during these days I learned what the records do not contain, for so often I availed myself of the sweet privilege of her Christian culture, warm, friendly counsel, and an ever-increasing fondness and devotion to her Church and her Christ. How often she would insist on her equally devoted husband leaving her for awhile and attending services for them both.

Scores of people wept yesterday with her husband, her fine sisters and brothers, and her friends as she was laid to rest till the time when all the records shall be made known. Now it is the duty of those to whom she has intrusted a life of fine, unselfish endeavor, and a heart of sacrificing love to carry on as she did when she was here.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

A WONDERFUL REVIVAL.

A series of revival services began at Bethlehem Christian Church on July 19th, at the 11 o'clock service. The pastor, Rev. J. Frank Apple, was ably assisted by Rev. T. J. Green, of Elon College, N. C., who did the preaching; also Bro. J. B. Turner, of Burlington, N. C., who had charge of the singing. Bro. Green brought strong messages to the people at Bethlehem, which were not directly to the unsaved, but also to the Church members. Bro. Turner wonderfully brought the gospel message in song, which everybody enjoyed so much we wish him godspeed, that he will be able to lead many, many souls to Christ. Our brethren of the Men's Federation of Burlington and Hopedale manifested a splendid spirit of Christian co-operation and fellowship and favored us not only with their presence but gave us the benefit of their best musical talent in the service of song. Our people are very proud of the splendid spirit of fellowship on the part of the other Churches, many of whose members seemed to get just as much benefit from the services as did the people of our own Church. There was an excellent attendance at the services by the people of the community in general.

The Men's Federation of Burlington held a three weeks' revival at Berea Christian Church; then when our meeting began they came over to help us. During the series of meetings, both at Berea and Bethlehem, there were approximately four hundred converts and rededications; also a large number of people promised to do more definite and effective Christian work. One hundred of this number confessed during the Bethlehem meeting. There were fifty-six persons who were received into the Church during the meeting, bringing the total number of members approximately to four hundred. We trust that the influence of the meeting will go with the people who attended it and will not only enrich their spiritual lines, but will enable them to be of active service to the many who need the contact of people who are alive for Christ, for the harvest indeed is plenteous, but the laborers are few.

COLLEGE ENDOWMENTS.

Says Sam Small, in the Atlanta Constitution: "There are 163 universities and colleges in the United States having endowments of a million dollars and over. Only 24 of them are in the 14 Southern States—4 in Virginia, 5 in Tennessee, 3 in North Carolina, 2 in Alabama, 2 in Kentucky, 2 in Louisiana, 2 in Texas, and 1 in each of the States of Georgia, Florida, West Virginia and Oklahoma.

"The 24 have a total of $62,000,000 of endowments, while the endowment of Harvard University (not counting this year's great gifts) is $64,500,000—more by $2,500,000 than is owned by all the Southern endowed institutions lumped together! Isn't it a shame that it should be so?"

Mr. Small wonders why our Southern rich men and women do not leave money in their wills to our colleges. So do we—only we also wonder why they do not give it now.—Christian Evang.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN.

In the passing of William Jennings Bryan, America loses its best-known and most talked-about private citizen. The fact that he had been the nominee of his party three times for the highest office in the gift of the people, and that in each instance was defeated, did not take away from, but added to, his popularity and his power. It is difficult to account for this on any other grounds than that he was a man of deep convictions and of unquestioned sincerity and honesty. Whatever cause or issue he championed, he gave to it all the strength and power of his striking personality, his ready pen and his great eloquence. Differ from him as one might, whenever he was heard in public speech one was captured by his persuasive logic and profound conviction. Ht, at any rate, believed with all his soul in that which he advocated.

No one, so far as we know, ever questioned his sincerity or his religious convictions. Boldly and fearlessly he championed the cause of that which he regarded as fundamental and absolute, and into this he carried all the power of his great personality and his unbounded faith in God. He believed in Jesus Christ and in the Bible, and without any modifications or qualifications from his point of view he upheld and defended both. He will be greatly missed in American life and in the religious utterances of the day. It is doubtful if any private citizen of a generation is mourned so universally. At Dayton, Tenn., where he peacefully passed away, he had just finished what he regarded as the greatest legal battle of his life and had thrown himself with all his soul into the defense of the Bible and all its holy teachings. A real defender of the faith and a devout man of God has gone to his reward.

I. THE THREEFOLD WORK OF THE HOLY SPIRIT.

In presenting this subject, I will consider the same in a series of three articles—

1. "The Holy Spirit, the Sinner's Friend."
2. "The Holy Spirit, the Christian's Guide."
3. "The Holy Spirit, the Conquering Power of the Church."

These subjects practically cover the office or mission of the Holy Spirit to the world.

THE HOLY SPIRIT, THE SINNER'S FRIEND.

This subject deals with the relation of the Holy Spirit to the life that is alienated from God, and hence an enemy to God. To such a life, the Holy Spirit comes to show one that his attitude toward God as an enemy is not only an offense against heaven, but is also in direct opposition to the individual's own best interest. The Holy Spirit convicts the sinner of the meanness of sin and convinces him of his need of God's love, of His pardon, and of His power.

Near the close of Christ's earthly ministry, when he was especially concerned about the preparation of his disciples for His rapidly approaching departure, He gave them the promise of the Holy Spirit. He spoke to them of the comfort the Spirit would be to them and of the necessity of His going before the Spirit could be given. With most solicitous love, He spoke: "'Nevertheless, I tell you the truth. It is expedient for you that I go away; for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you, but if I depart, I will send Him unto you. And when He is come, He will reprove the world of sin and of righteousness, and of judgment; of sin because they believe not on me."

God's plan of salvation has for its foundation a belief in Jesus Christ. There is no salvation apart from Christ—there being no other name under heaven whereby we "can or must be saved." I believe we miss Christ's thought if we think He meant that the Holy Spirit would merely rebuke or censure the world for not believing in Him. He wanted the world to understand that the Holy Spirit, in its relation to the world, would come as a convicting and convincing power to reveal error and to show the truth. Underlying this divine purpose was the salvation of the sinner, and hence the revelation of the divine friendship for the sinner.

The Spirit was to reprove the world of sin for not believing on Christ as the light of the moral world—that is, the Spirit was to convince the sinner that he was rejecting his only hope of salvation by disbelieving in Christ.

Since Christ is the only hope of salvation for the sinner, and since the Holy Spirit was sent to help men to turn from sin to Christ who saves, the friendship of the Spirit for the sinner is unmistakably manifested. The Holy Spirit proves His friendship for the sinner by His unwillingness to leave the sinner alone, though His entreaties be often rejected. If the Holy Spirit came but once to the sinner to reprove him and to reveal to him the Christ, He would prove His friendship. But since He comes repeatedly to the sinner with a view to leading him to Christ, He shows His solicitous, constant friendship for the sinner. It is true that wherever the gospel is faithfully preached to sinners, there seems to be one supreme moment in the unbelieving heart when the Spirit presses for a definite surrender of the life to Christ; when conscience is awakened and active; and when for a time the way seems very dark for the sinner, and when the voice of the Spirit is whispering to the sinner, "Now! now! tomorrow may be too late." This is the time when the Spirit is showing His unbounded and solicitous friendship. And if His overture is rejected at this supreme moment, the result may prove fatal for the sinner, for the Spirit may never come again with such urgency. In later years the sinner's mind will go back to that supreme moment, and He will say, "Oh! if I could feel as I did once, I would decide."

In a meeting that I was conducting some years ago, there was a man who was having a friendly visit by the Holy Spirit; but it seemed that he was bound by an opposing spirit, and it seemed to him that he could not yield to the divine call. He invited me home with him one day for dinner. Before we got into the house, he began to tell me of his difficulty in deciding at that time in life. He said, "Mr. Helfenstein, if I could feel as I did when I was fifteen, I could decide for Christ so easily." In his youth he had had his supreme opportunity, and at that time he said, "Not now." But fifty years of wasted life lay between him and that supreme moment. And those wasted years had been paralyzing his power of choice for the higher things of life. But in spite of his rejection and in spite of his wasted life, the Spirit was trying to reveal its friendship to him by seeking to get him at that late time in life to believe on Jesus and accept salvation through Him. Yes, even down toward the evening-time in life the Spirit was expressing his friendship for this man with a wasted life. Oh! what friendship man rejects and turns from when he fails to listen to the voice of the Holy Spirit!

Moreover, the Holy Spirit shows his friendship for the sinner by encouraging every move toward a better life, no difference how long or how often his entreaties have been rejected. I am thinking now of a meeting I held in a school-house in my early ministry. The people seemed interested, and large crowds were attending night after night. For several days there was no definite move. And yet the Spirit was working with two men in a rather peculiar way. They were men with families. I suppose each man was forty years old. In earlier life they had passed that supreme moment when the Holy Spirit had given them such a pressing invitation to accept Christ. They were now concerned, of course, else they would not have attended the meeting referred to night after night. Finally one said to the other, "If you will go forward, I'll go with you." The challenge was accepted, and those two strong and influential men came forward and bowed at the altar.

Years after this meeting, one of these men said to me, "Bro. Helfenstein, when I went forward that night I had no more feeling than a stone, but I had not been at the altar five minutes until I had all the feeling I could take care of. God had called me by His Spirit in early life, but I had refused, and I had made up my mind if I was ever to get right with God I had better start." The Holy Spirit, the sinner's friend, was prompting and encouraging this line of reasoning.

In this same meeting there were a husband and wife, I suppose in middle life, who lived quite a distance from the place of meeting. They had not been previously attending, but one day they drove down in their sleigh to visit a friend, at whose home we had a daily prayer meeting. In the meeting that day, the Spirit began to reveal His friendship to this husband and wife by creating a desire strong enough to overcome the thought that the meeting was too far away for them to attend. So they came the next night, and the Spirit whispered, "You should get right with God." Gently did the Spirit lead this husband and wife until they came forward and knelt at the altar, where Jesus met them with His pardoning love. They lived in grateful recognition of the Spirit's friendship in leading them to their Saviour. A few months after their conversion, the husband became ill and died. But how they did appreciate the friendship of the Spirit in having led him to the Christ who gave him hope as he came down to the "valley of the shadow." That revival meeting was full of evidence that the Spirit is the sinner's friend, for many were led to Christ in the various services, and the moral and religious atmosphere of the entire community was changed.

I will give one more evidence of the Spirit's friendship for the sinner as demonstrated in this meeting. One Sabbath morning the power of the Spirit was very strongly manifest, and scores of hearts were being turned to Christ. I do not remember how many made the Christian decision and united with the Church that day, but among those with whom the Spirit was striving was a young man who, after the service, mounted his horse and rode away under deep conviction. The Spirit kept pressing the man's heart in loving entreaty so strong that, though he had gone perhaps a mile or more, he turned his horse and hastened back, hitched his horse, and hurried into the meeting-place, where some had tarried in conversation and prayer. So deeply was he under conviction that, in tears, he made inquiry if there was any one there who would pray for a sinner. He fell upon his knees at the altar and numerous prayers were offered in his behalf. He arose from the altar with a new light upon his face, and soon he rode away to his home a changed man, converted, transformed, redeemed.

Sinners never would find their way to the cross of Christ if their friend the Holy Spirit did not lead them thereto. Christianity rests its case upon the power of the Holy Spirit to convict men of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment.

The prophet Jeremiah says, "O Lord, I know that the way of man is not in himself; it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps." It was the consciousness of this fact that led Nicodemus to seek an interview with Jesus in the night hour, at which time it was revealed to him that there was no hope for him ever entering the kingdom of God unless he be born of the Spirit. It was the friendly voice of the Spirit that spoke to Saul while his heart was filled with hatred for all who called on the name of Jesus. Evidently the Spirit began to manifest his friendship to Saul as he stood guard over the clothes of the persecutors who stoned Stephen. And it may have been that the Spirit at that time whispered to him, "There is a joy in that man's heart who is being stoned that you do not have; there is a light in that countenance that you are a stranger to, and there is a peace that comes to him from heaven of which you do not know." The whole story of Saul's experience in turning from Judaism to the acceptance of the faith he once tried to destroy is not given us in the Bible. The Spirit was, no doubt, working with Saul all the time, from the day he watched Stephen as he was being stoned until that day on his way to Damascus, when he cried, "Who art Thou, Lord? What wilt Thou have me to do?" Dark were the hours for Saul as the Spirit sought to lead him into the light, but great was his appreciation of the Spirit's friendship when he received his sight and was filled with the Holy Spirit for service and guidance in the new life of fellowship with Jesus Christ, the divine Son of God. MOUNT AUBURN.

Protracted union services closed here today. The meetings were well attended and between ten and twenty converts were made. The following ministers did very helpful and acceptable preaching: Ure, of the M. E. Church; Nelson, of the Baptist; and Boyd, of the Presbyterian. Protracted meeting began at Mt. Carmel on the 19th, and Bro. Boyd was there. D. A. LONG.

TOURING TO A GREAT CONVENTION.

When I was quite a small boy, I had three washes. I have lived to realize the fulfillment of two of them, and now I am on the way to realize the third. This third wish was that I might see the Rocky Mountains. My first real stop was at "dear old dirty Chicago," and as I went about over the city, it seemed as though the old bits of refuse and waste paper and rags that I saw in abundance on many of the streets was the same that I saw there sixteen, seventeen years ago.

I would not have you get the idea that all Chicago is like that, for that would not be true. Many parts of Chicago are very beautiful and scrupulously clean. I found that Chicago was still driving ahead with all brakes off. It almost made me dizzy, used as I had formerly been to its hustle.

Visiting "Association House," the great social settlement on the north side, where I put in two happy years, I found a complete change of personnel in the workers; and as it was the slack season of the year, I found the words of the poet, with a little paraphrasing, fitted my case very accurately:

"But few were left to greet me there,
And none were left to know,
Who worked together in that place
Some sixteen years ago."

It was a very familiar journey from "Association House" to the Moody Bible Institute, that great spiritual power-house and dynamo for God. Things were not so familiar, however, when I arrived there. Great changes have taken place since I graduated from there sixteen years ago. A number of fine new buildings have been erected, in order to accommodate the increasing student body. I found upon inquiry that last year was the greatest they had ever experienced in their history. This institution has been a great missionary recruiting station, sending hundreds of young men and women out into the needy fields of the world.

I also visited the great Moody Tabernacle now under construction and which they expect to have ready for occupancy the first of October. It will be a wonderful building when completed and a fitting memorial to D. L. Moody, the servant of God, whom God so signally honored and who continues to bless the work he started before his death. So that it may be said of him, as of Abel of old, "He being dead, yet speaketh." I thought as I meditated, of the thousands of students who had been trained within those walls and who had gone out in service to the Master, and of the thousands who would be trained there in the years to come and go out into the uttermost parts of the earth, carrying the good news of God who loves and a Saviour who redeems; and as I thought of the thousands whom their lives would touch, there came afresh the thought of the responsibility of living, and influencing the lives of other humans on the way of life.

Leaving Chicago at the close of a beautiful day, I sat on the rear of the observation car and watched the great city as it faded in the distance and thought of the millions of people living within its limits and wondered how many had accepted my Christ as their Saviour and were faithfully following Him as their Lord.

The smoke from the great manufacturing plants rose in the air, and as it attained an altitude so that the rays of the western sun caught it, all its duskiness and grimness was shot through with the madder of the western sky and became reseate with the promise of that day spoken of by the prophet when the cities shall be holy unto the Lord, when on the kettles and on the bells of the horses shall be holiness unto the Lord; and may we add when all labor and all activity of men shall be holiness unto the Lord.

The journey from Chicago to St. Paul, Minn., was taken by night. My train arrived 7 A. M., and as it was not due to leave before 9:55, it gave me an opportunity of seeing some of the city. I was very favorably impressed with the city. It is clean, bustling with activity, has fine-looking business places, imposing Churches, a splendid Y. M. C. A. building, and one of the finest State capitols in the United States, being all of marble. It has a group of statuary of maidens and horses, representing their State seal, over the main entrance to the capitol. These are all covered with gold-leaf.

From St. Paul, following the route of the "star of empire," we moved on toward the city, where the great convention is to assemble, and the mind travels the airways of imagination and sees the young men and maidens starting from all parts of the globe, with the lines of their travel all converging toward, and finally focusing at, Portland, Oregon.

Just before reaching Minneapolis, the city of flour mills, we cross a river which must have been named before pre-Volstead days, for it bears the Bacchanalian name of Rum River. Well, if rum is a dirty, muddy red, then this stream resembles it in color. It is thought that Father Hennepin visited it in 1680 and named it the "St. Francis River." Too bad that it has fallen from saint-hood! This is not the first case of loss of saint-hood through rum.

We are now traveling through the great wheat fields of Minnesota, in a land of magnificent distances. Beautiful farms stretch away in the distance.

Near the town of Frazee, Minn., we pass between two lakes—Christenson on the north side, and Herold on the south. The latter lies eighteen feet below the former, but, strange to say, does not drain it. The reason: a peculiar geologic formation that will not permit. Somehow this condition reminds me of the great statement by Paul, "The flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit lusteth against the flesh, and these two are contrary one to the other, so that ye cannot do the things that ye would." Gravitation is trying to pull the water of Lake Christenson down to the low level of Lake Herold, and the water feels the pull, but it is kept by the power of that wall so that it cannot do the thing it would. So the life walled by the Spirit of God feels the tug of temptation, but it is "kept by the power of God unto salvation" from the lower levels of sin and shame.

Our great steam horse hurries us finally from the beautiful fields of Minnesota into the no-less fertile Red River Valley of North Dakota, known because of its great wheat fields as the "Bread-basket of the World."

Our train passed through the city of Mandan, N. D., late in the evening, after your humble servant had retired to rest. There is a historical incident connected with this city of great interest. When the Lewis and Clark expedition arrived at this point in 1804 they found five great villages occupied by the Mandan Indians. The explorers were at a loss to know how to get across the mountains to the westward, as they knew naught of the passes by which these great ranges could be crossed; and unless some one could be found who could pilot them there was great danger of the tour of discovery ending without their being able to reach the great northwest. Some time previous to the coming of Lewis and Clark to Mandan, the Mandan Indians had had a battle far up in the great northwest with the Shoshone Indians, and had captured a beautiful Indian girl named Sacajawea—meaning "the bird woman." She knew the passes and was prevailed upon to accompany these discoverers and show them the way. They have a beautiful bronze statue

SUFFOLK LETTER

The Scopes trial, the death of Bryan, the paper publicity given to the question of evolution seem to have agitated the public mind to the point of fear for the Bible and the "Faith of Our Fathers." The Church has passed through many similar stages of discussion and fear, but it has continued to gain in the confidence and support of mankind. More Bibles are printed and sold, and in more languages than any other book. There were never so many members of the Church as at the present time. More institutions are maintained for the insane, the deaf, dumb and blind, the epileptic, the poor, the diseased, than at any time in the world's history. The work of charity was never so well established, missionaries were never so active in educational, medical and ministerial effort as in these days of fear. "Truth crushed to earth will rise again." There is no danger for the truth; the danger is to those who deny the truth.

Let us look at some of the things that indicate the safety of the Bible and the Church. The United States' mint puts on its coin "In God We Trust." In every court throughout this great nation, witnesses take this oath: "The evidence you give in this case will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you, God." The money goes into all the channels of trade, into almost every citizen's hands. Business says, "Amen," to the government's declaration, "In God we trust." The courts of justice recognize God. One might say that order is preserved, life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness are guaranteed by belief in God. These are pretty good witnesses in the court of final appeal for Christianity.

Again, Roman Catholicism, Protestantism, in all its branches, Judaism and Mohammedanism recognize God as the Creator of the universe. It is true that the higher institutions of learning turn out the largest number of doubters, agnostics, and skeptics, but when it is remembered that only 2 per cent of the population graduate from such institutions and that not more than 25 per cent of that number lost faith in God and His Word, there is no cause for alarm. Then, for a few individual scholars to raise the question of the origin of man, the origin of the universe, and leave out God, it reminds me of one of Aesop's fables I read in Latin when I was a boy. A gnat lit on the horn of an ox and said to the ox: "If I am a burden to you, I will fly away." The ox replied: "I did not even know you were up there." The Word of God is safe. "Heaven and earth may pass away, but His word will never pass away."

The men who deny that God made man, that Christ was born of a virgin, that Jesus arose from the dead or any of the great teachings and beliefs of the Christian religion will pass away, as all men must; but Christianity will continue to increase in numbers, in wealth, in service until the world is saved. BETHLEHEM LETTER.

It is somewhat quiet in and about the college since the summer school closed. The purpose of the summer school was to meet the needs of college students, public school teachers, principals, supervisors, and others who desired to pursue courses leading to college credit; high school students, public school teachers, and others who seek admission to the college, but lack a sufficient number of high school units for entrance; those who wish to review the subjects required for the life-grade, first-grade, and second-grade teaching certificates for examination.

While the attendance was not as large as we anticipated, the work was well done by Prof. A. R. Jones, who directed the review work for teachers' examination; Prof. S. M. Lynam, who had charge of college credit work, and Mrs. S. M. Lynam, who conducted the academic credit work.

The next big thing on the program for Bethlehem College will be the Chautauqua and School of Methods, which will begin August 10th and close August 17, 1925. This summer school of religious education is conducted especially in the interests of pastors, Christian Endeavor and Sunday School workers, although many features of the work will be interesting and profitable to all who may desire to attend. The faculty is of high class, chosen because of their special fitness to give instruction in their special field. The courses are chosen and arranged so as to be helpful to all who may give their attendance and attention; so pack your grip and get ready to attend the big week of profitable instruction, pleasure and entertainment, for the small sum of 50 cents' registration fee for the whole week's performance. If you desire board and room for the week, it will cost you but the small sum of $5.00. Do not forget the time and place. Bethlehem College is situated in the town of Wadley, Randolph County, Ala., on the A., B. & A. Railroad, fourteen miles west of Roanoke. There are two passenger trains through Wadley each way daily.

Bethlehem College will begin regular work on September 7, 1925, and the attendance is earnestly solicited of all who may desire to take the last two years of academic work and the first two years of College work. S. L. Beougher.

WHY I SHOULD GO TO BETHLEHEM COLLEGE.

In considering the matter of whether or not I should go to college, the main question at issue is whether it is better to spend time in general education which has no bearing upon my special lifework before beginning a specialized training for that work, or whether it is better, in view of the fact that life is limited to a few years, to proceed at once to a specialized training upon finishing high school.

It should be obvious that I must have the specialized training in any event. There are not many occupations, outside of that of hod-carrier, where a specialized training is not compulsory. While it is still possible to enter many vocations by an apprenticeship of actual experience, the preparation which qualified one for any of the professions, and for many of the trades and business pursuits, are being given in the schools, both public and private, and these courses are rapidly being made a requisite to entrance upon the respective professions, trades and business pursuits. In farming, which formerly was considered a simple occupation, even those trained by experience feel the need of specialized training, and a large majority of modern farmers avail themselves of the courses offered by the colleges.

It might seem at first glance that since the specialized training is compulsory, that it would be expedient to cut short the period of general training to accommodate the rapidly lengthening period of specialization. A close examination of the facts prove that quite contrary is the case if we hope to attain a high degree of success in our chosen occupation and live a full, satisfactory life.

If we wish to build a tall shaft we do not plan it without a suitable foundation, and the higher the shaft we build, the broader and stronger do we make the base. We do not reason that we should save brick and mortar at the bottom because we are going to use so much as we ascend. Equilibrium is as important to the human mind as it is to brick and mortar. The higher our specialization in one subject, the more need for a broad foundation of mental development upon which it shall rest. The height of the crest of the wave depends upon the size of the base. Our possibilities of achievement in any given line depends upon our general mental development, and the college courses are designed to supply that development.

There was a time in the world's history when all activities were physical, and men used their hands to supply their needs, and the work of the hands depended upon the general bodily vigor. In modern times our abilities to succeed in life depend upon the development of our minds. The word education is from the Latin, and means to "draw out"; hence it is not something added to our store of knowledge for which we have no use in our chosen vocation, but a drawing out of our latent possibilities, a bringing to life of dormant mental abilities to support and sustain our specialization.

As to lack of time for a college education, observers have proved that the college training is a saving of time ultimately. The young men and women who go to college find themselves upon the beginning of their career in the world apparently four years behind their companions who have entered the world upon finishing high school. In another four years, however, the college graduates, in the majority of cases, have overtaken the high school graduates and are ahead in the game with much greater prospects. The positions at the top are open to "college graduates." Many firms and business concerns, in selecting employees for any job worth while, prefer, and even require, the college degree. There are many "self-made" men in the world, but a close study into the lives of most of them reveal the fact that they were students, and those who succeeded without a broad foundation of knowledge are conspicuously few.

Enough has been said to show that, as a general proposition, a college education is a distinct advantage materially, even though there are many college graduates who are and will always be poor, while there are some rich people who never went to college. There are other things which a college education brings into our lives besides material gains. We do not seek money in this life, but success and satisfaction. If these can be gained without money, it is merely a short cut to the goal. We want social standing, friends, respect, the admiration of our fellow-men, good homes, love, and the opportunity to engage in the work which we most enjoy. In the attainment of these things, a college education can help us more than any money which we are liable to make, because few of us are destined to ever become rich.

First State Bank of Wadley, Ala.

There are many pleasures dependent upon the attainment of wealth of fame, but the greatest pleasures are those dependent upon a cultivated mind, trained and developed as that it can appreciate the best there is in art, literature, music, and what is more important, the best there is in humanity. It is a pleasure to understand and sympathize with our fellow-beings, and understanding and sympathy are a matter of individual development. For that reason, I should give myself every opportunity for development in order that I may enjoy the greatest satisfaction in life.

The difference between the race we found upon this continent with its primitive tools and its primitive ideas of the world and the universe, and the present civilized American race, is largely a matter of education. The Indian race is not "inferior," but merely under-developed. The rapid development of these so-called inferior races under a system of education has been one of the marvels of our present era of civilization.

What education will do for races, it will do for individuals, for the individual is the type of the race. And, therefore, in order to enlarge my sphere of usefulness and add to the enjoyment and satisfaction which I may get out of life, I should go to college, remembering that, whatever may be said to deter me, it will likely be said by one who has not gone, and that while there are many who regret that they did not go to college, there are none who regret that they did.

BETHLEHEM COLLEGE ANNOUNCEMENT.

This college is located at Wadley, Randolph County, Ala., on the A., B. & A. Railroad and on the Tallapossa River.

The purpose of the college is born of the desire on the part of many earnest Christian men and women of those sections of Alabama and Georgia touched by the Christian Church to see developed in their midst a higher and stronger leadership in the Church, and in turn a higher type of Christian citizenship; and while it is fostered by the Christian Church, it is in no sense sectarian in its aims and purposes. The one aim and object of the college shall be the development of Christian character and the fitting for service of those who shall become students here.

There are four Churches in Wadley, namely: M. E. North, M. E. South, Baptist, and Christian. Students will be required to attend some preaching service every Sunday and Sunday School of their choice. Christian Endeavor Society is in operation throughout the year, and it is hoped that students will take advantage of this opportunity for Christian fellowship and association. Daily chapel services will be conducted in the college auditorium, and all students are required to attend.

The policy of the college and final disposition of all matters of government and administration of the college are vested in the faculty, who will meet at the call of the president and pass such regulations as they deed wise and necessary for the welfare of the institution.

The purpose of government will be not merely to maintain discipline, but to cultivate Christian character, grounded of firm principles of right, a high sense of duty, honor, and propriety, and an earnest love of the truth.

The college department maintains the following schools of instruction: biology, chemistry, Christian education, domestic science and art, business, education, English language and literature, geology, history and social science, mathematics, physics, romance languages and literatures, expression and public speaking, practical mechanics and music.

The academy offers the following courses in mathematics, science, language, history, social science, agriculture, home economics, normal, and music. Certificates of graduation will be given those who have satisfactorily completed the four-year standard Alabama high school course.

Diplomas of graduation will be given those who have completed in a satisfactory manner the regular two-year college course, which requires sixty semester hours of college work.

Cirtificates of proficiency will be given those who have completed one of the special courses in music or commercial work.

The school year consists of nine months of four weeks each, and five days constitute a week. The year is divided into two terms of eighteen weeks.

The cost for the college department for the year: tuition, $50.00; matriculation fee, $10.00; room in dormitory, with heat and light, $30.00; board in dormitory, $157.50; athletic fee, $3.00—total, $250.50.

Expenses for the academic department: tuition, $25.00; matriculation fee, $10.00; room in dormitory, with heat and light, $30.00; board in dormitory, $157.50; athletic fee, $3.00—total, $225.50.

College organizations consist of two literary societies, college class organizations, glee club, and college band.

Bethlehem College allows intercollegiate and academic athletics on the part of its young men, for it is believed that in well-regulated athletics is found the best solution of all the problems of rational and effectual physical training. All athletics will be under faculty supervision.

Girls have choice of rooms in the order of application, if a registration fee of $5.00 is sent with it; this will be counted out of first payment made on fall term. All desiring rooms reserved should send registration fee at once. School will begin September 7, 1925. This is your school; we will look for you on opening day.

S. L. Beougher.

ADVANTAGES OF A JUNIOR COLLEGE.

Economy: The junior college offers an opportunity to students of limited means that the larger institutions cannot afford. A student at Bethlehem can do two years of college work for less than half the cost for the same work at larger colleges.

Opportunity for Leadership: The student, while doing the first two years of college work at a junior college, is an upper-classman. He has an opportunity for leadership, and is not swallowed up in the crowded conditions of the large freshman class at college.

Close Association with Teacher: In a junior college, the students have a better chance to know the teacher and profit by the constant association. The teacher is the college.

Encourages to Best Effort: Only a small per cent of those who enter a four-year college ever graduate. In a junior college, with its two years at reasonable cost, the student is not only encouraged with the prospect of graduation, but also enjoys the inspiration and dignity of a place among the upper-classmen throughout his entire college career. S. L. Beougher.

If you are too busy to read a whole book this week, suppose you just turn to the 107th Psalm and get acquainted with one of the noblest prose poems available anywhere in our English tongue—not over-looking that quaintly beautiful and touching old Elizabeth phrase, "the loving kindness of the Lord." No word in common use in our language today seems to convey quite the meaning of that expressive term, "loving kindness," that we have unfortunately let fall into disuse.—Clarence Poe, in The Progressive Farmer

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

STEWARDSHIP AND PROMOTION.

WARREN H. DENISON, D. D., Secretary.

It will be of interest to know some things about the stewardship work of the United Brethren Church. They are a good people, doing splendid work, ever seeking after the best ways and methods. They have just recently held their quadrennial session. We give quotations from the report of the board of administration as to their recent actions. You will see in how many ways their plans harmonize with ours and make emphasis of the things we are stressing.

"Ninety-eight per cent of the pastors and laymen from different sections of the Church who recently expressed themselves voted in favor of the budget and the every-member canvass as the best method of supporting our local Church interests and the benevolent causes." May we not have nearly 100 per cent of our Churches using these two best plans—a Church budget with both parts and a real every-member canvass each year?

"The General Conference recommended that special days be observed to give information about the work our denomination is doing through its benevolent activities, and . . . that cash offerings be lifted on such days to supplement the payment of pledges taken during the every-member canvass." Opportunity should always be given to supplement ordinary giving on the occasion of educational presentation of needs.

"A Church-wide canvass at the same time—instead of conducting the annual every-member canvass at different times in different Conferences, as in the past. The General Conference voted that there be a simultaneous every-member canvass throughout the denomination during a certain week." We congratulate our neighbors on that step. This writer here and now desires to go on record as favoring that plan for the Christian denomination. We have studied this matter long and from every possible angle. We know! and we believe that our next Convention should adopt that plan. It does not matter when your Church year ends, or your Conference year, or our denominational year; it does not matter whether you call a pastor or hire a preacher. There is no real reason that we can think of that should stand in the way of such a denomination-wide plan. We commend it to our leaders. There are many reasons for it.

Highly Favored.

We are highly favored in this office by stewardship secretaries and pastors who are thoughtful and kind in sending us samples of their stewardship literature such as series of letters sent out preparatory to the every-member canvass, sample budgets, monthly and quarterly statements sent to the Church membership. This is greatly appreciated, for it helps us to be of larger service to other Churches. We find many good ideas; we note some weaknesses. No point in any of those letters, leaflets, statements should be given out hurriedly. Some times we get help, and at times we could have made helpful suggestions. What an improvement is going on among our Churches just in the matter of making the budget alone! We have issued a leaflet on "The Local Church Budget" which may be had free on request. Thank you for the samples.

There Is a New Day.

In the Christian Church there is a new day as to the matter of tithing. Tithing experiences come to us from every section and from our active workers. Stewardship secretaries and pastors should preach and teach its joy, duty, privilege. This week we have a message from one of our strong Illinois farmer tithers, Bro. W. S. Sanford: "After twenty-five years' experience in tithing, I can recommend it as a very satisfactory way to meet our financial obligations to God. With a little practice, it is very easy to give one-tenth. Nine-tenths of one's income used systematically goes further in business than all of it does without system." Do you actually tithe? If so, we want your experience.

EDUCATION IN SOUTHERN CONFERENCES.

BY REV. S. M. LYNAM.

The need of men constitute a genuine call for service. The building of Bethlehem College, in the Southern Conferences, was in response to a need, a call. The opportunities of Bethlehem are unlimited, save by the money which is placed at its disposal. The task is great, but there is joy for those engaged in its doing. The response of the boys and girls is worth more than money, and the type of students justifies the noblest efforts of the Christian Church.

What Bethlehem Is Undertaking.

Bethlehem College is undertaking to serve the two Conferences of the Far South; but it is doing more—it is undertaking to serve the community in which it is located and those which surround it, without regard to denominational affiliations. The college has a high purpose, and the highest purpose belongs to the Christian college. The college must set the standards of culture and refinement. It must uplift the community as well as its students. It must furnish for the community a cultural life. The Christian college must, by its influence, build a community character. All these things Bethlehem is undertaking to do.

The music department, by recitals, is seeking to create a taste for the best in music, and the dramatics are seeking to furnish the most wholesome entertainment for the town of Wadley and the surrounding communities. Through its faculty members, the college is reaching out far beyond the immediate Conferences, seeking to spread the gospel of education through the Conferences and the community.

The college is to throw open its doors to the Chautauqua and School of Methods, and so is helping to render a genuine cultural service as well as to prepare leaders for our Southern work.

The Problem.

This new college in the Far South is not without its problem. It is the problem of every new institution. The problem is a financial one. Bethlehem is seeking to erect another building just now, and that building must be built with the small change. But a college built so will hold a place in the hearts of those who give to build it. Bethlehem seems to have the good will of the Southern Church, and to retain that good will is the aim of those who control its destiny. Friends are better than dollars, however important dollars may be. The Conferences have voted four offerings each year to the college, but many of the Churches and pastors seem to have forgotten that decision of the Conferences. If every Church in the Southern field would attempt to live for just a little time outside its four walls, the Church, the Conference, and certainly the college would find many of its most perplexing problems solved. From the Southern Church, Bethlehem must have more than mere professions of devotion and loyalty. Spoken expressions are good, but expressions which the bank will accept are far more tangible and will aid far more potently in the solution of Bethlehem's chiefest problem. We can get the students could we care for them, and could we get the money we could meet every requirement of the Church and the community; without, the college is of necessity seriously handicapped.

The Outlook.

Nothing could be more promising than the outlook of the Church's educational interests in the Far South if the leaders of the Church can be brought into full co-operation with the institution which the Church has placed among them. There is a need of acquaintanceship between the college and all the individual Churches. The faculty of the college during the past year was almost wholly a new faculty, and yet they managed, in spite of their heavy work, to visit as many of the Churches as invited them, and made possible a way for them to reach the Church. The faculty members are willing to make any sacrifice to bring about this acquaintance which is needed, but each individual Church has a responsibility in the matter. When the age of the college is considered, the response has been a hearty one, and with the passing months it has grown in warmth.

The task is large, the responsibility heavy, the means of accomplishment woefully limited; but, in spite of every obstacle, the outlook is bright, and, like the rising sun as it guilds the sky for a new day, it steadily brightens, because the college is steadily winning the love and loyalty and material support of the people of the Church which has fostered it. Having begun the task, we dare not turn from it. We must press forward, surmounting every difficulty, for the Christian Church, so far as the educational interest in the Far South is concerned. "Over the Alps lies Italy," and there must be no Alps.

TOURING TO A GREAT CONVENTION.

of Sacajawea in the city part at Portland.

How wonderful is history when you read it as His story. God's hand leading in the capture of this Indian maiden, carried hundreds of miles from her home that she might become the guide of the men who should open up this great northwest to the white man and the religion of Jesus Christ. Some might call this a happy coincidence. I love to think of it as a gracious providence.

I trust that our Christian Endeavorers in this materialistic, scientific and pseudo-scientific day in which we live may keep the faith of a Providence who shapes and guides the lives of those who trust Him, burning with undimmed light in their hearts.

We note that our guide-book says the next place is Bighorn, Mon. Instantly we think of that noble, daring yellow-hair chief, General Custer, and his brave men who, at the battle of the Little Bighorn, in 1876, laid down their lives, far from home and loved ones, hemmed in on all sides by a howling cordon of mounted savages, who circled about them in a whirl of death, shooting their deadly arrows until not one of that noble band was left alive.

It was at this place (Bighorn) that Gen. Gibbon crossed the Yellowstone River with 450 men to aid Gen. Custer; but he was too late, the battle was already lost when he arrived at Bighorn. It might have been a different story in the history of our nation if Gen. Gibbons had been a few hours earlier.

Christian Endeavorers, the Church, your local Church is in a great battle against the hosts of sin and death, and needs the strength of your young lives to help it win the victory. Awake now before it is too late and the battle that might have been won is lost forever.

As I said in the beginning of this article, when a boy I had three wishes. I am going to tell you what they were. First, I wished that I might be a tall man. To those of my readers who know me, it is needless to say that I got that wish. Six feet three and one-fourth inches is at least above the average. The second wish was that I might see the Atlantic Ocean. I have had that wish fulfilled a number of times. The third was that I might be permitted to see the Rocky Mountains. We have passed Columbus, Mont., and away to the west, one hundred miles distant, I see the rugged, snow-tipped, beautiful range of the Crazy Mountains, the first view of an outlying range of the "Rockies." It thrills me in a strange way as I realize that my third wish had been fulfilled, and I cannot but feel a sense of exultation but it is soon succeeded by one of shame, and I say to the yesterday of myself, "O foolish boy! Why did you not wish for some really great thing for God and humanity? Would not God have brought it to pass even as He has the granting of those wishes of so much lesser importance? Boys and girls, young men and young women of the Christian Church, when you wish, wish big things for the glory of God and the blessing of mankind.

Our route parallels the majestic Yellowstone River for many miles from this point until we lose it at Livingstone, Mont. It is here that it meets the Northern Pacific as it comes down through the great canyon of the Yellowstone.

The mountain scenery at Livingstone is very beautiful. The snow-clad Rockies bathed in an exquisitely beautiful haze of delicate lavender, shading down into violet, and purple and blue in the lower reaches, lie all about us. And my heart paraphrases that exclamation uttered by the psalmist long ago, "As the mountains are round about Livingstone, so the Lord is round about His people."

All this territory about here is rich with history of battles fought with the Indians by Generals Miles, Terry, Custer, Gibbon, Crook and others.

At Muir, Mont., we enter the Bozeman Tunnel, 3,654 feet long, 5,592 feet above sea level. This is the highest point reached by our train on the trip Bozeman tunnel cuts through under the pass crossed by Lewis and Clark, guided by Sacajawea in 1806.

Our train sweeps through the jaws of a rocky canyon, and we find ourselves in the beautiful Gallatin Valley, which stretches in unbroken loveliness of fertility for miles in every direction. Great fields of grain, and sugar beets, and corn greet our eyes.

Beyond the Gallatin Valley we find ourselves in the mountains once more; and at the little town of Clarkston we see our first and only evidences of the earthquake about which you have been reading in the papers. Here are two great steam shovels and a wreck car with derrick. They have lifted some large boulders that had been shaken down by the earthquake onto the track, and rolled them down the bank toward the river. As you look up the almost perpendicular side of the mountain through whose base the railroad has cut a right of way, and notice the great masses of rock weighing tons, seemingly loosely poised, ready for a deadly leap at the slightest provocation, you involuntarily breathe a prayer of thanksgiving that your train was not in that particular spot at the time of the earthquake, and another petition that the earthquake may not decide to visit that particular locality before your train gets out of there. Clarkston is rather unique, in that the only way one can get in or out of there, unless one walks, is to come in on the train. So rugged are the mountains on all sides that no wagon road can be constructed in there. As I meditated on that fact, I thought what pleasant experiences, what helpful ministries Clarkston is deprived of because it is so walled in by these great, cold, stony mountains. Such, I thought, is the selfish, sinful life. It shuts itself in with cold, gray, insurmountable walls of selfishness and the blessed influences from God and from other lives cannot penetrate to its fastnesses, neither can it get out in helpful ministry to others. Young people sometimes get the erroneous idea that the Christian life is narrow and binding, and that the sinful life is the free, broad life. In one sense, that may be true; but in the sense of real liberty, and breadth, and captivity, and narrowness, it is just the reverse. The Christian life is the free, broad life, while the selfish, sinful life is the narrow one.

One of the most beautiful sights of the whole trip was seen at Lake Pend Oreille, Idaho. I think my guardian spirit, knowing my love for the beautiful in nature, must have awakened me that morning at about 4:30. Lying in my berth, I threw up the shade and looked out upon as beautiful a sight as I believe I had ever seen. A beautiful lake, one of the largest inland freshwater lakes in the United States, it being fifty-five miles long and from two to fifteen miles wide, stretched before me. The mountain rose majestically, with a sheer, precipitous cliff twenty-five hundred feet above the lake. High mountains towered in every direction. The early rays of the morning sun had tipped their crests with a warm rose tint; this deepened down the sides of the mountain, changing from a light lavender into violet, and farther down the sides into a dark purple. The lake, whose gently undulating bosom seemed alive and glorious with the opalescent hues caught from the skies and mountains, was dotted here and there with fir-covered islands of a wonderfully rich dark green.

As I feasted my eyes on this beautiful vision of the dawn, the words of the psalmist came with new meaning and emphasis to my soul, "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament sheweth His handiwork."

Our splendid train soon swept us across Idaho and into the State of Washington. At Pasco, we left the train that had brought us so safely and pleasantly so many miles and took another road for a 231-mile ride, nearly all the way down the great Columbia River into Portland.

I wish I could describe that wonderful trip with any degree of justice to its beauty, but I cannot. My vocabularly breaks down, goes bankrupt at once in the attempt. I wish I could take my brain and pass it on as a movie reel to you and have the impressions I received thrown on the screen of your thought; but I cannot do that.

Those wonderful rose, crimson, lavender, violet, purple, indigo mountains, with their bold, lofty turreted castles and rocky ramparts, many of them absolutely devoid of vegetation, stark, arid, barren with the exception of here and there a clump of sage brush. Sometimes their great rounded outlines made you think they were sleeping giants who had been sleeping for ages.

As our train swept us down through this part of the journey, I had the strange feeling that I was not in the United States, but rather that I must have been magically transported into some great desert, mountainous land in Africa. Here and there were cases of green where some farmer had managed to get water enough to irrigate a patch of land and build his home. This whole region is barren, not because it is infertile, for it is wonderfully fertile; it is non-productive and desolate because it does not get water. There is water supply in abundance flowing nearby, but it does not get it. My sympathy went out to those barren mountains as to a living creature, and I wished I could cry out to them, "Oh, desert mountains, I will bring you the waters of the great Columbia and I will assuage your thirst and baptize you with a baptism that will crown you with fruitfulness and make you to laugh with wonderful orchards and fields of billowing grain.

And so, I think, Jesus, looking down upon our lives so full of possibility and yet so arid and unfruitful, must yearn with a longing infinitely more intense than any longing that possessed me at that time, to baptize us with that Spirit, the water of life, that shall quench our soul-thirsts and make the desert places of our lives to blossom as the rose.

A gentleman on the train who lived in Oregon said that back of those mountains were some of the most wonderful wheat fields in the world. Occasionally we could see them peeking down over the mountaintops, the green and gold of their skirt hems showing vividly against the purple of the mountains. Farther down, the mountains were royally garbed in oak, and fir, and pine, and cedar.

If I had the money, I would like to run a railroad, the trains of which would have no regular schedule, but would stop anywhere to let passengers who so desired get off and stay off as long as they desired to study every strange flower and bird and tree and bush and geologic formation that the passenger might wish to study. I wished for such a train again and again on this trip. Suddenly my heart was somewhat comforted, as I thought: why wish for such a train; you have a Ford?

Across the river from us we saw beautiful Multnomah, Wahkenah and Horse Tail Falls.

It was on this latter part of the trip that we got our first view of that inspiringly beautiful mountain, Mt. Hood.

I have searched through all sorts of views of Mt. Hood, but still have to see a picture that does justice to its majestic, chaste beauty. It rises, with its snow-covered sides, like a great marble cone 11,228 feet above sea level. We saw it a number of times, and then the mountains would hide it from our view, and each time we saw it it seemed more wonderful to me.

At last tired, but happy from our varied experiences, we arrived at the beautiful Rose City of Portland. We are just a little too late to see the roses in all their beauty, but enough remain to lead us to realize to some extent how beautiful they must be when at their height.

My next paper will tell of the great convention at Portland.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

August 16, 1925.

Subject: "Temperance Lesson."

Golden Text: "Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."—Gal. 6:7.

Lesson: Gal. 5:13-24.

Devotional Reading: Prov. 23:29-35.

We Americans boast of our freedom. We do have a large measure of freedom, and we should rejoice therein. But we must not forget that a man who is free politically may be a most abject slave in bondage. It was no less an authority than Jesus Himself who said that whosoever committeth sin is the bondservant of sin. No man is free until he is master of himself. And no man can be master of himself unless he is set free from sin. "If the Son shall set you free, then shall ye be free indeed." It might be said in a paradoxical way that the man who is in bondage to Christ is freest of all men.

Now, the Galatians were rejoicing in Christian liberty. They had been set free from the law by Christ. But, like so many people, they could not stand freedom, and they were using their freedom for license. Perhaps it is not too much to say that one of the main reasons why women are smoking so much today is because it is one way they think they can assert the "new freedom" that has come to them. They are using their liberty for license. They would do well to heed Paul's advice. Let them rejoice in their freedom, but let them not use that freedom for license. They, and we, are to use our freedom through love to serve others. Here is a vital truth in Christianity. Jesus Christ releases men from the bondage of law and evil habits and sin. Men are free. But it is really freedom not to do as one wants, but freedom to do as one ought. And the fact that Christ sets men free and releases their powers is all the more reason why they should use those powers in serving others. In doing this they are fulfilling the whole law which is summed up in the fundamental principle, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Paul reminds his readers that the man who devotes his time to "biting and devouring" others is liable to be bitten and devoured himself. That principle holds true in life.

The Christian is to walk by the Spirit. If he walks by the Spirit he shall not fulfill the lusts of the flesh. He who sets his affections on heavenly things will not mind earthly things. But he who determines to walk by the Spirit has a man's sized fight on his hands, for the Spirit warreth against the flesh and the flesh warreth against the Spirit. This is no theological theory; it is a hard fact of life. We know it is true because it is true in our own lives. Who of us has not experienced, in fact continually experiences, this grim fight in his own life? The things that we would do, we do not; the things that we would not do, we do. We find that when we would do good, evil is present. O wretched men that we are! who shall deliver us from the body of this death? Paul says, "Jesus Christ will deliver you. I know He will deliver you, for He delivered me. And if He delivered me, He can deliver anybody." "Thanks be unto God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

There is a law in nature that whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. If he sows oats, he will reap oats. If he sows wheat, he will reap wheat. If he sows corn, he will reap corn. He cannot sow oats and reap corn; or wheat, and reap oats. Whatever he sows, he reaps.

Now, this law obtains in life, as in nature. A man reaps whatever he sows. If he sows to the flesh, he will reap of the flesh, even corruption. If he sows to the Spirit, he shall reap of the Spirit, even everlasting life. The law is simple, fundamental and unvarying. A man cannot sow to the flesh and reap of the Spirit. If he sows to the Spirit, he will not reap of the flesh. Whatever a man sows, that will he reap. Here, then, is the explanation of many of the problems of life. Why is there such a dearth of spiritual life in so many professing Christians? Simply because those Christians are not sowing to the Spirit. They live for the flesh; they try to grow a crop of spiritual things on material things; they do not cultivate the crop even if they plant spiritual things. In life, as in a garden or field, the weeds will overtop the good plants unless they are rooted up. And even if there are not many weeds, the plants will not grow without care and cultivation. The man who neglects his prayer-life, who does not feed his mind and heart on the Word, who absents himself from regular worship, who does not express service in his life, will never produce the fruit of the spiritual life. He will reap what he sows. The converse is true. The man who minds spiritual things will reap spiritual things. He will grow in grace; he will grow into the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ. For whatever a man sows, he reaps.

The works of the flesh! What a long list of undesirable and defiling things! Fornication, uncleanliness, lasciviousness, idolatry, sorcery, enmities, strife, jealousies, wraths, factions, divisions, parties, envyings, drunkenness, revelings, and such like. He who sows to the flesh will reap a big crop of tares.

The fruit of the Spirit. Love—intelligent good will toward all, even toward our enemies, and intelligent good will that finds expression is service; joy—not ephemeral pleasure, but the abiding joy which the world cannot give nor take away, based on quality of life, trust in God, consciousness of sonship, service; peace—the peace of God which passeth all understanding that guards our minds and hearts in Christ Jesus and which sustains and strengthens us in all the experiences of life; long-suffering—patience, the spirit of bearing with circumstances and people; kindness—the art and habit of being kind, one of the cheapest and one of the most valuable qualities of life; goodness—the incarnation of the old-fashioned and much-needed virtues of purity, honesty, truthfulness, conscientiousness, etc.; faithfulness—loyalty to all that is best in life and to God through Jesus Christ; meekness—humility, a recognition that all one has and is is not one's own, but has been committed in trust by a loving Father, the grace of not thinking of one's self more highly than he ought to think; self-control—self-mastery, the power to do what one ought, the ability to bring one's body into subjection. These are the fruits of the Spirit. We are to have them all. We are to cultivate them by minding the things of the Spirit. And against them there is no law.

Being a Christian is man's highest vocation. There is nothing so challenging as trying to live as a son of God. It is also a man's most difficult task. But He who hath called us is faithful. He remembereth our frame. He knoweth that we are dust. He will not suffer us to be tempted above that which we are able to bear, and will, with the temptation, also provide a means of escape. We are to fight the good fight of faith. We are to lay hold on life eternal.

CRADLE ROLL PARTY.

On the second Tuesday in June, the Missionary Cradle Roll of the First Christian Church, Burlington, N. C., entertained their mothers and friends at a beautiful party. The program was under the direction of Miss Madge Moffitt, director of religious education in this Church. The offering received from the mite-boxes during the afternoon amounted to $28.00.

The guests were met at the door by Mrs. G. A. Karnodle, and directed to a table to register, where Mrs. B. J. Vestal, missionary cradle roll superintendent, presided over a dainty book filled with baby pictures and baby necessities.

Mrs. Vestal gave a charming welcome address, after which there entered a dainty fairy, asking permission to bring in all the cradle roll babies for a play-time hour. The mothers consented, and the cradle roll members entered, led by little Miss Frances Boland.

The hour was filled with games, missionary motion songs, recitations, and numbers from the baby orchestra. The little folks in the orchestra wore dresses as typical Chinese costumes and directed by Master Gordon Malone. Little Miss Wilna Horner, age two years, directed the chorus.

After the program, Mrs. J. W. Patton, of Elon College, gave a most helpful and interesting address on "Cradle Roll Interests." Ice cream was served by Misses Edith Holt and Carrie Belle Kernodle.

The afternoon was one of the most enjoyable ever spent by mothers and babies in this Church.

FROM WALTERS, VA.

On Sunday, July 19th, Mt. Carmel and Johnson's Grove Churches held their "Children's Day" service. We had 216 in Sunday School at Mt. Carmel in the morning, with a full house for children's service. There was a very good program rendered. Those having the training of the children in charge were Mrs. Othelia Johnson, Mrs. W. E. Beale, Mrs. Virgie Carr, Mrs. C. K. Barrett, Mrs. Eunice Hall and others. They gave faithful service to the training of the children, and the children rendered their part well. We all enjoyed the service very much. We have a good Sunday School at Mt. Carmel, and large congregations at preaching services. We are looking forward to a great revival at Mt. Carmel this year. The meeting will begin the fifth Sunday in August, and the pastor will be assisted by Bro. Crawford, of Elm Avenue, Portsmouth. I am asking that each of the members turn to the Lord in earnest prayer, that the Lord may send us a glorious revival.

Johnson's Grove held their service in the afternoon. Here they had a very good program rendered; that was not only intertaining, but inspirational as well. They have some very fine people at Johnson's Grove, and the work there is progressing and the outlook is good in both Sunday School and Church service.

Revival service will begin there the first Sunday in August. May the Lord send us a real revival at this place.

It is drawing near the time for Churches in the rural sections to have their revival meetings, and may the Christian people every where turn to the Lord in prayer, that a real revival might sweep over our land. I believe no true Christian can study the conditions and not feel the need of a true revival. Elisha Bradshaw.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

Our children were made happy on Friday, July 24th, when the Durham Sunday School held its annual picnic on the Orphanage grounds. They came in trucks and automobiles more than two hundred strong. A merry, happy crowd! Old and young alike enjoyed the day. We had already had warning of their coming, and knowing of the baskets of good things to eat they always bring, we had prepared a table eighty feet long on which to serve the lunch. About 12 o'clock the good ladies filled the table to the limit of its capacity with chicken, and everything good to the taste of every one. The entire Orphanage family was invited to partake of the good things to eat, and it was a real treat to them. Dr. W. A. Harper was asked to return thanks, after which the little hands of the children were filled first. After every one had eaten to his heart's content, the remainder of the food was sent to the dining-room for the Orphanage children for their evening meal.

After the picnic was over and our friends had departed for home and the sun was sinking behind the western horizon, the good food was again placed upon the picnic table under the trees and all the children from both buildings gathered around the table for a real Orphanage picnic, and it was joyful to see them so happy. After returning thanks in concert, in which all the children joined, the little children again enjoyed a bountiful repast. With plenty of ice and with a brisk breeze blowing, it made an ideal water and lots of ice cream throughout the day, picnic day.

We are always delighted to have picnics come here and enjoy our beautiful grounds and splendid shade. Our Durham friends know just how to make every one happy and enjoy the day and have a real good time. We wish other Sunday Schools would hold their picnics here, too. We promise you to have plenty of ice water for the occasion.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

A STUDY OF THE PSALMS.

Chapter III.

MONDAY.

THE VICTORIOUS KING OF GLORY.

Lesson: Psa. 24.

This psalm was used in celebrating a victory. We have this described in Psalm 68. Returning victoriously from the battlefield, the ark being carried before them, a brief mighty hymn opened the ceremony, the singers went before, the minstrels followed after, the girls danced around playing with timbrels, all singing, "The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof, the world and they that dwell therein," etc. No ceremonial requirement was necessary. Moral purity was the emphasis. Then they chant "Lift your heads," etc., and the response is "The Lord of Host, He is the King of Glory." Then the sacrifices of this victory feast begin. The true worshiper was the righteous citizen.

This rings true to the new emphasis on the heart life. Without morality, other values are worthless. Only men with clean, kind hearts may stand before the sanctuary. Only such may stand before Him today.

Prayer.—Our Father, wash us through and through, mind, body and soul, and we shall be clean for Thee. In His name we ask it. Amen.

TUESDAY.

ENTERING THE TEMPLE.

Lesson: Psa. 118.

Often when entering the temple, the leader would sing, "Oh, give thanks unto the Lord for He is good, and His kindness endures forever"; and the people sang a refrain, "For His kindness enters forever." Then it was taken up by "Israel," and then by "the house of Aaron," and then by them that fear the Lord.

"The voice of rejoicing and victory is the home of the righteous."

The leader calls out to the Levites who keep the gates: "Lift up your heads, O ye gates, and the King of Glory shall come in. Who is the King of Glory? The Lord, strong and mighty. He is the King of Glory." Or they called this: "Open to me the gates of righteousness, that I may enter them and give thanks to God." To this the gate-keeper would respond: "This is the gate of the Lord; the righteous may enter it." And they all enter, singing "This is the day which the Lord made." And the priest welcomes them by saying, "Blessed be he that enters in the name of the Lord. We bless you from the house of God." Then the people all say, Jehovah is God, and has given us light.

Prayer.—The Lord's Prayer in unison.

WEDNESDAY.

PROTESTATION OF INTEGRITY.

Lesson: Psa. 26.

Whereupon they compass the altar, dancing around it and touching its horns with the palms they carry in their hands (the most formal act of reverence to God), singing: "Thou art my God, and I will thank Thee; Thou art my God and I will exalt Thee." And the chorus responded: "Oh, give thanks unto the Lord, for He is good, for His kindness endures forever."

Prayer.—Our Father, in the midst of life we are in Thy temple, at Thy altar and before Thee. Examine us and prove us, and try our hearts, and wash our hands, and clean our souls, that we may compass Thy altar and be acceptable to Thee, now and forever. Amen.

THURSDAY.

THANKSGIVING DAY.

Lesson: Psa. 67.

"Let all the nations be glad and sing for joy."

This is the song they sung on their national thanksgiving day—the "Harvest Festival" it is called. It was the occasion of special prayers and thanksgiving for the harvest they had gathered. This is one of their most unselfish songs, for this they seem to feel that God who had provided so abundantly for all nations and people should be manifested and acknowledged by all people. The heathen in the farther parts must see and know who this God is. They look beyond the material gifts to the spiritual blessings for all and call on the nations to join them in their praise. Then they begin singing, "God be gracious unto us and bless us and make His face shine toward us, that they may be known upon earth, Thy salvation among all nations."

What spiritual satisfaction there is in intelligent and efficacious worship!

Prayer.—Dear Lord, be merciful unto us in our weakness and sins. Forgive us and make us whole and cause Thy face to shine upon this day. In His name. Amen.

FRIDAY.

GOD'S GLORY AND MAN'S DIGNITY.

Lesson: Psa. 8 (read well).

This is one of the few nature songs, and was sung whenever they felt like it. David was a great lover of nature. He lived in the wild during his early days, and it is surprising to know that he did not write and sing about nature more.

Though few, the nature songs are beautiful, and this is an example. It follows the thanksgiving song very appropriately. It is characteristic in the contemplation of nature that all narrow, selfish and nationalistic thoughts disappear. It is God and man; not God and me, nor God and you. It is the vast realm of creation. In Psalm 29 the poet called upon the people to look at the thunderstorm as a heavenly temple and worship Him.

Our song today, we are told, was sung by a solo voice, and the chorus sang the refrain which is the two lines at the beginning.

Prayer.—Our Father, in Thee we live and move and have our being. Bless us with Thy Spirit and make us like Thee. Amen.

SATURDAY.

JEHOVAH THE RIGHTEOUS JUDGE.

Lesson: Psa. 96.

Are you tiring of the psalms' exegesis? I am afraid so. Getting "kinder" monotonous, isn't it? Well, there must have been a time when David felt that way too. He said, "O sing unto the Lord a new song" (Psa. 96). And it was time. But he did not call for a new song because of the monotony of the old ones, but because the glory was too great to be expressed by anything that had been written. Hence, this psalm. None is in more nobly poetic form, and none matches it in its prophetic content.

Compare with this 93, 97, 75 and 76. These are the finest of the psalter. "Their power of arousing religious enthusiasm was so great that they were elevated to the highest cliff of soul ecstasy.

In hours of special victory, we do like to sing a new psalm. Look to God for this blessing.

Prayer.—All join in the Lord's prayer.

SUNDAY.

DOMINION OF THE KING.

Lesson: Psa. 110.

The royal psalms form a special group, and were used at great royal functions. They are 110, 2, 72, 20, 21, 61, 89, 132 and 144.

At the coronation of the King, one of these which seem fitting was sung. One hundred and ten was composed especially for such an occasion, but later was interpreted as referring to the Messiah, who combined religious and secular lordships in Himself over the hearts of the people.

Thus, a world dominion of the Lord's is foretold, and Jesus is the fulfillment of it. It is a psalm of a great ideal world with an ideal world ruler. Is that not what we are Christians for? Worship God and give thanks.

Prayer.—Some one lead in prayer.

THE REDISCOVERY OF THE BIBLE.

The place of the Bible in modern life has received a more thorough discussion in the past twelve months than during any period perhaps in the history of our country. Men have suddenly discovered that the Bible should be given a place in our national life, in our system of education, in our public morality, in our personal patriotism, in our public life. There is a deeper significance in the movement for the placing of the Bible in the public schools than is to be seen on the surface. The Holy Scriptures have been too much neglected during the past generation. The Book has lain on the center table in the home or in a corner in the library. It has been valued but not read. It has been appreciated but not mastered. It has been acknowledged but its light not followed. It has released a dim, mystical light upon the pathway of men, but it has not sent forth a noonday glow that should lighten the pathway of mankind.

When, therefore, men in legislative halls, and in educational gatherings, and within the closed doors of fraternal bodies, suddenly awaken to the necessity of reading the Bible more carefully and placing it within the curriculum of our public schools, they are not to be condemned, but rather commended. What the world needs today is a rediscovery of the Bible. It has been placed in an air-tight container and looked upon too much as an heirloom. Let these who are militant in its exaltation continue in their efforts until they lift it aloft as the light of a new day, in the name of Christ and His Church.—Western Christian Advocate.

POPE'S SUNDAY SCHOOL.

We want to say through the columns of your paper that our Sunday School is still living and in a progressive state. Our motto is "We Do Things." The small, yet great. Our average attendance is good, being more than 90 per cent. We have seven classes and a good teacher for each class. We are just a plain country Sunday School, working the best we can for the advancement of God's kingdom. We only have about eighty members.

Some time ago one of our teachers—Miss Corinne Holmes—undertook to get up a "Children's Day" program. With help and co-operation of the others, she had a wonderful success. She said, "Give the children the praise and God the honor and glory."

The program was presented Sunday night last, the 19th, and it was fine from start to end. It was a complete success. After the program there was a collection taken to go to the building fund at Elon College to help care more adequately for the unfortunate orphans, and the sum of $10.54 was realized, which we sent to Mr. Johnston to be used for that purpose. Kiddies' Korner

MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT, Editor.

My dear Kiddies:

It is still too hot for much letter-writing, so as I have to substitute again, while your editor regales herself with new methods at Elon, I shall make it snappy. Am sending you a lovely little poem, "God's Dark," by that wonderful friend of the children, John Martin. This is taken from the American Magazine, and will help you if you ever wake in the night and feel afraid. I have also borrowed an unusual dog story from the Woman's Home Companion. Hope you will like them both. With all love, I am,

Sincerely,

MRS. T. A. MOFFITT.

GOD'S DARK.

By John Martin.

The Dark is kind and cozy;
The Dark is soft and deep;
The Dark will pat my pillow
And love me as I sleep.

The Dark is smooth as velvet,
And gentle as the air,
And he is good to children
And people everywhere.

The Dark can see and loves me
Without a bit of light.
He gives me dreams and resting;
He brings the gentle Night.

God made the Dark so Daytime
Could close its tired eyes
And sleep a while in comfort
Beneath the starry skies.

The Daytime, just like children,
Needs rest from work and play,
So it can give us children
Another happy day.

God made the Dark for children
And birdies in their nest.
All in the Dark He watches
And guards us while we rest.

THE FRIENDLY PUPPY.

By Eleanor Hammond.

I'm friends with the postman
Who whistles down the street;
I'm pals with the butcher boy
Who comes to bring the meat.

A friendly sniff for agents
Who knock upon the door,
A wag for the woman
Who scrubs the kitchen floor.

I'm chums with all the boys
Who play with Bobby, here;
When baby pulls my tail
I lick his small pink ear.

I frisk and bounce about
When I hear mother's feet;
And dash to meet our daddy
Coming home along the street.

I'm even friends with Mitzie,
The scratchie, spitzie cat—
I'm sure that nobody could be Much friendlier than that!
And Mitzie does not run from me
And climb the cherry tree.
And every one loves me!
A nd every one loves me!

THE TALE OF A YELLOW PUPPY.

By Sylvia Chatfield Bates.

Jitz was a little yellow puppy. He belonged to Hannah Rose. Hannah Rose was a little girl with yellow hair. He lived with his mother and the other puppies in the big barn. The barn was always full of sweet hay and dusty sunbeams. He liked to bite his sister's ears to make her hide. He liked to cuddle close to his mother and listen to the sounds that came through the barn door.

"Cock-a-doodle-doo-o-o!" That was Cocky, the rooster. "Moo-oo-oo!" That was Betsy Bossy in the field. "Meoow!" That was Kitzen in the apple tree.

But Jitz was not very happy. You see, he was the only yellow dog in the whole family. His mother did not think he was pretty. Hannah Rose did not think he was pretty, either.

One day he heard Hannah Rose crying. (He was lying in the barn in the hay with one eye open.) She did not cry very often, so he felt upset himself. She was crying because her mother was telling her she could not buy her a mamma doll who would say "Mam-ma!"

Jitz tumbled out of the barn into the back yard. Hannah Rose had stopped crying and was feeding the chickens. He ran in among them and made them go "Clackety-clack-clack; cut-cut-cut-cut-cut; ca-dab-cut! Ca-dab-cut! Cut-cut-cut!"

"Run away, naughty dog!" said Hannah Rose. She stamped her foot at him.

Jitz ran away. He went right over into the dump.

The dump was up the cart road and beyond the berry patches, in a hollow. People brought things here in carts and dumped them on the ground. Ashes and clam shells and broken umbrellas and old shoes and lost harmonicas and bird cages and torn skipping ropes and babies' blocks with the letters licked off, and dollies who weren't dollies any more.

Many lovely things to chew. Jitz felt very much better.

He licked the clam shells and blocks. He raced all over the dump with a skipping rope in his mouth. He almost swallowed a harmonica.

By and by, he found a dollie who really wasn't a dollie any more. She had no head and no arms and no legs. There was no harm in chewing this one.

He chewed until he saw something shining inside her. It was a tiny box. He tried to crack it with his teeth, but they were little teeth, so he swallowed it whole. It did not hurt much.

When he got home his mother and all his brothers and sisters were in the yard. Hannah Rose was sitting on the next to the bottom step of the back porch. It was supper time.

"Come, Jitz," called Hannah Rose; "here is your very first bone." He ran to Hannah Rose. He jumped up into her lap, and then he put his forefeet and head down to get the nice bone.

And what do you think? Something said, "Mam-ma!"

It was Jitz.

Hannah Rose was so surprised that she fell right off the steps into the pansy bed.

"Mam-ma!" he said again.

Jitz ran around in circles, barking. And every time he leaned down to get the bone, he said, "Mam-ma! mam-ma!"

He was a talking mamma-dog! because he had swallowed the little box (where her voice was kept) from inside the mamma dollie who wasn't really a dollie any more.

And after that Hannah Rose loved him best of all, and his mother thought he was a wonder!

CONVERTING HOUSES INTO HOMES.

"Just look at that house there," was the exclamation heard as we passed a new residence in a suburban development day before yesterday. "Just one little touch— that window-box of red geraniums—seems to convert it from the bareness and rawness of a new house into the beauty and friendliness of a real home."

All over Dixie right now there are houses waiting to be made to look like homes by the magic of flowers—and there is no better flower-planting time than now.—Clarence Poe, in The Progressive Farmer.

ELON AND OUR S. S. & C. E. WORK.

As I think of discussing this subject, I realize that it is almost an impossible task. I say task because it is a difficult one to undertake to discuss what our head institution means to these phases of our Church work. However, I consider it a privilege to call attention to some of the many things that Elon means to our Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavorers.

I want to use this idea to show what it really represents in my mind and has meant to the Southern branch of our Church. For the Sunday Schools, Elon has been a foster mother. I say this because the Sunday School was in operation before Elon was founded. Since Elon has been growing and training young men and women it has trained them for various lines of Church activity. Now, when one goes into a Church where the young people of that Church have been in school at Elon we find a group of trained leaders, such as superintendents, secretaries and teachers. It really takes such to get a Sunday School on the go.

Why should I say foster mother, though? Usually, the child that is taken over by the foster mother has had some training, but a real Christian mother who adopts the child is not content with the training, but wants the child to have the very best Christian training, even though she is not akin to the child. Elon has been anxious to train leaders for the Sunday School since her foundation. She wants to give her sons and daughters the very best Christian training that can be given. By so doing, the larger number of members of our Churches that are not privileged to take training at the school will also be benefited by its influence.

There is a closer relation to the Christian Endeavor than to the Sunday School. There is a very little difference in the age of the Christian Endeavor and Elon. I think that Elon College was one of the first places that the Christian Endeavor Society was organized in our Southern Christian Convention. At this institution, the first leaders were trained for the practical experience. As a result of the training of our ministers and lay workers, today practically all of our town Churches and a large number of our country Churches have Christian Endeavor Societies. They are training the local young men and women. Elon is, therefore, the real Christian mother to the C. E. societies of the Christian Church of the South. The Christian Endeavor work was born there. Elon mothered it until there were trained leaders enough to go out and organize societies. As a usual thing, those who get an idea as to what it means to be in the association with the leaders in both the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor work are the ones who want to attend Elon. There, mother gets the joy of having the grandchildren to come, that she may serve them, too. Furthermore, a reunion is prepared each year for all the children, grandchildren and friends that they may come back to the old home to be refreshed with such bounties as we need—that is the Chautauqua.

What I have already said about the work is of the past. They are some of the things that Elon has done. I had the privilege of being there for my college work several years ago. The privilege was grand, but now our institution is better prepared to serve than ever before. I say this not because of visiting the school and seeing the new buildings, but because I had the opportunity of being there again last year and seeing for myself. The Mooney Christian Education Building is the only one of its kind in America. There we have the best advantages for Sunday School and Christian Endeavor training. I need not take time to describe the building here because most SUN readers have read that. I wish to tell how the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor work is conducted. For the students, a superintendent is elected from the student body to head it. The other officers are also elected to assist. The faculty usually acts as teacher or as head teacher for the students. They have the supervision of the work, but a member of the class teaches every Sunday morning. This gives our future leaders a chance to put in practice what they learn on the classes of religious education during the week. It also causes the students to be more careful because of the observer.

As for the Christian Endeavor training at Elon now, every student who is interested enough to take the work has the opportunity of studying about it in religious education on class during the week, and then the practical application of it on Sunday. We have at Elon a federated program now. One Sunday night for the whole night service, the Christian Endeavor has charge. Then for the next Sunday night, the Y. W. C. A. will conduct the service. Or, in other words, each of the various organizations such as I have named, Y. M. C. A. and Ministerial Association has one night in each month. That gives us the practical side of the religious life and does not crowd so many activities as it once did. Then we have the advantage of studying these things in religious education.

Elon has meant so much to our Sunday School and Christian Endeavor work that it cannot be told in writing. I am glad to say, from a standpoint of nine months' experience, that I believe it will mean more than ever before.

J. E. MCCAULEY.

THE KEEPING POWER OF GOD.

"Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee, because he trusteth in Thee."

Perfect peace, the reward of perfect trust. The more fully we trust, the more fully He gives peace, but it is to those whose mind is stayed upon the Lord. There is not a circumstance in which He will not keep the one whose mind is stayed upon the Lord—who commits all his ways unto Him and trusts in Him.

Every tongue that rises against those who are doing the things that are pleasing in His sight shall be condemned. No weapon that is formed against Him shall prosper. Such a servant of God does not need to put up a defense in his own behalf, for he has an unfailing defense in the Almighty.

There are many circumstances which try our faith, our courage and our holding-on qualities. There are times when the strain of the test becomes so severe we feel we cannot endure another minute of it. But the sure promises of our Lord go right along with us, and He who gave them goes right along with us, too. The Lord tests us to prove us and to bring out all the good there is in us. So we need not fear any test He may send, for He who sends the test is faithful, and He is able to carry us through safely, for the keeping power of God is perfect.

The promises are to those who trust and obey. God's only promise to those who are out of Christ is salvation if they repent. All His other promises are to those who have learned submission by taking Christ's yoke upon them and learned of Him. How rich, how full and perfect those promises are! Perfect promises by the perfect one, bringing perfect peace to His trusting, obedient children.

What, though, He does send us into the water! We have His "fear not" and His "I will be with thee." Anyway, the promise is to pass us through the water. What, though, He does send us into the fire! Again, our Lord has promised to pass us through without harm. The Lord never sends us into a hard trial to leave us there alone. Neither does He stand by as a mere onlooker. His promise is to be with us, to never leave or forsake us; but to take us safely through, whatever the trial may be.

How fully are you trusting Him? Have you learned to commit all to your Lord and trust Him to bring to pass that which He knows what is best for you? Do you fully know His keeping power? Are you trusting Him so completely that you are being kept in perfect peace? Is your mind stayed upon Him? Is it a fixed purpose with you to let His will be done in everything related to your life and service? That alone brings perfect peace. Doing our own will, working out our own plans brings unrest and dissatisfaction. "Not my will, but Thine," trusting when we cannot understand, is the way to perfect peace.

CHRISTIAN STEWARDSHIP.

This is now regarded as one of the basic subjects and themes of the Church. It is a subject vital both to the individual and to the Church. In recent reading contests held in different Churches, the expression has been made many times that "I had never realized the importance of the subject, and it is so interesting, too." Our class at the Chautauqua will spend ten days in real study of this interesting subject. The textbook will be Lovejoy's "Stewardship for All of Life." I will see that copies may be purchased at the class. They are 75 cents, cloth binding. If you have a copy, bring it with you. If you have other stewardship books, please bring them for reference uses. The work will be for laymen, young people, ministers, ladies and gentlemen. We wish every Church in our Southern Convention would have a strong delegation present, for we expect the work to be helpful to every kind of a Church. Of course, we expect to have the best-looking folks of the Chautauqua in our class. We hope to meet you there.

TATE.

Bro. Alva Tate was born February 10, 1889, and died July 18, 1925, age 36 years, 5 months, and 8 days. He leaves an aged father, two sisters, two brothers, a large number of relatives and a host of friends to mourn their loss. He was sick for several years and was very patient during his illness. Bro. Alva Tate professed faith in Jesus Christ as his Saviour a few weeks before he went to meet his Lord.

Funeral services were conducted at Busharbor Primitive Baptist Church by the writer, assisted by Rev. Mr. Martin. Bro. Tate was a member of the Junior Order, and his local order concluded the service at the cemetery.

May the good Lord comfort those who are saddened. L. L. WYRICK.

Danville, Va.

BEAHM.

Mrs. B. F. Beahm, of Harrisonburg, Va., Route 3, died in Rockingham Memorial Hospital, of Harrisonburg, Wednesday evening, July 15, 1925. Her age at the time of her death was 54 years, 2 months, and 10 days. She is survived by her husband, two sons, three daughters, and a brother. She had been a consistent member of Antioch Christian Church (near Harrisonburg, Va.) for about thirty-five years. Her funeral was conducted and her body was buried at the Mennonite Church of Mt. Clinton, Va., on Friday, July 17th. The services were conducted by her pastor, assisted by Rev. A. W. Andes and by Rev. S. B. Hannah, of the Presbyterian Church.

R. P. CRUMPLER.

Linville, Va.

CROWDER.

Mrs. Louise Crowder died June 16th at the home of her son, Garrett Crowder, Greenville, S. C., where she had been visiting for a short time. She was in her fifty-ninth year. She leaves to mourn their loss five children and a host of friends. Sister Crowder had been a member of the Christian Church for more than twenty-five years. She will be missed from the home, the Church and the community.

Funeral services were conducted from East La Grange Christian Church by the writer. The interment was in the Hillview Cemetery. Her last words were, "I am ready to go; weep not for me." May these words ever be a comfort to the bereaved ones, and may we all meet again where all tears will be wiped away.

Glen, Ga. A. H. SHEPPARD.

MILLION DOLLAR ENDOWED COLLEGES.

Million dollar endowments are possessed by 121 American universities, according to figures recently compiled by the Bureau of Education. Most of these institutions are under private control. State universities as a rule are not heavily endowed, and only eighteen of them are in the millionaire class, so far as their productive endowments are concerned.

BRIDGERS—LAWRENCE.

At the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Lawrence, Mr. Alvin O. Bridgers and Miss Beulah C. Lawrence were united in marriage June 24th. Several relatives and friends were present. The bride and groom are esteemed members of Shallow Well Christian Church. Mr. Bridgers received medals for courageous action during the late war. Mrs. Bridgers is a teacher in the Sunday School and is an earnest and efficient worker in other departments of the Church. Many friends wish for them the best that life can bring. Their home will be in Wendell, N. C., where Mr. Bridgers has for some years been in business.

R. L. WILLIAMSON.

EDWARDS—THOMAS.

Mr. John Edwards, of Rocky Ford Church, and Miss Susie Thomas, of Elk Spur, were united in marriage by the writer, at the home of the bride, on July 4th. After the marriage, dinner was served to all present. Mr. and Mrs. Edwards are very active in our work here, and their host of friends wish them well.

MEREDITH.

On July 21, 1925, the death angel visited the home of Bro. and Sister Russel Meredith, and took from their midst their darling baby, Agnes Louise, thirteen months old. Death came very unexpectedly early Tuesday from poison on Sunday preceding. While everything was done that could be to save the sweet life, yet there seemed to be nothing that did any good.

The funeral service was held at Elk Spur Church. The writer was assisted by Bro. Holden, from Winston-Salem, and Bro. Parks, of Hillsville. A large crowd attended the burial, and the many flowers that were placed upon the grave evidenced the sympathy for Bro. and Sister Meredith as well as the manifestation of the love for the darling child that had gone from our midst. Her sweet face will never be forgotten by those that had the privilege of seeing and being with her. While she has passed to be with Christ, and her face we are no longer able to see, we know that when He shall come to call His own we will again see the one that we love so much. May God bless and comfort those that weep.

LARRICK.

Asa D. Larrick passed into the life beyond Friday, July 3, 1925, at his home in Winchester, Va., after an illness of about a month, and was buried on Sunday afternoon, July 5, 1925, in the cemetery of the Timber Ridge Christian Church.

The funeral services were conducted by his pastor, Rev. J. F. Morgan, assisted by Rev. W. T. Walters and Rev. Courtney Anderson, and consisted of a brief service at his home, in Winchester, followed by a longer service in the Timber Ridge Christian Church, which was witnessed by a large concourse of friends and neighbors who had gathered to pay their respect to the memory of their friend whom they had known so long.

Bro. Larrick was a member of Timber Ridge Christian Church since boyhood, but upon coming to Winchester, Va., he moved his membership to the Winchester Christian Church. He was 69 years old. He is survived by his wife, four children, four brothers and two sisters. May the Lord comfort the bereaved ones.

COLLINS.

Mrs. Annie E. Collins was born June 14, 1862, and died June 13, 1925, aged 63 years. She was married to S. B. Collins April 6, 1890. To this union were born five children, two of whom are still living. Her husband died about twenty years ago. Sister Collins was a good woman, a member of the Pentecostal Church, and lived near Whistler's Chapel. Funeral was held at the Pine Lutheran Church June 14, 1925.

Japanese Resent Chinese Acts.—

The Japanese papers are showing a deep feeling of resentment against the Chinese people who have recently been destroying Japanese stores, shops and other business places, and who have burned a Japanese consulate and mutilated the Japanese flag.

The Japanese feel that this is an insult to the national dignity and ought to be set right. They feel, too, that nothing should overshadow Japanese interests in China. China seems to desire to punish Japan and England for their imperialism, but Japan would have China understand that an empire is a far different thing from imperialism.

Promoting Good Will.—

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, of which the Christian Church is a member, felt some time ago that a better understanding needed development between the Jewish and Protestant organizations. A commission was created, with John W. Herring as secretary. Mr. Herring reports that a number of Jewish rabbis and Protestant theological professors are exchanging professorships in a number of Protestant and Jewish colleges and seminaries. The leaders are to discuss race relations, and much interest is being manifested through the organization of student groups for discussion. Nothing perhaps can contribute more to the promotion of this good will for which the Federal Council stands than will this exchange of teachers.

Dr. Clark Retires.—

Dr. Francis E. Clark, the founder of the Christian Endeavor movement, resigned his leadership of that organization after thirty-eight years of service. Christian Endeavor was forty-four years old, and Dr. Clark is seventy-four. His resignation was the outstanding event of the Portland meeting. Dr. Daniel A. Poling, pastor of the Marble Collegiate Church, Reformed, New York, was chosen Dr. Clark's successor. Dr. Poling will be head of the United Societies only, while Dr. Clark retains the presidency of the World Fedeartion. A memorial fund of one hundred thousand dollars is to be raised, the interest of which will care for Dr. and Mrs. Clark for the rest of their lives, and then be used for the extension of Christian Endeavor.

Criticises the American Church.—

Dr. George Chalmers Richmond, speaking before the nonconformist ministers of England, at Chestnut College, excoriated the American Church for its lack of social idealism. He declared that the American Church did not know how to respect its wage-earners as did the Church of England, and that in New England, where he was born, the Church was controlled by a small coterie of politicians and business men. Dr. Richmond may be right. All that he says is doubtless true in some Churches. The Church in America is not all that we should like it to be, but we doubt if going to England to talk about it will do the thing much good. As to social idealism, one wonders if abroad in the land there is not much more than in the old world. This old idea that tourists have given the people abroad that we Americans are lacking in decent culture and are a herd of money-getters only, ought to make every genuine American sick of the whole lot of them. It isn't the old world's fault that they think of us as they do. It is the fault of a few folks like Dr. Richmond who go abroad to talk about the land that gave them birth.

The Community Church Idea.—

The community Churches of the Northwest are beginning to organize. In the four Northwestern States there are 186 community Churches. The pastors and workers in these Churches assembled at St. John's Community Church, Portland, Oregon, recently, and Rev. O. F. Jordan, the executive secretary of the National Community Church Organization, aided in organizing the group. The community Churches in this district are prevailingly denominational, but there are many independent Churches. Recently, Longview, Wash., was a wilderness, but now it is a great lumber city of seven thousand. In order to avoid the denominational scramble, the people voted for an independent community Church, and the building is now going up at a cost of about $150,000. The community Church idea is a growing one, and while it is true that no Church can well live alone, it is also true that one Church may frequently meet the needs of a community now over-Churched, and allow the denominational energies for work in the undeveloped regions of which there are a great many throughout the country. Thinking people are beginning to disapprove of the general scramble for a place now so prevalent in many Churches, regardless of whether they are needed or not.

Some Near East Recommendations.—

The Christian Church has been deeply interested in the Near East work, and interest should be taken in the report of John R. Voris, who has been for five months studying the situation.

In Constantinople, initial steps were taken to found a Christian Nurture Council to function in the Near East. Mr. Voris recommended (1) a standard program of religious nurture for the several localities, including formal worship, informal services, religious and ethical instructions, expressional activities such as social service clubs, Christian associations, young people's devotional services, etc.; (2) emphasis on this program sufficient to induce recognition of its importance and necessity; (3) correlating it with the educational work under the director-general of overseas operations; (4) the harmonizing and correlating of efforts made by the many agencies involved, including the World's Sunday School Association, the United Christian Endeavor Societies, Christian Associations, Boy Scout organizations, etc.; (5) the employment of a native Greek religious education expert for the Greek orphans, and a native Armenian expert for the Armenian orphans; (6) a distinct policy of inciting the children to loyalty to the faith of their fathers and conscious of a duty to their Church, and, at the same time, giving them the evangelical and practical interpretation of Christianity emphasized by the Western Churches which will make them a leavening influence in the native Church.

The White House Cars.—

There are five cars in the White House garage. Francis H. Robinson is the official chauffeur to the President, and has been in that office during the administration of four Presidents. He has driven about five hundred thousand miles in that time. The five cars are all Pierce Arrows, and the President's number is D. C. 100. The White House cars are kept in the general army service garage at 19 B Street, about two minutes' drive from the main entrance to the White House grounds. During the day the President's car stands in a place allotted to it, no matter what the weather, because it is never known when he may have need of it. The five White House cars burn about 11,000 gallons of gasoline and go about 100,000 miles each year. Besides the President's car, there is a car for Mrs. Coolidge when she drives alone, one for the Secret Service, which always attends the President wherever he goes, one for the President's private secretary, and one for the use of the guests of the White House.

Besides having driven four Presidents, Robinson has driven many kings and princes. His prized possession is a decoration given him by King Albert of Belgium. The Secret Service men, under the direction of Richard Jervis, see to the selecting of a road, detours, etc., when the President goes on a long motor trip. He is attended always in a car just behind by the Secret Service, and in that car goes the President's physician. Third in the procession is the car carrying newspaper representatives, which are the link between the President and the country at large. While the President is subject to all motor regulations to which the seventeen million other motorists must adhere, he is given, out of courtesy, the right of way, and is provided with a State escort by each State through whose borders he passes.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, Wakefield, Va., was a pleasant visitor recently. His Churches have extended to him a call for an indefinite period, and he has accepted, expressing at the same time the desire to be worthy of serving, as he thinks he is, "the best people in all the world."

Our Richmond Church and our Winchester Church, in Virginia, are on the lookout for pastors. These are both important and growing centers, and here is hoping they will be fortunate in securing successors to the two worthy brethren who are resigning.

Rev. A. H. Hook has made our people a successful and acceptable preacher and pastor at Henderson, N. C., and he has been effectually aided in that task by his capable and devoted wife. Our Henderson Church will not easily find successors to these two who will fill their places.

Among the good Sunday Schools recently reporting their decision to take one offering a month for missions are Antioch, Isle of Wight County, Va., and Lee's Chapel, Lee County, N. C. It will not be long, we trust, before every Sunday School in the Southern Christian Convention will be loyal enough to their Church and to the kingdom of our Lord to do this good thing.

Some of the faithful, loyal and true are sending in their Men and Millions' pledges, and for this, all of us who love the Church should thank God and take courage. When it is considered that this is the one fund that helps all enterprises of the Church, one realizes the gratitude of those who wish to see the whole Christian Church go forward in and through the payment of these pledges. In recent weeks we have informed every subscriber of the exact amount of the balance he or she may be due.

MIDWAY.

We began a meeting at Midway on the fourth Sunday in July and continued until the first Sunday night. One of the federations from Burlington, N. C., with Jack Stafford as its leader, came to our assistance and God used them and his people in a wonderful way in this meeting. It proved to be a wonderful meeting in several ways. Old, long-standing animosities were settled, enemies made friends, backsliders were reclaimed, and many professed faith in Christ.

There were between thirty and fifty who claimed to be saved. Between twenty and thirty gave their names for the Churches of the community. God's children were wonderfully revived and strengthened.

This federation organization is the outcome of the Ham-Ramsay revival campaign at Burlington, and they are reaching all the Churches of the surrounding communities. I really believe that the Rev. Ham is the greatest evangelist that has ever been in this country. He has conducted a campaign in all the main cities of Eastern North Carolina, and from these centers he reached most all the smaller towns from the seashore up to Burlington; and in leaving each of these meetings he left organized federations at each city, and they are continuing these campaigns, and, through these organizations, from what we hear, there have been some ten thousand who have professed faith in Christ—and it just goes on. God bless Ham and his crew.

RESIGNS PASTORATE.

Rev. A. L. Hook, for two years pastor of the Christian Church of Henderson, N. C., has resigned the pastorate of that Church, to be effective October 1st. The Church and community will miss him and his good wife, whom to know is to love.

The Church accepted his resignation with sincere regrets. Both Mr. and Mrs. Hook are very active and have served the Church with unstinted efforts during their stay.

They endeared themselves not only to the Christian Church, but to every denomination in the city, as the following from the Henderson Daily Dispatch indicates:

"Rev. A. H. Hook, pastor of the Christian Church, is to leave Henderson in the fall, and will go to the Yale Divinity School to pursue further his studies for ministerial work. The popular young pastor presented his resignation to the congregation on last Sunday morning, announcing that it would take effect on October 1st.

"The resignation was, of course, accepted, and with regret, and the responsibility of selecting a successor to Mr. Hook was placed in the hands of the board of deacons.

"Mr. Hook has been pastor of the Christian Church here for the past two years, and during that time has made numerous friends in the city outside of his own congregation as well as among them. Many expressions of regret at his departure have been heard following his announcement to his congregation on Sunday.

"Mr. Hook is a graduate of Elon College, the Christian denomination's school in this State, and one of the largest controlled by that Church in the United States. He came here immediately following his graduation at Elon. It is his purpose to pursue his biblical studies further, and for that reason he gives up the work here to go to the Yale Divinity School."

HAPPY HOME.

The revival meeting began here Sunday, July 12th, and closed Friday, July 17th. Each service was well attended. The spirit of the meeting at every service was harmonious. The morning testimony services were inspirational and profitable to all. The presence of the Lord's spirit could be felt in each service.

Our friend and brother Rev. T. J. Green, Elon College, N. C., came on Monday and did the preaching with telling effect until the meeting closed. Bro. Green is a very consecrated man. His messages came from the heart and revealed the heart. His preaching was highly scriptural and gripped the minds of his hearers. He commanded the attention and respect of all who heard him.

During his brief stay, he made many friends who will not forget him. As to visible results, there were sixteen professions of faith in our Lord and nine additions to the Church. The Church was greatly revived and inspired to continue in the Lord's work until the end.

The singing was fine and very helpful. There are some very talented young people here in music. Everybody seemed to enjoy the meeting. It was especially profitable to the Christian people.

All praise to Him who rules above and gives His spirit unto men to help them live right here upon earth. Thanks be unto the dear Lord for the good done during this meeting.

HENDERSON BIBLE SCHOOL.

A very successful two weeks' daily vacation Bible school was held recently at the Henderson Christian Church. The total enrollment was ninety-six. The school did splendid work under the direction of our pastor, Rev. A. H. Hook, assisted by Miss Mabel Alexander, of Elon College. Miss Elizabeth Ellington and Miss Martha Jones did good work with the beginners' department, while the primary department was ably managed by Miss Lucy Ayscue, assisted by Mrs. W. O. Cunningham. Miss Alexander had entire charge of the junior department, with the exception of the handwork for the junior girls, which was well taken care of by Miss Lizzie Belle Newman. Mrs. A. H. Hook taught two courses to the intermediate girls, one in Bible and one in mission study on China, while Mr. Hook had the intermediate boys for Bible, and the entire intermediate department for handwork.

One of the features of the school was a series of evening meetings to which the public was invited. Special speakers were secured for these meetings, and work of the school, such as Bible drills, dramatizations, etc., was exhibited. Dr. W. A. Harper came as the speaker for "College Night," Mr. W. A. Welch on "Recreation Night," and Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, of Suffolk, Va., was the speaker for "Young People's Night."

On commencement night the intermediate girls and other members of the school presented a missionary play, "Color Blind," that they had worked up during the two weeks. This was very creditably given and enjoyed by all. Another feature of the commencement was the presentation of handwork made during the session by the different departments. The intermediate department presented to the Church and to each Sunday School class, woven reed flower and wastebaskets.

The junior girls presented to the Church kitchen, through the deacons' wives, a bountiful supply of embroidered towels and aprons, while the junior boys pleased their fathers with necktie racks. The primary department had made very attractive bookmarks, and had one for each teacher of the Bible school. They also had gifts of scrapbooks, receipt books, health books, posters, etc., which they distributed to various societies and individuals.

Our school grows in interest each year, and with the continued co-operation and enthusiasm of all, we hope for even a better session next year.

GOOD CITIZENSHIP.

The questions put to Jesus and Paul about taxes were not a matter of speculative casuistry on a current and passing incident. Passion was so fierce that whoever touched the subject, however cautiously, was certain to be burned. But Jesus was not afraid. There was nothing ambiguous about His answer. He did not say, "Pay your tribute if you think Caesar has a right to it." He said, "Pay Caesar just as you meet your obligation to God Himself." That word plaited His crown of thorns. The zealots who were aflame for the revolt which they hoped He would lead were disappointed and outraged beyond all measure. The Pharisees, who knew insurrection would be futile, but were implacable in their hatred of their conquerors, resented with fierce passion Jesus' command, "Love your enemies, the Romans!"

St. Paul's advice to the Christians in Rome sounds like a paraphrase of Jesus' words. He said, "Be submissive to the established government. It is a divine institution devised for human welfare. Recognize it as such, and govern yourselves accordingly. Be a good citizen, but not merely because you are afraid of the penalty attending the opposite course. On the contrary, be loyal, because in so being, you know yourself to be in harmony with the divine will. Pay your taxes for the same reason!" A high and secure basis for good citizenship is here revealed.

But the apostle carries it still higher in this philosophical thesis on government. Back of the technical obedience to law, its maker and administrator, there must be a dominating spirit of good will to others. Government is supported not because it is good policy, not because of the safety to person and property which it secures, but out of concern for the rights and comforts of others and because the individual citizen loves his neighbor in the same way that he loves himself. Love is the substratum of the Decalogue. Love fulfills the law.

St. Paul closes this paragraph with a military figure stirring enough to quicken the pulse of even a slacker. "The night is spent: the night in which our armor is laid off are the flesh indulged. The reville sounds! Day dawns! Awake! Put off the deeds of darkness. Put on the spirit and life of Jesus!"—Selected.

FRANKLIN AND THE MODERNS.

It is interesting to note that the theory held today of the mechanics of tornado formation and procedure coincides exactly with that advanced by Dr. Benjamin Franklin in 1753 or thereabout. In the complete edition of Dr. Franklin's works is a diagram to illustrate his theory. But the text itself is so clear that the drawing serves only as an extra guaranty.

The general conception of Dr. Franklin as a provincial Hogarth takes in only one relatively unimportant part of his character. His title of "philosopher" is thought to refer to his capacity for homely wisdom. In fact, it refers to his contributions to physical science. The examination and explanation of natural phenomena was in his day regarded as a philosophical function. What opened the doors of the Royal Philosophical Society to him was his invention of the lightning rod and his electrical experiments in general. His scientific activities comprehended a great deal more than the study of lightning. In his correspondence he tells of experiment after experiment made by him with electricity generated in his laboratory. He observed its effect on fowls, metals and other creatures and substances. He tested and classified materials according to their conductivity. He used electricity as a curative force in certain paralytic diseases.

Moreover, he wrote about his activities and speculations in such admirable language that one would wish to see modern discoursers on scientific subjects take him for a model. Even when he makes use of terms evidently contrived by himself, one follows him more easily than one could possibly do Bertrand Russell or any other contemporary enlightener of the people.—Exchange.

TRUE CULTURE.

If Jesus were in the world today, is it not probable that to reach scientists He would become a scientist, and show them His Father's creative skill? That to artists and poets He would tell that God was the great Artist, back of all beauty? Do you not think that He would be found in the college, and speaking with admiration about wisdom and knowledge? Only, at last, to say, and now where is the room dedicated not to the study of stones and stars and sheaves, but where you teach the science of right living and the art of being in harmony with God? Do you not think that He would go to the medical school and praise men for antiseptic surgery and the new discoveries in dulling pain, and would He not then ask to be shown the room where the surgeons amputated vices, and delivered from soul poisoning those in whose heart was the virus of hate and envy and avarice and hypocrisy. Everything that is wonderful was in Jesus' sermons—doctrines, ethics, parables, pictures, common life, children, birds, flowers, sages. His intellect miniatured the world. His genius was an ocean in which all the stars of heaven were mirrored. Oh, all ye young hearts, has life lost its charm, and the dew been burned from the grass, and books become dry as dust? Reopen the pages of the biography of Jesus. You will want this book under your pillow when you die—why not keep it in your hand while you are living. Do not let the little tallow candle eclipse the torch and the stars.—Newell Dwight Hillis, D. D.

CLEANING UP THE NEWS-STANDS.

Those who read Dr. Sheldon's article, "Clean Up the News-Stands!" last week will be glad to know that already all over the country a beginning has been made toward banning salacious periodicals. The start was made in Washington, D. C., where the police at first ordered news-stand proprietors to stop the sale of seven magazines, and eventually increased the list to include twenty-six periodicals. In New York City several arrests have been made, and newsdealers have been warned to remove objectionable magazines from their stands. Chicago officials have started a "clean-up" campaign. County prosecuting attorneys in the State of Washington are getting together in a State-wide fight against vice in print. In many other places the authorities are acting to protect youth.

Many persons have called the attention of the Post-Office Department to the menace, and the postal authorities have begun a study of the situation. Public officials as well as private citizens have urged that the mailing privilege be denied to objectionable publications, and postal officials have indicated their desire to bar smut from the mails.

How about the news-stands in your town? Is your community going to be left behind in the movement for a clean-up?—Christian Herald.

NIGHT FISHING.

For the purpoose of advertising fishing rods, the shopkeeper hung a large rod outside his shop, with an artificial fish at one end of it. Late one night Perkins, who had been dining a bit too well happened to see the fish. Going cautiously to the door, he knocked gently.

"Who's there?" demanded the shop keeper from an upper window.

"Sh-h! Don't make a noise, but come down as quietly as you can," whispered Perkins.

Thinking something serious was the matter, the man dressed and stole down stairs. "Now, what is it?" he inquired.

"Hist!" admonished Perkins. "Pull in your line quick; you've got a bite."

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

PASTORS CONFER TOGETHER.

"Forsake not the assemblying of yourselves together." One wishes that our pastors in the Christian Church could and would apply that to themselves. If obeyed, it would be a wonderful help.

Last week, Dr. W. W. Staley conducted a morning devotional period for pastors at the Elon Chautauqua. About fifteen pastors were there. In this service these pastors took stock of their assets and liabilities as pastors and preachers. Such an inventory must prove of unspeakable worth to the Church and to these pastors. But what was most needed was the presence of the pastors who were not there.

Pastors have problems, pitfalls, experiences and difficulties peculiar to themselves and their calling. No man can help them solve these problems and face these difficulties like other pastors. Out of the common lot and the experience of other ministers do pastors get a fellowship, a wisdom, and an insight that help them most in their pastoral duties.

It is to be hoped that some plan may be adopted or some course pursued that will bring our ministers together at least once a year to take cousel with each other and enjoy the fellowship of each other while in worship and praise, and thus learn to love each other better and to better understand each other's tasks and problems.

THE SUPREME PRAYER BOOK.

A recent writer has pointed out that the Bible is the world's supreme prayer book. What the writer means is that the world turns to the Bible to find its deepest expression of the prayer-life. "Prayer conditions it, accompanies it, is interwoven with it, permeates it like air or sunshine."

Yet nowhere in the Bible is given a theory or a definition of prayer. The Bible writers did not define prayer; they practiced it. They did not theorize about prayer; they lived it. In the Bible we have, as in no other book, God speaking to man, and then holy men, in reaction to God's revelations, crying out to Him.

True, Moses was the great lawgiver, but the recorded prayers of Moses are singularly sublime and spiritually uplifting.

David was a great king, a bold warrior, a matchless poet; but the sublimest utterances of his mouth are those found out in praise and prayer. Isaiah and Ezekiel, and Amos and Hosea and the others approach their highest, even in expressional life, in prayer.

All of the biographers (Matthew, Mark, Luke, John) of our Lord had to write prayers or they could not have given any accurate account of our Lord's life without doing so. For the very life of our Lord Jesus was the prayer-life. He prayed before beginning any great work and after finishing any great task. Denied a cloister or a room in which to pray, He made the hilltops, the mountainsides and the seashore His silent, secret, social places of prayer.

Paul's career as preacher and personality began in prayer, was sustained in prayer, and came to a close with an ever-deepening sense of prayer. And the last book of the Bible closes, as it opens, with a prayer on the pen of its writer.

What a pity it is that men will not understand what the Bible is, and what it is for—the Word of God in His relationship to man, and man's quest for God in the expression of his sincere and penitent heart.

PREPARING FOR THE PREACHED WORD.

The pastor has come to be regarded as the key-man in the Church. Whatever task the Church may be faced with, it is the pastor who has the responsibility for its doing upon his shoulders. He is expected to take the initiative; to prepare the hearts and minds of the people; to work out the plans; and to supervise the actual doing of the task. This is a very fine compliment to the pastor's position and power. In a sense, it is true. But it is not true in the sense that all the responsibility rests upon the pastor. Responsibility for every task of the Church rests upon the lay workers as well as upon the pastor. This applies even to the ministry of preaching.

We have come to think that the pastor, and the pastor alone, is responsible for the effectiveness of preaching. But every preacher who has had very much pulpit experience knows that the effectiveness of the sermon depends as much upon the congregation to which it is delivered as upon the preparation of the sermon, or the man who delivers it. Every preacher has had this experience: a sermon that has electrified one congregation will fall as upon deaf ears when delivered before another congregation. We recognize the fact that the physical and spiritual condition of the preacher, when he delivers the sermon, may have its effect. But this will not account entirely for the difference in effectiveness of a sermon, when delivered before different audiences. The congregation itself determines in a very large degree the effect of the sermon.

We have come to place too heavy a burden upon preaching. We expect the preacher to work miracles through his preaching. And many preachers, since they have found that they are expected to work miracles through their preaching, are doing their dead level best to measure up to what is expected of them. If a preacher is ministering to a pleasure-loving, world-minded people, he is expected, through his preaching, to change them into spiritually minded people who find their delight in doing the things of the kingdom. If his membership is selfish and stingy, he is expected, through his preaching, to convert them to the very soul of liberality. Should he be serving in a community where the people have no interest in the Church and in the things of the Spirit, then the preacher is expected to change all this through his preaching. This is expecting preaching to accomplish the miraculous. And it is expecting that which the Scriptures do not warrant us to expect.

Instead of preaching having produced miracles, according to the Scriptures (if I have not misunderstood them), miracles were, in almost if not every instance, to prepare the way for the delivering of God's message. They were to arrest the attention and challenge the consideration of the people. They were to prepare the way for the message God's man was about to speak. Before God gave to Moses the covenant and law, He had prepared the way, and created an expectation through the miraculous deliverance from Egypt and the crossing of the Red Sea. We can trace the same course of procedure in the ministry of Jesus. His great miracles prepared the way for His most important messages. He prepared the way for his sublime discourse on the bread of life by His miraculous feeding of the multitude. Before Peter delivered his matchless sermon on the Day of Pentecost, the crowd had been gathered, and their attention and interest secured through a miraculous manifestation.

It is not our intention to be dogmatic, but in so far as we are able to understand the reason for miracles, they are intended to arrest the attention of the masses, to arouse an interest in, and to create an expectation of the message, God is about to speak to, or to speak through, His messenger. If we mistake not, it is according to the economy of God that the miraculous operates on an ever-diminishing scale. That which God accomplishes in one age and generation through what we call miracles, God accomplishes in another and later age or generation through what we call human agencies. We may expect less and less of the miraculous as God works out and perfects His divine economy.

If this be true, then, instead of looking to the preacher to prepare the way for the doing of great things in the Church, should we not be looking to the Church to prepare the way for preaching through the doing of great things? We wonder why our preaching is accomplishing so little! Suppose, instead of looking to the preacher to stir up things through his preaching, the Church, through the lay workers, should begin to stir up things in preparation for the preaching of the Word. There are a few men in every generation who have the ability to move men mightily by their sermons. Such men are rare. But we believe that there is not a Church or congregation worthy of the name that could not draw the attention of the community and prepare for the preaching of the Word in mighty power if they were only willing to pay the price.

How may it be done? Let us consider a little. Suppose any Church—your Church, for instance—should say we believe that we are God's stewards. Every member of us is resolved that we will be good stewards. We will dedicate all that we have and are to the service of the kingdom, and we will consecrate to the service of the kingdom that part of our possessions which we believe God would have us give. We are going to bring all the tithes into His storehouse. Do you think it would be difficult to preach to such a congregation as that? What would be the attitude of the community toward such a Church as that?

Or suppose that a local Church should say we are willing to undertake Christ's commission to carry His gospel to all the world, and we are determined to do just as much, and to give just as much to carry the gospel to others as we do and spend for ourselves. Do you think there could be more effective publicity for a Church than that? Could a preacher face such a congregation as that from Sabbath to Sabbath, and go in and out among them during the week, and his preaching fail to take on a new note of conviction and power? The Word would be bound to fall into good soil, and produce an hundredfold in such a field as that.

Or again, suppose that the members of our Churches should really give themselves to the task of evangelism, each member saying, "God being my Helper, I am going to do everything in my power to bring some one else to a saving acquaintance with Jesus this year," and should begin to think, and work, and pray to that end. No preacher could preach to such a congregation as that, and in such an atmosphere as that, and his preaching not take fire. When we really begin to give ourselves to the task of the kingdom, then preachers can preach the Word with power. If every individual member should begin to do all within his power, the most poorly equipped minister would begin to preach the Word with power. And each pulpit would become a flaming evangel of the Word of God. S. C. H.

JOHN HUSS—THE WITNESS.

"The voice of one crying in the wilderness."—Luke 3:4.

If there is no greater love than this—that a man lay down his life for his friend—there certainly is no greater faith than this, that prompts a man to lay down his life for a principle—for the sake of truth. Jesus had that faith, as did also many of his early followers who suffered martyrdom rather than to renounce their faith. In every generation there have been men who offered up their lives upon the altar of truth and conviction. Many men would do it today were they called upon to express their Christian faith in that way.

But the blood of untold martyrs, from the early beginning of the Church of Christ on down through its history until within the past century and a half, has opened up to us and succeeding generations the fountain of freedom in religious faith and expression. As I have stood in foreign countries on the sites where hundreds of men and women in the time of the inquisition and the early reformation period were burned at the stake rather than to renounce their faith in Jesus Christ, I have had the question come home to me, "Would your faith stand such a test?"

John Huss was born in the year 1369 in the little hamlet of Husinec, in Bohemia, of poor and lowly parents. His father died, leaving the mother and son to fight the battle of life alone. And in that humble Bohemian home, the boy grew and developed who was destined to be one of the greater lights of the pre-Reformation. No doubt he would have said of his humble home what Andrew Carnegie said of his birthplace. When Carnegie was back to his birthplace, just a little two-room shack, in Dunfermline, Scotland, a few years ago, he wrote a few words in the visitors' diary. When in Dunfermline, I visited the place and read the words which he had hastily written, and the sentiment of which is the testimony of many of the world's greatest men in science and religion as well as in finance. These are the words: "My first visit to my humble birthplace—the home of honest poverty, but the best heritage a man can have when he has a heroine for a mother."

It was in just such a home that our Master grew and waxed strong in body, mind and spirit, and in such a home that John Huss, one of the truest of the Master's disciples, was reared. From early boyhood, Huss saw the power and the beauty of a consecrated Christian life in the person of his mother. She was the voice of the Lord to him. An expression of her deep religious conviction is shown in her giving her boy to God's service while he yet lay in the cradle. And all through those maturing years she committed him to the care and keeping of his Heavenly Father. He found his God through his mother's life. Would that all mothers might realize the opportunity they have of leading their sons into a knowledge of God by the unpretentious Christian lives they should live! Would that more mothers would give their sons at birth to God's service as did Mary the mother of Jesus, and as did the mother of John Huss, and as some mothers are doing today!

Huss received his master's degree from the famous University of Prague. He lived in advance of his day. The world was not ready to respond to the impact of his consecrated soul. Wiclif in England, Dante and Petrarch in Italy, and kindred minds in Germany and Switzerland, and leaders of the Moravian Bohemian Church, all made their contribution to the thought-life of the boy Huss, who, imbibing the spirit of reform, was to throw his life into the movement of righting the wrongs of the Church. And there were plenty of wrongs to be righted. The tolerated sins of the Church rasped the heart of the sincere Christian Huss, and provoked his protest and opposition. The priesthood was worldly and dissolute. The popes were living scandalous and horrible lives. Ecclesiastical preferment could be bought with money. The man with the most money naturally got the best position. Individual merit, and integrity of character were of little concern. Superstition among the common people kept them chained down in ignorance, and sin was flagrant among both the rich and the poor. The cross of Christ had been shattered to splinters by the gross inconsistency of the Church dignitaries. Worship had degenerated to a hollow lip service. The heart had been torn out of religion and thrown to the vultures of greed and pleasure.

With Huss, as with any consistent, God-fearing and God-loving Christian, these conditions were soul-rending. Others deplored the existing conditions, but dared not say anything. Not so with Huss; he would not be true to himself nor to his God if he said nothing in opposition to such conditions. Speak in protest he must, and his protest shook the world. He not only protested against the sins of the Catholic Church of his day; he reiterated the convictions of John of Milic, the archdeacon of Prague, and Conrad of Waldhausen, and Matthias of Janou, which ultimately found expression two hundred years later in the German reformation under Martin Luther, and which, in word, was this, namely: "the sufficiency of a crucified Christ, the universal spiritual priesthood of all believers, and their direct communion with Christ and access to God." He exposed the sins of the Catholic clergy, and because he spoke the truth as he saw it, many of his old friends turned against him. But he was a man who was determined to stand by the truth, even if he had to stand alone. Huss did not exactly break with the Catholic Church, but he broke with the practices and many of the tenets in the Catholic Church. He, as did Luther later, sought to effect a regenerated religious life from within the Church rather than to attack it from without. But in spirit and in fact he, as Luther, actually did break with the Catholic Church the moment they taught the idea of the priesthood of all believers—that every person could get forgiveness from God direct, and that, indeed, every person should give an account of himself to God. This point of view struck home at the very heart of the priestcraft and popedom. Hence, the priests and the pope condemned him, for if every believer has immediate access to Christ, and needs no intervention of man; if absolution belongs to the priest only in a restricted way, they could plainly see that Romanism would fall.

This was the chief contribution the Protestantism of the pre-reformers; that each person can go to Christ for himself and make confession to Him. This innovation of belief is the heart of Protestantism today, but it ultimately cost Huss and others their lives. In the year 1414 he was summoned to appear at Constance to defend himself against the charges of the pope and priests.

They accuse him of teaching the errors of Wiclif, the English reformer, but he tactfully met the accusation by saying, "he did not teach the errors of Wiclif or any other." The council was not shrewd enough to see his point. To the council, the entire teaching of Wiclif was error. Huss did not say he didn't teach any of Wiclif's ideas, but that he didn't teach any of Wiclif's errors. Of course, he would not teach what he knew to be an error. So Huss tactfully evaded the issue.

Again they charged him with appealing from the judgment of the pope to that of Christ. He gladly acknowledged this. He added "that there could be no more just or effectual appeal than to Him, who one day would pass final judgment on us all." The council met this, saying, with a derisive laugh, thus showing an almost utter lack of spiritual appreciation. He had been promised "a safe conduct" by the Emperor Sigismund to the council, but received mistreatment on every hand. The emperor himself cowered beneath the Catholic power, and did not have the courage to cross its path. Today the Church bows in obeisance to the State; then, the State bowed in obeisance to the Church, and ungodliness, corruption and sin was countenanced by both, which has always happened when the Church and the State need only to look through the pages of history to learn the inconsistency of their position.

It seems bad enough today for a man to be deprived of his life because of some treacherous sin against society, but Huss was put to death because he was a friend of society and a true servant of God.

The council which tried him was determined to be rid of him, unless he would recant the position he held and the faith he professed in Jesus Christ. When asked to recant, he replied that if they could convince him by Scripture that he was wrong, he would gladly recant. "How can I recant when I am innocent?" he said. The sentence of the council was then passed on his life. When he heard the sentence he knelt down and prayed: "O Lord, Christ, forgive mine adversaries. Thou knowest that I have been accused falsely by them, and that lying witnesses and calumnies have been brought against me. Forgive them for Thy great mercy's sake." His enemies jeered and made light of this expression of his sincerity and love for those who were about to take his life. Again he prayed when standing near the funeral pile, "Lord Jesus Christ, stand now by me, that by Thine help I may endure with manful, steadfast soul this cruel and shameful death to which I am condemned because I preached Thy word." When chained to the stake, he spoke, "Gladly do I bear these chains for Christ's sake, who hath borne a far heavier burden for me." Again he was offered sure pardon if he would recant and confess that he had been in the wrong in teaching the supremacy of Jesus over the pope; to which he replied, "What errors can I recant, when I am conscious of no error? The great object of my teaching repentance and forgiveness of sins to mankind according to the true gospel of Jesus Christ and the interpretation of the holy fathers, I am ready to die for with joyful heart."

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Failure is the reaction of success. Success in any field is fraught with danger. A larger aspiration than a desire for success is the desire for character and ability to bear success; yet the thought in many minds, as a goal, is to succeed. The best success is the success that does not fail. A man without possessions cannot go into bankruptcy. Nothing is so safe as poverty, and nothing is so dangerous as success. Fortune is often a misfortune, and penury may stir within men the inventive energy, the artistic gift, the progressive spirit, the vision that leads to success. It is hunger that moves men to seek food, and it is ignorance that stirs ambition and questions within the breast of the young. The sense of sin leads to repentance and faith.

It is often the case that the business outgrows the man—and then failure. It is a fine capacity that measures its own ability and keeps within bounds. Whenever a man succeeds, and then over-reaches his capital and capacity, he is in danger; the same is true of positions. The minister who is dissatisfied with a small place, and finally gets into a large place, may wreck his career. The same is true of political aspirants. It is better to develop a small field and make that a success than to win a large place and fail. It is humiliating to take a higher seat and then have to move to a lower seat; it is fine to occupy a lower seat and then rise by meritorious steps to a higher place; and there is always room at the top, and heaps of failures at the bottom. The main thing in life is to be faithful—"Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." The last thing that should concern the young is place and pay; yet that often concerns the young. Gold does not have to hunt first place among the metals; mints hunt the gold. Men do not have to hunt first place in society; society hunts for the men—therefore, "learn to labor and to wait." The main thing in life is to get in the right place. That is true in the labor world, the educational world, the business world, the social world, and the religious world. It would not do to make a car wheel out of silver, nor a wedding ring out of iron; but there is not a metal in all the earth that does not succeed when it finds its true place. The same is true of woods, and animals as well. A mule would fail on the race track, and a hog would fail in the chase. "To every man his work." Office men could never build an engine or a steamer. If all were preachers, where were the laymen? If all were clerks, where were the cooks? If all were lawyers, where were the clients? The most difficult task for the young is to find one's place; and there would be no failures if all were in their place.

The world has made too many distinctions among workers in the kingdom and in business as well. The stoker is just as much a necessity in the sailing of a ship as the captain. The layman is just as much a necessity in the kingdom as the minister. Both make up the Church, and the Churches make up the kingdom.

ELON LETTER.

The 1925 summer school is closed. No, rather it has just begun. Those who were here—more than 200—have returned to their homes to be torchbearers of a new day of religious leadership in the Churches. "I can never teach the same way I have been teaching," declared one earnest Christian worker. Many must have felt that way about it.

Our visiting friends have been very kind and appreciative in their expressions relative to the new Elon. It is the first session of the summer school since the new buildings were completed. There has been special praise for the library, the auditorium, and the Christian education buildings, the three of the new group which, in a special sense, met the needs of the summer school. The visiting faculty members found the offices provided them in the library building, as well as the use of the books in the library stack-room, a real contribution to the efficiency of their work.

The auditorium was used for the evening and Sunday worship services, and, whether those services were lectures, music, preaching, pictures, or pageants, the building was found to be ideal for the purpose. The great Skinner organ, with Mrs. W. D. Parry presiding, rejoiced every heart.

The Mooney Christian Education Building, of course, came in for most praise. It is a technical building, designed for teaching the theory and demonstrating the practice of a full program of religious education. It was found to be exactly suited to the summer school plans. So pleased did the faculty and visitors find themselves with it that they sent a telegram of thanks and appreciation to the donors, Mr. and Mrs. M. Orban, Jr.

I was literally embarrassed by the thanks the visitors insisted on repeatedly expressing to me for the use of the plant. I always replied, "Why, you have just come to your own. The Christian Church made Elon possible and the Church people have the right to use it for educational purposes."

I wish to thank the friends for using the plant. They honored us by their coming. May they come again and in increasing numbers.

II. THE THREEFOLD WORK OF THE HOLY SPIRIT.

The Holy Spirit, the Christian's Guide.

"Howbeit when He, the Spirit of truth, is come, He will guide you into all truth, for He shall not speak of Himself; but whatsoever He shall hear, that shall He speak, and He will show you things to come."—John 16:13.

We have seen that the Holy Spirit, in His relation to the sinner, comes as a friend to reprove of sin and to warn of danger. The text of Scripture to which I have just referred, shows that after the sinner has accepted Christ through the Spirit's invitation, his pathway in life will lie in a different direction. The life that has been governed by selfishness, and whose highest goal has been the gratification of the flesh and the quest of pleasure, is to have a higher aim and an entirely different goal. As he has become a "new creature," he must have a guide that will lead him into the truth about his new life and how to sustain it, so that he will grow and be a blessing to the world and an honor to God. He who has turned from sin to righteousness and has experienced the forgiveness of his sins, is soon brought to realize that it will take some power outside himself to keep alive the new life principle that became his with the pardon of his sins. He finds that his aspirations are different; his purposes and plans run in a different direction. He finds that he has longings for the subjugation of his entire being to the will of another, who is unseen and yet real to him. He experiences a growing desire to know just how he should treat his neighbor; just how he should treat one that would do him a wrong—an enemy. He finds that he has a relation to his day and generation that is new to him. He finds that there is a relation to his earthly possessions—his money and his property—that is calling for an adjustment that will be in harmony with the source of his new life. He finds that his whole moral nature is calling for light on all the problems of life. He recognizes the fact that the Spirit that befriended him in the day when he walked in darkness, manifested its power through an authoritative word, which had told him that "the wages of sin is death"; that "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." These words of authority on the penalty for sin, and the law of the harvest, had led him, through the influence of the Spirit, to change his sowing and accept God's gift of eternal life through Jesus Christ. He found that the Spirit that was a friend in the days of his rebellion and rejection of Christ, was now manifesting its interest in him as a guide, and hence it became a great comfort to him to know that he was to have a never-failing and unerring guide in all the problems of his new life in Christ Jesus. The words of Jesus that I have referred to at the beginning of this article became, therefore, a source of comfort and assurance, for they promised guidance into "all truth." The Holy Spirit will never guide contrary to the will of God as revealed in the Bible, for we are told that He had something to do with the revelation of that will. "For the prophecy came not in old time (margin, "any time"), by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit."—2 Peter 1:21.

"All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works."—2 Tim. 3:16-17. The line of duty and privilege for the Christian will lie in the pathway of obedience to this revealed will of God, and surely the Spirit will never lead one contrary to that revealed will.

Not only will the Spirit lead in the path of duty, but in this path of duty, if obediently followed, the Spirit will so manifest his power that the child of God will soon begin to realize that associated with the new life principle he has received is a power that has no connection with the old life of sin. He realizes in his own experience the truth of the statement of Scripture, "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature; old things are passed away; behold all things are becoming new." The Word of God becoming real to him in the beginning of his new life, it soon became evident to him that if he was to be guided by the Spirit that led him out of darkness, he must study the Book through which the Spirit guides—the Bible.

A definite Christian experience is the beginning of the Christian life is of great value to the man or woman who has turned from sin. To be able to say, as did the blind man to whom Jesus gave sight, "One thing I know, that whereas I was blind, now I see," is of great value to the Christian. If one can say, "I was burdened and made miserable by the guilt of sin, but now I am free from condemnation," he has a testimony that has an overcoming power in it, and if he follows that guiding of the Spirit, he will use this power of testimony to the glory of God and the salvation of others. I am not contending or saying that it is necessary for one to have a cataclysmic experience such as Paul had, but it is necessary for one to realize that he has put himself in such relation with God that he knows he has God's Holy Spirit to guide him in his conduct and work of life. The "work of life" includes the whole life, for the Spirit was given to guide in the secular affairs of life as well as in the purely religious realm. If the Spirit was given to guide "into all truth," certainly there must be the guiding into the truth about one's business and social relationships, for there is a right and a wrong in every realm of human interests. The Holy Spirit points out the right way, and warns against the wrong way. The individual that does not recognize the guidance of the Holy Spirit in the secular affairs of life cannot truthfully lay claim to being a Christian, for the Holy Spirit is interested in the whole life of the child of God: all his relationships—personal, domestic, business, and social, as well as devotional or religious.

I think no one will contend that the Christian's happiness is sometimes found in an attitude contrary to the Spirit's leading. The Spirit's leading will very often be contrary to the desires of the flesh, and that is where the crosses of life are found; but Jesus said, "He that taketh not his cross and followeth after me is not worthy of me." All the mistakes and failures in Christian lives are due to the lack of willingness to follow the guidance of the Holy Spirit.

There are certain habits that Christians cannot indulge in and maintain the full power of the Spirit There are certain amusements that do not meet with the Spirit's approval, and do not add to the Christian's real joy if he indulges in them. I think a careful study of the Word of God and a sincere desire to follow the Spirit would change the whole life of many Christians, and add immensely to their power for good and greatly increaes their joy.

It is erroneous for one to contend that "if one does not follow the Spirit perfectly, one does not follow Him at all," but it is true that the power and influence of the Christian is measured by his willingness to follow the leading of the Holy Spirit. If the Holy Spirit guides the Christian into some things, He must of necessity lead him away from other things. To illustrate: Here is a man engaged in a business which, by many, is considered questionable; and this man feels that he should take his stand with the people of God in service in some definite way, but he begins to feel that his business stands in his way. Now, if the Spirit is to lead this man into some definite service, he must first lead him away from the business in which he feels dissatisfied, if not condemned.

In the days before the auto, a certain man was keeping a livery barn. His livery rigs were hired out at so much an hour or so much a day. Sundays, when the roads and weather were favorable, he found, were his big-paying days; and, of course, he appreciated, and was glad, when it was favorable weather on Sundays—that was his attitude before his awakening. I was conducting a revival meeting in his town, and he was becoming seriously concerned about his standing with God. I talked with him and tried to persuade him to give his life and influence on the side of Christ and the Church. I did not condemn his business, but, in conversation, he said, "I will have to give up my business if I become a Christian and join the Church, for I do not believe a man can be a Christian and hire his horses out on the Sabbath and have them abused." Still, I did not condemn his business; I knew it was the work of the Spirit to reprove him of sin, but I did tell the man that if his business stood between him and God, it would be better for him to give up his business than lose his soul. So far as I know, that man chose to reject the leading of the Spirit. Poor soul! What did it profit him to refuse to be led out of what he felt stood between him and God?

The Spirit, if followed, will reveal God's plan for life, and that plan will bring more real joy and satisfaction to the life than any other course that could be pursued. It may be that some Christian is reading these lines who says, "My Christian life has not afforded me the peace and joy that others seem to get out of their Christian experience." But consider this: you know, and if you will confess the truth, you will say, "I have not allowed the Spirit to lead me in all things." Oh, disappointed child of God! Have you not failed to catch the meaning in your own life of this Scripture? "And they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts. If we live in the Spirit, left us also walk in the Spirit." Examine your habits and your life, honestly in the light of this Scripture, and you will find the reason for your disappointment. You are making choice between the way of the Spirit and the way of the world, in favor of the world, and no wonder you do not have joy and peace. The flowers of God's peace do not grow on the banks of the streams of sinful pleasure.

If you want abounding joy, if you want overcoming grace, if you want peace that satisfies, let God's Spirit lead you unto all truth. There may be an inner truth you should pay special attention to. It may be a truth about some confession you should make, some restitution for a wrong committed against another, a truth about your relation to your time or your money. There may be a public confession you should make. You have the key to your own spiritual condition—turn the key; open the heart to the incoming of the Holy Spirit. He will reveal to you the things that stand in the way of His leading. And as He reveals, if you will give up those things He bids you give up, joy and peace and power will come into your life.

The Holy Spirit is the Christian's guide; and let me lay emphasis on that word Christian without prefixing the word "professing." What power the Church would have if the number of Christians equaled the number of professing Christians! I think every real Christian wants to be, and is, led by the Holy Spirit, but I cannot say this of every professing Christian. However, the Holy Spirit seeks to lead every professing Christian, but many refuse to follow.

A few words from John's first letter may help us in the closing of our consideration of this subject. "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world—the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life—is not of the Father, but is of the world. And the world passeth away and the lust thereof; but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever."

WATCHING FOR SNARES.

Satan never gives up, so it is necessary that we be ever vigilant, always watching carefully, that we, as followers of the Lord, may avoid misconduct. "Beware," "take heed," "watch" are the words of warning sounded out all through the Scriptures. "Beware that thou forget not the Lord thy God." We wonder that the children of Israel could so easily forget Him when He manifested His mighty power and love toward them so often! Aften their experience at the Red Sea, we wonder that they could ever forget the One who saved them, or that they could ever desire to again return to Egypt's bondage.

Men do not change much in their natures. How quickly the disciples forgot! What pathos there is in the Master's "Do ye not remember?" "How is it ye do not understand?" But they were not the last of His followers to forget His ability, or requirements of His followers. There are still those who have been marvelously led and cared for by the Lord of Hosts, forgetting Him and returning to the world. We are to "beware lest we, being led away by the error of the wicked, fall from our steadfastness." There are paths the feet of our Guide will not tread, and our place is by His side, "walking even as He walked."

"Take heed that thou be not snared by following them." Satan has many snares, but perhaps the one most commonly used is the one known as "the fear of man." We are so afraid of being laughed at by our fellow-men, and so afraid of being called peculiar, that we yield to the temptation to do the questionable things those about us are doing, rather than endure their sneers and laughter.

Why be so afraid of that word "peculiar," when it is just what God wants—a "peculiar people." A people wholly unlike the world. A people who will not do what the world is doing, but will be obedient in all places and under all circumstances. Do you want an antidote for the fear of man? It is just this—the fear of God. When we learn to fear Him, "whom, having not seen, we love," the fear of man is soon forgotten.

"Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth, keep the door of my lips." The lips are the door which shuts in that unruly member which no man can tame. If left unguarded, the door flies open, that unruly member breaks loose, and things are said which never ought to be said; words are spoken which grieve the Master because of the harm done to others, and the greater harm done to the speaker. Not only do our lips need constant watching, but our feet must be watched, lest they stray into forbidden paths. The hands and the heart also need constant watching, for it is "he who hath clean hands and a pure heart" that "shall stand in his holy place"; and it is only the pure in heart who shall see God.

We are not only to watch, but we are to pray, that we enter not into temptation. The flesh is weak; we cannot meet alone the temptations which come to us. It requires the Victor's power and presence to put to flight our powerful enemy who so cunningly seeks to ensnare the Lord's followers. We dare not neglect either the watching or the praying. If we become negligent in either we soon find ourselves entangled in one of the evil one's snares. "Watch ye, therefore, for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come." "What I say unto you, I say unto all—watch."

THE GOD WHO AFFLICTS.

God is as certain to afflict us as to love us. God afflicts us because He loves us; He could not be the God of love unless He were the afflicting God. For affliction is for our healing, our strengthening, our blessing. Should we wish to be treated by a physician or surgeon who stopped his treatment the moment he saw it was causing us pain? Or do we feel safer in the hands of a physician who says reassuringly, "This may hurt you, but it will not injure you; and it will get you entirely rid of your trouble."

A skillful dentist, of deservedly wide reputation, once said to a patient who complained that he was being hurt: "I have no desire to have the reputation of never hurting any patient." For such a dentist would certainly have the reputation, sooner or later, of slighting his work and doing his patients real injury. The psalmist who knew God and His love sang: "I know, O Lord, that Thy judgments are right, and that Thou, in faithfulness, has afflicted me." Let us sing that song with joy and trust and thanksgiving, remembering that an unafflicting God would be a faithless God.

STEWARDSHIP AND PROMOTION

Warren H. Denison, D. D., Secretary.

United Brethren Inspire Us.

At their Buffalo quadrennial general conference they took a strong stewardship action. Their general board of administration, Dr. S. S. Hough, secretary, has set its hand "to make the study and practice of Christian stewardship real, practical, attractive and universal. While much has been done in a general way during the last twenty years to give instruction on the different aspects of stewardship, including tithing, yet we all recognize that the efforts made thus far have not been adequate nor sufficiently definite to inspire the large permanent results needed. Must we not now inaugurate a siege-movement which will make the approach to the little children, to the youth and to the adults, and which will visualize before all the members of the Church the fight which they must make in order that Christ may be actually enthroned as a real partner in all things throughout their entire lifetime?

The united stewardship movement now going forward in all the denominations gives promise of bringing to all members of the Church a richer joy and greater victory than has yet been experienced. We do not know of any other communion in the country in which greater progress may be made in stewardship, with a proper and sustained effort put forth, than in the United Brethren Church. All too many of the members of the Protestant Churches of America have been deceived by thinking that joining the Church was more or less an end in itself.

Our big task must be that of getting the new Church member and all who are now identified with the Church to practice throughout their lifetime what they profess when they yield to Christ and join His Church.

Our General Conference took strong action, recommending a more thorough-going study and practice of this vital question of stewardship. No more important work can engage the attention of a sub-committee of this Board during the next four years than that of thinking, planning and working to get all the members of our Church to recognize and practice stewardship by putting aside at least one-tenth of their income in recognition of God's sovereign ownership and their trusteeship."

This action expresses the great need in our own Church. This great spiritual teaching of the Word needs the united efforts of all our workers, pastors, leaders, officers.

Dr. Hough, referred to above, has been secured to give a stewardship message at this fall's session of the Central Christian Convention.

The president of a Ministerial Association speaks on "Tithing." Rev. E. T. Cotton is our pastor at Oshawa, Ontario, and president of the city Ministerial Association. He says:

"I began tithing soon after marriage, my 'better-half' having persuaded me to adopt this method. I was immediately blessed financially. Tithing causes clothes to last longer, the heart to beat lighter, and joy to flood the soul, because of the tither's being a partner with God."

TO MISSION TREASURERS.

Mrs. M. L. Bryant, Superintendent of Missions,
Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention,
Berkley, Va.

Dear Sister:

Answering your inquiry for your report to the Convention, I find the following:

I thought it would be of interest to you and your Sunday School to know just what your school and the other schools of your Convention have contributed to missions the past year, ending June 1st. This is the report to be made to your Sunday School Convention at Antioch in July. I think it shows up fairly well, though I deeply regret that there are yet a few schools in your Convention which do not take the monthly missionary offering.

I trust that all the schools will be encouraged by what has been done the past year and will endeavor to make the offering greater for the year ending June 1, 1926. This wish is made because the demands are more pressing now, and, as you know, all this money goes to the support and extension of our work in Carroll County, Va.

Whatever you can do to interest your school more deeply and more liberally in the mission work will certainly be appreciated. I thank you heartily for your kindness, as treasurer, in having sent in the offerings promptly the past year.

Fraternally,

Mission Secretary.

The above letter was written to all Treasurers in Eastern Virginia Conference paying to missions, June 25, 1925.

PROMOTING WORLD FELLOWSHIP AND PEACE.

By Rev. Francis E. Clark, D. D., LL. D.

The influence of the Christian Endeavor movement in promoting peace and good will between denominations and races and nations of the world has not been fully realized, so quietly and unostentatiously have the individual societies done their work. But the very genius of the society has made it inevitably a movement for interdenominational and international good will, and good will must lie at the basis of peace, whether between individuals or nations.

Members of the societies did what individually they considered their patriotic duty in the war days, and there were few so-called "conscientious objectors" in their ranks. But the very fact that among the millions of Endeavorers some are found in all the nations of the world, and in all Protestant denominations, made world fellowship inevitable for young people who have taken the same obligations, subscribed to the spirit of the same pledge, worked along the same lines, covenanted with the same Lord, in the same way.

It was feared, even by the Christian Endeavor leaders in America, that the war would disrupt the society as a world movement, and they were surprised and rejoiced to learn at its close that the societies had increased in Hungary, and doubled in Germany, and that all the Christian Endeavor Unions had held their regular national and other conventions in the dark days of the war, almost without interruption.

What organization in America, if imported from one of the "enemy countries," would have retained its popularity and increased in numbers during the years 1914-1918?

The reason undoubtedly was that the societies in all lands stuck to their principles as a purely religious, non-political organization, owing allegiance only to their own Churches, their own country, and their God.

When the war closed, there were in the Christian Endeavor ranks few sores to heal, or broken bones of good fellowship to bind up.

In other wars, too, the society has exerted the same influence. After the Spanish War, Christian Endeavor went in at once with the missionaries to the Philippines, Cuba, and Porto Rico, as an instrument of fellowship and good will. It has brought Mexicans and Yankees together in Texas and Mexico, in neighborly Christian union, and, through its international conventions has increased the good will of Canadians and the young people of the United States, who have in these meetings often taken counsel together, in all good feeling. In Arizona and New Mexico, whites and Indians mingle fraternally in Christian Endeavor conventions, the Indians often being the hosts.

A striking example of the healing power of religion over the hearts of young people was shown after the Boer War in South Africa. As is well known, the bitterness excited by this war between the two races has seldom been exceeded. The war was fought chiefly, as is usual, by young soldiers, some of whom, on both sides, were Endeavorers. Many hundreds of young Boers were captured and sent by the British government to prison camps in St. Helena, Ceylon and Bermuda. Here a revival of religion broke out among them, and hundreds of these young converts formed themselves into societies of Christian Endeavor; no less than nineteen societies in the prison camps of St. Helena alone, and as many on other islands. They had their union meetings, published a little paper, The Striver, and were even able to hold miniature conventions between the members of different prison camps.

When in Capetown, the chief city of South Africa, I was able to attend the first united meeting of any kind, of Boers and British, a very few months after the cruel war came to an end. It was a Christian Endeavor union meeting. Many young men from both armies were present. The utmost good feeling prevailed, and before the meeting closed, all united in repeating, each in his own language, the 23d Psalm and the Lord's Prayer, and in singing in the two languages, to the old tune of "Dennis," the supreme hymn of Christian fellowship:

"Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in Christian love."

Since the World War closed, the same influences have been at work in Europe. The Swedish-speaking Finlanders and the Finnish-speaking people of Finland, who have not always been on the best of terms, have united in Christian Endeavor meetings. In Poland, the Polish and German Endeavorers came together in the Christian centers for days of prayer and hearty communion. In Latvia, the Lettish and German Endeavorers have learned to fraternize in their community meetings.

The latest example of this union of hearts has been the great Christian Endeavor fellowship convention recently held in Hamburg, Germany, under the auspices of the European Christian Endeavor Union. Seventeen European nations were represented by delegates, and some 12,000 people crowded the largest halls in Hamburg, and processions of Christian young people, with their songs and banners, gave Hamburg a sight it had never before witnessed. Germans and French, Hungarians and Poles, Czecho-Slovakians and Jugo-Slavians, Russians and Scandinavians, English and Portugese, were all there in happy accord. The swords of war-hate were beaten into plowshares of useful common service, and the spears into pruning-hooks of a common religious purpose.

The American State conventions, never so large as during the past year, do much for good fellowship between our different sections and nationalities. Young people of the east and west and north and south come to know and esteem each other. Whites and blacks and yellows and representatives of all the races whom cosmopolitan Europe has sent to our shores, attend these meetings and find in this brotherhood common purposes and emotions, and methods of service they had not before realized. Representatives of fifty different denominations, increasing in numbers every year, declare their loyalty to their own Churches, and their friendship with all other Christians, and their desire for genuine interdenominational and international fellowship, in a multitude of Christian Endeavor conventions and union meetings.

Who can doubt that this is of God's ordering, in these days of clannishness, and of sectional and racial enmities?

A supreme desire and prayer of the Christian Church for years has been for greater interdenominational fraternity and closer union. God has answered these prayers among our young people. Shall we not co-operate with Him in this great method of promoting Christian fellowship and world-wide fraternity?

WHAT C. E. MEANS TO ME.

What does C. E. mean to me? That seems to be a peculiar question to ask myself, yet it is not peculiar when I realize that I have been in a C. E. Society since I was about six years old.

It seems strange that, out of the twenty-six letters of the alphabet, there are two that mean more to me than all the rest put together—C. E. Somehow I like to say the whole words—Christian Endeavor—it seems that when I say Christian Endeavor I know it means to endeavor to do something that is Christ-like, and that brings me nearer to Christ and the Church.

Many are the times since I have been older that I have become annoyed over some trifle that would happen in the various organizations of the Church, and I would say that I wasn't going there any more. Then I would remember some office I held in the C. E. Society, if it was only the chairman of a committee, and I knew that I would have to remain for the rest of the six months. Then after that time I would be all right and forget the little thing that had annoyed me. So now I am still in the Church because of the Christian Endeavor Society that I have always loved and had a great respect for.

In our C. E. business meetings I have learned how to discuss subjects in public and how to conduct public meetings. These little meetings mean a great deal to me and have helped me not to be timid, but to say what I think.

I would rather go to a Christian Endeavor social once a month than to go to a regular party once every week. In the C. E. socials one meets the right kind of associates; not those who carry flasks on their hips, but the kind our parents like to see us go around with. My mother never worries when she knows I am at a C. E. social. At the C. E. socials we are going to play good, clean games that every one enjoys; we are not going to have a social that drags along, but good, lively socials, with games and contests that help to develop our minds and keep us full of activity.

The C. E. social is the place to get acquainted. Here no one waits for an introduction; everybody is just like one big family that has gathered for a real pleasant evening with no thought of worry.

Some people think you cannot afford to have a C. E. social once every month, because of the expense, for, as a rule, we like some kind of refreshments. It is nice to have refreshments, but the simplest kind will do. My society recently had a social, and we only served lollypops. I think every one present enjoyed themselves as much as if they had had ice cream and cake. So I have learned at C. E. socials to enjoy myself with just the companionship of others.

In Christian Endeavor I have learned to pull together with the other members. Today I see a number of boys and girls who just think of good times for their own little group. This is not true in C. E. In C. E. I have learned not to always think of myself, but to help the other fellow. One day one of my friends was trying to console me because I had not made an average high enough to be exempt from an examination. She said, "The reason you don't get along any better in your studies is because you are always helping some one else. You never think about your own lessons if some one else is having a hard time learning theirs, not if you can help them. Why don't you put more time on your own lessons instead of helping others?" I told her that was the highest compliment any one could have paid me. I learned in C. E. how to be happy while helping others instead of always working for my own selfish benefits. So by being a Christian Endeavorer and learning to help others, I gained many friends in my school days that I would not have made had I not been taught this in C. E. since I was six years old.

What does C. E. mean to me morally? Why, it means everything. I believe the C. E. pledge has made a greater impression on me than anything else. Of course, I joined the Church when I was young, bue not before I had joined C. E., and since that time I do not believe I have had anything to impress me as much as signing the pledge.

Some people say, "I am willing to join the C. E. Society, but I don't want to sign the pledge." Are you asked when signing the pledge to do anything that a true child of God should not do? Isn't it as much my duty to pray and read the Bible every day as it is my minister's? Shouldn't I strive to do whatever Jesus would like to have me do? Shouldn't I support my Church, especially by being present at the meetings and taking some part? Isn't it my duty to try to live a Christian life? All of these things I should be willing to do without signing a pledge. The pledge has been called impossible. Is it impossible to die? Then neither is the C. E. pledge impossible. Signing the pledge seemed to give me a sense of obligation; an obligation that I have tried to keep.

In C. E. I have learned to pray in public as well as in private. Many times just the shortest sentence uttered prayerfully will give me a feeling of relief. Many times when I have a hard task to perform, just before I get ready to begin I will say, "Oh, Lord, help me in this work, and if it is Thy will let me make a success of it." More than once I have gone to my classes at school unafraid just because of a second that I had talked with God while I was walking through the halls. When anything goes wrong in my C. E. Society I talk it over with God, so I have learned to do it out in my daily life, which has helped me more times than I will ever be able to count, because C. E. has taught me to believe in prayer.

Christian giving is something that should occupy the attention of all of us. In C. E. we have what is known as the Tenth Legion, in which we sign a pledge and promise to give one-tenth of all we have for religious purposes. This we should all be willing to do. It is another obligation. All that we have belongs to God. He just lends it to us, so why can't we give Him back just one-tenth, when all of it already belongs to Him? I have had more pleasure out of Christian giving since I signed the Tenth Legion pledge than ever before. Now I know it is a duty, and I enjoy doing it. C. E. has taught me the pleasure of Christian giving.

If C. E. cannot help us; if it cannot teach us greater and better things, why do the largest cities in the country claim the Endeavorers for their conventions? It is not simply because they bring a crowd and increase the trade, but because the civic authorities realize that such throngs of clean, earnest, religious young people bring with them a peculiar blessing from on high; so C. E. helps me to be more loyal to Christ and the Church for which I stand. C. E. has helped me when I start anything to say, "What would Jesus like to have me do? Would I be ashamed for Jesus to see me reading this book? Would I be ashamed for Him to see me at this place? Would I be ashamed for Him to hear me say this? Would I be ashamed for Him to see me with this person? Would I be ashamed for Him to see me do this?" And, above all, C. E. has helped me to think of others and to say, "What would Jesus do if He were in my place?" That is what C. E. means to me.

JOHN HUSS—THE WITNESS.

The fagots were set on fire. Huss began, with a clear voice, singing "Jesus, Thou Son of the Living God, have mercy upon me"; but the flames blew into this mouth and choked his voice. His head sank, while his soul entered into that life beyond. So bitter was the hatred of his enemies that they took his ashes and threw them into the River Rhine.

But they could not kill the work of so valiant a son of God, even though they burned his writings. To him largely belongs the credit of preparing the way for the German Reformation. He sowed the seed for a larger kingdom of God in human society. Luther, who was better instructed, more enlightened and a bigger mind, was imbibed by the same spirit that inspired Huss, and though he met with a similar opposition, yet the experiences of Huss made the way easier for Luther. The world was more ready to respond to his message because the spirit of Huss had been at work in the minds and hearts of men.

Were Huss living today, and teaching the message he did, he would be considered a fanatic conservative, though at that time he was considered a fanatic liberalist. Thus is the story of human progress written and read. What seems dangerously new to one generation is meaninglessly old to the next. And thus have men been pushing humanity up just a little nearer God from generation to generation. Men have been throwing off the old molds of religious expression and making new ones. They have not been willing to put the new wine into the old bottles; the new religious appreciations into the old forms of expression. The heterodoxies of yesterday have become the orthodoxies of today, and the heterodoxies of today will be the orthodoxies of tomorrow. In a sense, each generation does the thinking for the succeeding generation. This is true in a measure in every department of life, but especially is it true in religion.

Huss thought the thoughts that dominated the life of generations that followed him. And upon his contribution, men have been building ever since. He was true to the light that he had. Luther said of him, "Out of John Huss' blood the gospel we now have was born."

His life and teachings in behalf of religious liberty have been a benediction to all succeeding generations. His courage of conviction and protest against sin is a challenge to us to follow his example of loyalty to Christ and the truth.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

By H. S. Hardcastle.

MISS PATTIE COGHILL, Field Secretary

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

August 23, 1925.

Subject: "The Macedonian Call."

Golden Text: "Come over into Macedonia and help us."—Acts 16:9.

Lesson: Acts 16:6-15.

Devotional Reading: Isa. 6:1-8.

Some men are self-starters; others have to be cranked. Paul belonged to the former class. He was a human "perpetual-motion" machine, and the motive power, as he said, was the love of Christ which constrained him. Dwelling in his heart through faith was the living Christ, and Christ living in him furnished the dynamic power that sent him far and wide declaring the unsearchable riches of Christ. May it not be that the reason why we do so little for Christ is because we know so little of Christ?

"And they went through the region of Phrygia and Galatia, having been forbidden of the Holy Spirit to speak the word in Asia. And when they were come over against Mysia, they assayed to go into Bithynia, and the Spirit of Jesus suffered them not. Why not? Here were two whole provinces, teeming with people and steeped in paganism. Here were Smyrna and Ephesus, large cities and centers of culture. Here were dire needs on the part of men and women that the gospel which Paul and his companions had alone could meet. What a strange restriction the Spirit put upon these earnest and enthusiastic men! The Scriptures do not say why they were forbidden to go into these provinces. But they do say that they did not go. Their's, like every other loyal Christian, is not to reason why—their's is but to obey. We are to obey; not to ask questions. There are many frustrated purposes in life. In many cases, the purposes seemed good in themselves. But He who seeth the end from the beginning will make all things to work together for good to those who love Him and obey Him.

The very fact that the men were forbidden to go into Mysia and Bithynia reveals a most inspiring truth. "The steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord." He that willeth to do His will shall know that will. And, as George Muller once said, "The stops as well as the steps are ordered by the Lord." Happy is that man who knows that he is walking in the ways of the Lord. Happy is that man who has understood what the will of the Lord is to do it. We hear much these days of choosing a lifework. May it not be that the more important thing is to find one's lifework? Many of life's failures may be due to choosing instead of seeking.

"And passing by Mysia, they came down to Troas. And a vision appeared to Paul in the night. There was a man of Macedonia standing, beseeching him, and saying, "Come over into Macedonia and help us." Troas was on the Aegean Sea, and was a gateway to Europe and the West. Paul, no doubt, saw many men of Macedonia in the streets of Troas, and as he looked across the blue waters of the Aegean Sea, the dim outlines of the countries on the other side loomed up before him, if not to the natural eye, at least to the inner eye. It is quite likely that he had thought of going over and possessing the land even before this. At any rate, as he slept that night there came a vision to him in which a man of Macedonia stood up and, with outstretched hands, besought him that he would come over and help his countrymen. It was more than a mere psychological phenomenon; it was a message and a summons from the divine. Here again we find a stirring truth. The man with an open mind and a responsive heart will see ever larger visions of the purposes of God for his life.

"And when he has seen the vision, straightway we (the "we" indicates that Luke becomes an eyewitness, and hence a companion of Paul) sought to go forth into Macedonia, concluding that God had called us to preach the gospel unto them." Straightway—duty follows hard on vision. Paul and Luke could put two and two together and make four. They did not dismiss the thing as a coincidence; they saw in it the work of God. It was a vision from Him of His purpose for them, and they were not disobedient to the heavenly vision. Straightway they set sail from Troas, and eventually landed at Philippi, a city of Macedonia, the first of the district, a Roman colony. And here the justification of it all begins to appear. As Dean Brown says, "Paul gave up his plan to enter a province, and God gave him a continent. Europe was even then taking the right of the line. Rome ruled the world and Rome was in Europe. Here to the west was that continent which for two thousand years should exercise a dominant influence upon the life of the whole race, such as Asia in all that period never approached. Under the moral power of that gospel which he carried that day across the Aegean, Europe has gained a clear ascendency over all the other continents of the world in the development and in the expression of Christian impulse. The sublimest manifestations of Christian sentiment we know in Christian art and in Christian architecture, in Christian music and in Christian literature, have come, not from Asia, where Christianity was born, but from Europe, where Paul and his fellow-missionaries carried their gospel that day when they crossed from Troas to Macedonia."

In spite of the fact that the vision pictured a man of Macedonia representing need, so far as we know, there was not one man in Macedonia who really wanted Paul. As a matter of fact, he found a few bigoted Jews, some crazy soothsayers and witches, and multitudes of indifferent heathen, but not one who met him at the ship and asked him for his help. Here is another stirring fact. The unconscious needs of the world are appeals and cries to God and to His servants. Wherever there is heathenism, or darkness, or injustice, or suffering, or sin, there He hears the soul crying out for the light of life.

Paul's impact on Europe was modest enough. There was not even a synagogue in Philippi, so he resorted to the river outside the city, where he would be most likely to find Jews at worship if he found them at all. A few women were there, and one of them—a Jewish proselyte; Lydia by name, and a seller of purple by trade—inspired by the Spirit and of the Lord, became a follower of the Master. She thus became the type of that redeemed, freed womanhood which Christianity has so highly exalted and blessed.

Lydia had a sense of warm hospitality, and she invited the evangelists to her home. She made them remain with her, and thus became an important factor in the evangelization of Europe. Her species is not dead, for there are still those whose homes and hearts are open to the minister and the missionary, and who have an humble often unrecognized, though nonetheless important part in the furtherance of the gospel.

Teaching Points.

1. The Holy Spirit can say "No" as well as "Yes."
2. "The steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord."
3. To obey is better than to sacrifice.
4. He who wills to do the will of the Lord shall know it.
5. God sometimes denies us provinces, that He may give us continents.
6. Where there is no vision, the people perish.
7. Duty follows hard on vision.
8. Unconscious need, rather than conscious want is the call of God.
9. Christian hospitality is Christian service.
10. Subsequent events always confirm the wisdom of God.
11. It is important to keep one's heart responsive to the divine impulses of the Spirit.
12. There is a place for every man. And a work for him.
13. "Nothing makes a man strong like a call on him for help."
14. Christianity has exalted womanhood.
15. When God wants a thing done, He will provide a way to do it.
16. He who is bent on doing service will always find opportunities for doing service.

A SUCCESSFUL CHAUTAUQUA AND SCHOOL OF METHODS.

The Chautauqua and School of Methods, held annually at Elon College, will bring to a close on August 7th the most successful session in its history. The registrations reached the high mark of 237, and most of these have engaged in class work in a definite effort for preparation. The Chautauqua was moved to Elon four years ago from Virginia Beach, and at the first session held at the college only forty-three people registered. The present session was an increase of more than 450 per cent over the first year at the college.

The class work this year has been of a high order. More than twenty courses have been offered, covering many phases of religious activity. Seven courses leading to International credit were given, and many participated in the work.

Courses in life investment were given for both young men and young women. These courses were unique, so far as the Chautauqua at Elon is concerned, but the young people entered into them with zest, feeling, as many young people do, the need of guidance in so important a matter.

Mr. Hermon Eldredge gave a course in the "History and Principles of the the Christian Church," and much interest was manifested in the work. Mr. Eldredge began with a study of the early Church and showed how the principles of the Christian Church have gradually grown up through struggle and storm, and then sketched the great contributions of the Church to the Christian task of the world.

Mr. Eugene Rainey gave a series of lectures to young people on what it means to be a Christian—a series which every young Christian needs. Besides these, many other courses, other than the International credit courses, were offered, varying and enriching the curriculum to a most remarkable extent. In connection with this elaborate curriculum, each evening a lecture or some form of program was given. During the first week, Mr. Hermon Eldredge gave a series of lectures on his European tour, interpreting the world situation against a background of social and religious history. Monday night of the second week was "Chautauqua Night," and Dr. Warren H. Denison, the first president of the Seaside Chautauqua and School of Methods, presided, and sketched the development of the movement during the seven years of his administration. Dr. Walters, Richmond, Va., the present president, followed with a vision of possibilities. Dean A. L. Hook, Elon College, gave an illustrated lecture on the enterprises of the Christian Church on Tuesday night, and Dr. Roy C. Helfenstein spoke on Wednesday evening. Thursday evening was given over to two plays, under the direction of Mrs. W. T. Walters, and Friday night was the commencement of the Chautauqua. Many hundreds of credit cards for attendance on classes will be given out, and a number of certificates and International credits are to be awarded at that time.

No feature of the Chautauqua has been so thoroughly enjoyed perhaps as have the twilight "happy hours," under the direction of Mrs. E. F. Burkholder, and the recreational program put on by Mr. W. A. Welch, of the Henderson Y. M. C. A. These two features have received the hearty endorsement of all attending the gathering.

A daily vacation Bible school has been conducted for two hours every morning during the meeting under the direction of Prof. S. A. Bennett, director of religious education of Elon College. With Prof. Bennett has been associated some of the ablest workers in this field in the Southern Convention. This department of the Chautauqua had an average attendance of nearly fifty children from the town, those in attendance on the Chautauqua with their parents, and the children of the Christian Orphanage. The new religious education building of the college was used for this school, and for all the work of the Chautauqua. It is the most adequately equipped building and best adapted for the needs of religious educational work of any building of the kind on the continent. The entire college plant throughout the Chautauqua has been placed at the disposal of the Church workers gathered for the meeting, and all of these have rejoiced at the progress which the college has made within the past three years.

Much credit is due to Mr. E. F. Burkholder for his efficient business management of the Chautauqua. He has devoted himself to the office work, and the gathering owes much of its success to him. Upon Dr. W. T. Walters, chairman of the Board of Religious Education, and upon Miss Pattie Coghill, Field Secretary of the Board of Religious Education, rested the burden of the Chautauqua, and its unparalleled success is, in great measure, due their untiring and efficient efforts.

The members of the faculty have contributed largely to make the meeting a marvel of inspiration and instruction, and every one of the 237 people in attendance have lent their share to the excellent fellowship of the gathering, without which it could, even with all the other features, have meant but little. It is the hope and the expectation that the Chautauqua and School of Methods next year will find an even more hearty response among the people of North Carolina and Virginia.

A STUDY OF THE PSALMS.

Chapter IV.

MONDAY.

PRIVATE WORSHIP IN THE TEMPLE.

Lesson: Psa. 66.

Alongside the public worship in which all the people engaged, there were certain occasions when individual worshipers poured forth their devotions in the temple. These occasions were usually under stress of danger, severe illness, calamity, and renewing vows. If God gave them deliverance, then they come to the temple to offer sacrifices. Songs of thanksgiving were sung, and 66 is one of these.

We are told that one part of the choir sang verses 5-7, and another part verses 8-12, then the worshiper stepped forth and himself sung verses 13-20. With this arrangement in mind, and putting ourselves in the place of this worshiper, let us now read and worship.

Prayer.—Our Father, bring us fully into Thy worship and praise. Forbid that we shall exalt ourselves, but may we set Thee on high and acknowledge Thee in all our doings. Forbid that we shall neglect to come to the house of worship and offer ourselves to Thee in living sacrifice, and may we each day come to Thee fully Thine. Forgive us of our sins and save us. Amen.

TUESDAY.

PERSONAL INTEGRITY AND PRAYER FOR PROTECTION.

Lesson: Psa. 26.

Sometimes when a person was accused and about to be brought to the law, or when severely persecuted by enemies, or suffering illness, he would take solitary refuge in the temple, where he believed God dwelt, there to say his prayers. This was far more effective in his life. It would be today if we did more of this.

It is recalled that the early law (Ex. 22:8-11) required that persons under accusation first cleanse themselves in the temple. We are told that Psalm 26 was written especially for this.

The suppliant enters and either sings or has sung for him verses 1-4, after which he washes his hands, makes a solemn oath and sings the remainder of the psalm. Then "this man went down to his house justified" (Luke 18:14), cleared of his accusation, able to take his part afresh in life and the life of the people.

Let us read the psalm now with this in mind, and give thanks.

Prayer.—Our Father, we pray to Thee for a trust that knows no wavering. We pray for a strength that when tried Thou wilt find us good as gold. We pray for inspiration to always walk in Thy truth. Help us daily to turn to Thee for cleansing, and may we be pure forever. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

PROTECTION FROM THE WICKED.

Lesson: Psa. 5.

From time immemorial, personal animosities have distressed humanity. In the days of Israel, it was amazing. These sought refuge in private prayers and songs at home, and also at the house of God. They were not permitted, it seems, to come into the temple, so they worshiped "toward Thy holy temple."

Psalm 5 was the morning prayer of such worshipers. Let us read it now.

The attitude of the psalmist here toward enemies has its basic in the belief that their enemies were God's enemies; therefore, there is no pity much less love, but only a relentless spirit of vengeance. This psalm was first used as against the worldly minded. Later it became a part of the temple worship.

Christ changes this. He said, "Pray for your enemies. Do good to them that despitefully use you." "Heap coals of fire on their heads," etc.

Prayer.—Our Father, consider our meditation each day and forgive us our sins, that we may be pure and may live with people as brothers and in the spirit of Christ. In His name we ask it. Amen.

THURSDAY.

PRAYER OF AN OLD MAN FOR DELIVERANCE.

Lesson: Psa. 71.

In most prayers of the sick there is complaint over heartless people. This accounts for so many psalms suddenly changing the subject and praying for vengeance upon enemies.

Due to the doctrine that health and prosperity are the reward of piety, and disease and misfortunes the result of wickedness, disease was, therefore, taken as an indication of sinfulness, and even loved ones would turn against him when he took sick, as if to say, "Shame on him!"

Suffering from disease is bad enough, but the bitterness of being forsaken even by one's closest relatives is more terrible still. With this in mind, it is easy to understand how some of these sufferers longed for an opportunity to pay back for such cruel behaviour and how they prayed for it. Nevertheless, the suppliant himself believed this like the others and confessed his fault in penitence and sorrow (Psa. 38:1-4, 18). Sometimes one did not realize any fault, quite naturally, and thus inquired and pleaded for light.

"casteth Thou off my soul?
Why hidest Thou Thy face from me?"

(Ps. 88:14) or compare Ps. 22:1.

Let us pray today as our minds and spirit guide us. (Lord's Prayer.)

FRIDAY.

PRIVATE WORSHIP OUTSIDE THE TEMPLE.

Lesson: Psa. 51.

Many of the psalms were never intended, and had nothing to do with temple worship. They were songs for home, and so used, and they express in quite a free spirit the personal piety of the singers.

How beautiful is the true family worship! When the heart is alone with God and speaks out of its depths as well as its shallows.

Read Psalm 51 carefully. See the Father of Israel at home. The family gathered about him leading all in this psalm. What glory illumines the reading! How much more value is the psalm to us?

Prayer.—Dear Lord, help us to konw something of the multitude of my tender mercies. In the midst of them, blot out our sins. Wash us and make us clean from this day hence with and forever Amen.

SATURDAY.

GOD JUDGES THE HEART.

Lesson: Psa. 50.

This psalm is different from the others. Here, not man, but God speaks and makes it plain that zeal for sacrifice is a mistake; that it is genuine heart-life and heartfelt prayer that pleases Him, and that their sincerity must be attested only by a righteous life. It was this that the spiritualization of sacrifices began. Thus we find many psalters in which religion of the heart pours itself out in praise and thanksgiving without any ceremonial trace whatsoever. The most famous of these is Psalm 103. Read 50:7-15, 23; 141:2; 69:30; 104.

Prayer.—Our Father, help us to open our hearts today to the spirit of Christ and breathe into our souls and to fill our hearts that the way of Thy salvation may be plain to us all the way. Amen.

SUNDAY.

THE RELIGIOUS LIFE OF THE PEOPLE.

Lesson: Psa. 139:1-12.

Many songs set forth the fundamentals of the religion of Israel and throw light on their religious life. In this psalm we have their belief in the omnipresence of God, His ever-ruling providence, His righteous rule. There is some real thinking in this psalm. The poet sees that God is not bound by place, space, nor time, and His meditation becomes a hymn.

In verse 19 he bursts forth in fanatic devotion to God and unaccountable denunciation of his enemies. This seems incomprehensible. But we see that he was completely identified with God and he hates the enemies of God's cause as his own enemies, and in his human frailty little realizes the essential heinousness of his fanaticism, and he prays to God with utter sincerity to slay the wicked. Then he turns on his own heart and gets his true bearings:

"Search me, O God, and know my heart and see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting."

It appears that the thought never occurred to him that his hatred was a wicked way which must lead to sorrow and pain. He was still far from the teachings of Him who said, "Love your enemies . . . that ye may be sons of your Father, who is in heaven," for He loves His enemies too (Matt. 5:44).

Prayer.—Dear Lord, save us from hate, but to a full life of love. Send us forth today to do Thy will and to help others to do so. Amen.

THE THORNLESS ROSE.

At the flower show, recently, a new rose was exhibited. A large, long-stemmed, fragrant rose—that stood out regally among the other flowers. A rose that was a novelty, not only because of its size and perfume and color, but because it was thornless. One wonders if the other roses were jealous of the newcomer that attracted so much attention, and if they were ashamed of their old-fashioned thorns? Or if they nodded their lovely heads, quite complacently, and said: "A rose should have thorne. A rose isn't a rose, really, without them!"

One hopes that the roses were proud enough—the old-fashioned roses—to be glad that they had thorns. For the rose and the thorn do belong together! The fact that they belong together is the great legend of the flower world—and life's largest allegory.

Perhaps the rose is the most beautiful flower of the garden. So much beauty cannot go unchallenged. The thorns are needed to give that beauty the zest, the fineness, just as the beautiful things of the soul and the heart and the spirit, too, must have their thorns! The sunlight never looks so golden as when it lies across a dark place. Life is made precious by contacts.

A thornless rose, maybe, would seem too sweet, too pretty, too passionless, to be interesting. Just as a life of smiles, without one single tear, would seem shallow. Just as an old face, unwrinkled and too tranquil, seems to lack character. A thornless rose might become cloying and saccharine. Thorns and roses—yes, it's true—do belong together! Separate them and you've lost something vital. For a rose without a thorn is far too easy to gather, and to hold. Gardening, in an acre full of thornless roses, would lack the gallantry of adventure, and the thrill of striving.

Kiddies' Korner

MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT, Editor.

Dears:

Who was that wee little barefoot boy that said he liked to hear about Peter Rabbit?

Well, listen to this, little man. Last week, your editor was flying along in the little Ford, when all at once, in the road, was little Peter Rabbit, just as still as still could be, sitting straight up and holding his little paws out so still. And right out in front of Peter was a great, long, brown-spotted snake. The little Ford did a double-quick turn and ran over the big ol' snake's head. Then Peter Rabbit ran away as fast as he could—which wasn't very fast after all, for he was scared to death. You see, Kiddies, the snake had Peter Rabbit charmed. That's a queer feeling, I know, 'cause I've heard that when a snake charms a rabbit, the rabbit cannot move head or foot unless some one helps him. So the little Ford got the attention of the snake for a second, and Peter grabbed that second to—what? Run—yes! of course; I would have, too, would you?

Let's hope Peter Rabbit will stay home with his Ma for a while now, for really he is too small to be running around all alone.

Oh! it's beginning to rain—how nice! God is so good to us, and to His beautiful flowers and green grass. Are we not thankful for the rain? Just watch the flowers grow this week, little folks, and remember to say "Thank you" to Jesus for the refreshing rain. YOUR EDITOR.

PERSONALS.

Peter Rabbit and his Ma are spending two days wit Peter's cousin, White Rabbit. At present, White Rabbit's home is under the house on the hill.

Mrs. Marrilla has gone to South Carolina and taken her dolly, Matilda Ann. She is teaching her South Carolina friends the grown-up way of conducting a daily vacation Bible school like the one Mrs. Marrilla and her dolly have just attended in Burlington.

Two little doggies—Rusty and Ezekiel—fought over a bone today, and Rusty won the fight, since she was the larger. Poor little Zeke went into the dog-house and cried and cried. So, at supper time tonight Rusty had to be fed indoors, while Zeke ate his supper in the yard. How queer doggies are, anyway!

By Nancy Byrd Turner.

Wake up, wake up,
Nid and Nodder!
All the stars are out.
Bats are slipping, frogs are skipping,
Fireflies down the dark are dipping—
What are you about?

Get up, Winker; get up, Blinker!
There's a wind that blows
Through the garden, twinkle, twinkle,
Setting every rose a-tinkle
Gayly, as it goes.

Ho, Nightcapper, you and Napper,
Lean far out and see
How the moon is big and mellow;
Hurry, every single fellow,
Join the jollity!

THE GRILLA.

By Ladd Frisby Morse.

There once was a beast called a grilla,
Who lived in a big weeping-willa.
He sat on the ground, without making a sound,
And grew stilla and stilla and stilla.

Now, children, don't copy the grilla;
It's right to be still, but not stilla;
For listen to what was the animal's lot:
They used the poor beast for a pilla.

THE SERENADE.

PRINCESS NORMA'S COAT.

By E. W. Frentz.

There was once a little Princess named Norma, whose father and mother, the King and Queen, loved her very dearly and gave her nearly everything that she asked for; so when she said one day that she wanted a new plaid coat, the Mistress of the Wardrobe called the sewing-maids together and set them at work cutting and basting and stitching; and in the morning the new plaid coat lay on a chair by the princess' bed, all finished.

It pleased her greatly at first, so that she put it on as soon as she was dressed in the morning, and was hardly willing to lay it off at night. But when she had had it only a week, she went to drive one day with the King and Queen in the royal coach, and on the road she saw another little girl who had a coat much like her own, but in larger plaids.

As soon as the Princess Norma was back at her father's castle she took off her coat and threw it on the floor. "I shall never wear it again," she said; "I must have one with larger plaids."

So once more the Mistress of the Wardrobe called the sewing-maids together, and once more there was cutting and basting and stitching, and in the morning a new coat, in larger plaids.

For a time, that coat, too, pleased the Princess, but then a cousin, the Princess Maude, came to visit at the Castle, and she had a coat in which the plaids were even larger than those in the Princess Norma's; so that night the Princess Norma again threw her coat on the floor and refused to wear it.

"No one shall have a coat with larger plaids than mine," she said, and stamped her foot. Her father, the King, and her mother, the Queen, talked gently to her and tried to make her see that a coat with very large plaids did not look well on so small a Princess, but it was of no use. A new coat she must have, with plaids larger than those of the Princess Maud. So the Mistress of the Wardrobe and the tired women were sent to search all the shops, and at last they found some goods that had plaids just the size of the black and white marble tiles in the castle floor, and of it they made still a third coat.

When it was finished and the Princess Norma put it on she was delighted and would hardly let it out of her sight, though all the ladies of the court whispered behind their fans that it did not look well at all, for the plaids were so large that there were only three of them on the whole coat.

When the Princess had worn the coat only four days, she happened to look out of the Castle window one morning and saw a shepherd going along the road with a cloak on his back that had plaids half again as large as those on her new coat. This time she threw her coat on the floor and danced and screamed with anger, so that the King and Queen came running to see what was the matter.

"This time I will take the matter in hand myself," said the King. "There shall be a coat for the Princess Norma with plaids so large that there can never be any larger. And he ordered his horse and rode away.

The next morning the new coat was lying by the Princess' bed, but it was black all over. "Why, what is this?" she cried; "it was a plaid coat that I wanted, and this is all one color, with no plaids at all!"

"Oh, no," said the King, "this is a plaid coat, but the plaids are so large that there is only one of them in the whole of it. That one plaid goes as far as you can see. No plaid can be larger than that, and so you have your wish and you must wear it till it is worn out. There will be no more new ones till then."

So that is why the Princess Norma had to wear an ugly black coat for years and years, for the piece of goods that the King had chosen was a very fine one.

Send Order to THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

Christian Orphanage

We had a visitor several weeks ago, and after he had spent the day with us and had looked at our little children and realized how happy they are in the Christian Orphanage, he looked the writer in the face and said: "It seems to me that the Christian denomination has one hundred members who could send five dollars per month, and each one be the richer." I think this a fine idea. This friend did not make a suggestion that he did not carry out himself. He has been sending this institution fifteen dollars per month for many years and enjoys it and grows richer each year.

I believe we have many more than this number who could even do more and enjoy it. How many will try it out for six months or a year and see?

Now, the writer wants to make a suggestion. We have been in the extreme dry belt this year, and have not been able to raise any vegetables at all. We have always been able to can lots of beans and tomatoes, make all the sour krout we needed; but this year we will not can any beans or tomatoes at all, as we could not grow them because we have had no rain till August 4th.

If the good women who have lived in a more favorable section can lend us a helping hand we will be very grateful. We had lots of nice fruit sent to us last year. This will be the first year in our corn crib. Our corn crop is ruined. We have faith enough to believe God will provide for us and our little children will be fed.

ANTI-LYNCHING LAWS.

Seven States have passed new laws for the suppression of lynching during the last ten years, according to a report prepared by Prof. Monroe N. Work, of Tuskegee Institute, for the Commission on Race Relations of the Federal Council of Churches, to be published shortly. Two other States—Oklahoma and North Carolina—have strengthened their laws against the "great American crime." In all, there are now thirteen States that have special lynching laws.

Bills for the suppression of lynching have been introduced into practically all Southern States. Four of the States passing new anti-lynching laws are Northern or Western. They are Kansas, Minnesota, New Jersey and Pennsylvania. Two of them—Kentucky and West Virginia—may be classed as border States. Other States with anti-lynching laws are Alabama, Indiana, Ohio, South Carolina and Tennessee.

During this ten-year period, according to the report, the Federal anti-lynching law, known as the Dyer bill, was introduced into Congress, and its discussion greatly aroused public attention to the evil. The bill was pending when Congress adjourned.

In announcing the publication of the report, Dr. Haynes, secretary of the commission, says: "These efforts for national and State laws will be a great help against mob violence. Legislation will be effective, however, just in so far as public opinion backs up the law and insists that officers uphold the laws and protect prisoners and that properly constituted courts try prisoners, irrespective of color or creed, in an impartial manner. During the first five months of this year there were seven lynchings, one of the victims being burned at the stake. This is two victims more than the first six months of last year, and seven too many for America. The Churches and all good citizens must redouble their efforts to stop the mob record for this year where it is. America must become a 'lynchless land in 1926.' To that end, we must end mob murder now. The maintenance of law and the security of life in our nation are at stake."

TO EXTEND SIGNAL-BLOCK SYSTEM.

Improved automatic electric block-signal protection for 563.6 miles of line of the Southern Railway System has been authorized by the management, and installation of the necessary apparatus will be started immediately.

The line between Morristown, Tenn., and Biltmore, N. C. (93 miles) will be equipped with signals of the new three-color light type. Signals of the same type will be installed on the double-track line between Morristown and Knoxville (41.8 miles), taking the place of the three position, upper quadrant signals now in service.

On the double-track line between Atlanta and Austell, Ga. (18 miles), color-light signals will be substituted for the three-position signals now in service, giving continuous protection by the color-light signals on the entire line of 167 miles between Birmingham and Atlanta.

On the line between Cincinnati and Meridian, Miss., three-position, upper-quadrant signals will be installed wherever signals of other types are now in service. This will involve changing the signals on 215.3 miles between Cincinnati and Chattanooga, and on 195.5 miles between Chattanooga and Meridian. On completion of the work, the entire line between Cincinnati and Chattanooga (633.5 miles) will be equipped with signals of the three-position, upper-quadrant type.

RELIGIOUS OBSERVANCE OF LODGES.

Man is a religious being; this is shown from the act that every people have some kind of a religion. No tribe or nation has yet been found without some form of religion. The lodge produces a brand of religion that meets the approbation of large numbers of people; these observances tend to make a man think he is pretty good. They serve as a soul plaster, and thousands are consciously or unconsciously going down to perdition saying "My lodge is enough religion for me." When they come to their dying hour, they will find that they are leaning on a false hope.

Clean-cut Christianity is the need of the hour, but there are so many substitutes abroad that the real thing is not greatly in evidence. To say that the religion of the lodge does not in any way affect the life of the individual is to say that the religious ceremonies and reiterated doctrine of the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man do not have their natural effect, and that neither does the associations and companionships of a man have anything to do in the shaping of the character of a person. This we know is not true. Men who meet week after week in a lodge hall and take part in lodge prayers and hymns and other religious exercises certainly must be more or less affected by them.

The lodge is patterned after the Church in many ways. This is seen from the high-sounding discourses, the prayers and odes which are in reality hymns. Sometimes a Christian hymn is used, but of course one that does not contain the name of Christ. The burial services are also patterned after the Christian burial service; all of these things are calculated to deceive the unwary and make him think it is quite Christian. A great many lodge members were once members in good standing in some Church, or may be still, but the delusive atmosphere of the lodge has deadened their spiritual life until they no longer possess the joy of the Lord which is the strength of His people.

The religion of the lodge is not the religion of Christ, for the name of Christ is ruled out in lodge circles, although much garbled Scripture is used. Chaplains, who have tried to pray in the name of Christ have soon found out that their prayers were not acceptable, and many have left the lodge when they discovered that they could not take Christ with them into the halls of secrecy.

In conclusion, let us repeat that participation in religious observances of any kind continuously must have a distinct effect on the life of an individual either for good or ill, and let it be remembered that there is but one true religion and it will mix with no other. "There is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved," and that name is Jesus.—Rev. Clarence Weston.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Whereas, it has pleased our Heavenly Father, in His inscrutable wisdom, to call from our midst and to Him our beloved friend and co-worker, Mr. Patrick Henry Simpson; be it, therefore, resolved:

First, That while we believe and know that God doeth all things well, and humbly submit to His holy will, we realize that our community has lost one of its most influential supporters of civic enterprise and personal righteousness; our Sunday School, one of its most loyal and regular members; our State, one of its most competent lawmakers; and the cause of Christ, one of its most liberal benefactors; that to know him was to love him, and that every one who came into contact with him was benefited by his example and guidance.

Second, That we extend to his family and relatives our heartfelt sympathy and pray that God may comfort them in the sad hour of their bereavement.

Third, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy to "The Christian Sun" for publication, and a copy be spread upon our minutes.

ROSSER.

Mr. Andrew Rosser, formerly of Linville, Va., died in Camden, N. J., July 22, 1925. His death was due to the infirmities of old age. His age was 85 years and 9 days. His body was brought to Linville August 4th and buried beside the grave of his wife in the cemetery of the Christian Church. His funeral was conducted by the writer.

R. P. CRUMPLER.

NICKELS AND MILLIONS.

It is said that the once famous and wealthy Tom Lawson is declared by his relatives to have died "without a 5-cent piece." It is a singular illustration of the failure which financiers make of their own financial affairs. Lawson was once worth $20,000,000 and handled millions as commonly as others handle nickels. But he produced nothing, and therefore, by the law of compensation, he retained nothing. The secret of the decay of fortunes is that they go by law back to their source, because they represent not production, but exploitation. Effort is frequently made to prove that what is here called exploitation is really a productive service. Maybe so, maybe so, but when one takes a squint at real production and then at this other thing, one can't help but feel there is a fundamental difference. Anyway, people do not look to the future as much as they did. In the last generation, people laid away for a rainy day, as they said, or against old age. That doesn't seem to worry people so much today. They feel young for a longer time. And maybe that has its useful side. But there was a virtue in prudence and thrift which would serve us very well today if we could bring it back.

CAMPBELL—NEWMAN.

Mr. Carlyle Campbell and Miss Marion Lee Newman were united in marriage by the writer, assisted by Rev. J. A. Campbell, at Holland Christian Church, June 21, 1925. Mr. Campbell is the son of Rev. and Mrs. J. A. Campbell, of Buie's Creek Academy, Buie's Creek, N. C., and president of Coker College, Hartsville, S. C. Mrs. Campbell is the daughter of Rev. and Mrs. N. G. Newman, Holland, Va.

After a brief stay at Blowing Rock, N. C., they will be at home, at Hartsville, S. C. The writer joins with their large circle of friends in wishing them all that is highest and best in life.

N. G. NEWMAN.

"The right to think, to know, to utter," as John Milton says, "is the dearest of all liberties. Without this right, there can be no liberty to any people; with it, there can be no slavery. When you have convinced thinking men that it is right, and the humane men that it is just, you will gain your cause. Men always lose half of what is gained by violence. What is gained by argument is gained forever."

HARRELL.

William Clarendon Harrell, only child of William N. and Margaret Ballard Harrell, passed away after a lingering illness at his home in Larchmont, Norfolk, Va., at 6307 Hampton Boulevard, on Saturday, June 27th, at 5 o'clock A. M. He was failing for about two and a half years, but was confined to his home about four months. He was a great sufferer, but bore it patiently, and said that if he should be called he was ready to meet his God, but was anxious to live and hated to give up life so young and to leave his little family circle of four—father, mother, wife and self.

Special prayers were held in his home and in a number of Churches many times for his recovery, but God must have known best, and, as Rev. W. L. Roberts said, "had a work for him to do and He called him home." When the World War started, he answered the call by enlisting at Cornell, N. Y. From there he went to Dallas, Texas, where he was ill with "flu." This was an aviation camp, and after completing his course he was transferred to Souther Field, Americus, Ga. For the first time, he took charge of his ship and drifted up beyond the clouds alone. After peace was declared, he came home and took a position as assistant superintendent of construction of the P. H. S. Hospital, on Hampton Boulevard, Norfolk, Va., which took about two years to complete. After this, he went in a decline from which he never rallied.

Clarendon was born in Nansemond County, Va., and had lived in Norfolk about twenty-eight years. He leaves his broken-hearted parents and a young bride of six months. He was a member of Seaboard Lodge, A. F. & A. M., Portsmouth Commandery, No. 5, and Khedive Temple of Norfolk. He made a profession of faith when a boy and was a member of Larchmont Church. Funeral services were held at the residence, June 29th, at 3:30 o'clock. Dr. J. F. Allen, Dr. W. W. Staley, Dr. I. W. Johnson, and Dr. L. E. Smith officiated. During the services a sextette, composed of Mrs. W. A. Parker, Mrs. W. O. Zeazley, Mrs. W. S. Winner, Miss Blankner, Alec Crouch, and W. A. Parker, sang the "Old Rugged Cross" and "Some Time We Will Understand." Reid Wilkins, a playmate in childhood, sang "Face to Face," accompanied at piano by Mrs. Chas Albright.

Services were conducted at the grave by Seaboard Lodge, A. F. & A. M., and Portsmouth Commandery, No. 5. The active pall-bearers were L. J. Smithwick, W. Leon Hall, H. Cunningham, W. O. Beazley, C. F. Shumadine, Sidney Pruden, and Arthur Welkins.

Floral tributes were numerous and beautiful and came from many directions. The burial was in Forest Lawn Cemetery, Norfolk. ONE WHO LOVED HIM.

Education in China.—

The United States is remitting the balance of the Boxer indemnity fund, amounting to $6,137,552, to be used in promoting scientific education in China.

A Larger Wheat Crop.—

Official figures up to August 5th indicate that the world's wheat crop this year will be about fifty million bushels more than the 1924 crop. The wheat crop of seventeen countries is now estimated at 2,110,000,000 bushels for this year, against 2,065,000,000 last year. Perhaps the larger portion of the increase occurs in the Danubian countries. Hungary, Armenia and other countries show a substantial increase in their grain crop.

Plan Bryan Memorial.—

Plans to erect a memorial to William Jennings Bryan have been announced by Miss Dionessa Bryan Evans, goddaughter of the Commoner and daughter of A. H. Evans, prominent economist, of Tracy, Minn. The memorial is to be placed at Clewiston, Fla. Mr. Charles F. Daly, president of the Liberty National Bank of New York, has promised the services of that institution as custodian of the funds. The money for the memorial is to be secured by dime contributions of the children of the Sunday and public schools of this country.

Using Great Funds Greatly.—

Andrew Carnegie and John D. Rockefeller have established a number of great foundations for the benefit of the public at large. Mr. Rockefeller has established the Rockefeller Foundation and the General Education Board. The first is devoting its energies and means to the promotion of health all over the world; the second to the promotion of education, both religious and secular. Such great funds, being so used, indicate that men of great wealth are beginning to realize their social responsibility, and the international and interracial character of their work is doing more perhaps than anything else to promote the world-wide good-will which is so much needed. The alarmist and jingoist press may say what it pleases, but such funds, being so greatly used, are cementing the world together in one great whole. The Rockefeller foundation is seeking to promote the physical welfare of the whole world, regardless of race or of nationality, and such a work heals the wounds of the world, as well as the ravishings of disease.

Campaigning Against Narcotics.—

The use of opium seems to be on the increase, and among the boys and girls of school age. This is a vice which it is most difficult to combat, because of the ease with which it can be concealed. India and Egypt, both British-controlled lands, find an ever-growing demand for their chief product in China and the United States. In both of these countries, British influence is dominant and British firms are making the unbelievable profits accruing from the illicit business. The boys and girls of this country are consuming great quantities of opium in the form of heroin, while China smokes the stuff in the traditional manner. Nothing but increased intelligence can check this menace, and the International Narcotic Education Association is making heroic efforts to bring to the attention of the young people the deadliness of the drug habit. Stringent international regulations are demanded to control the export of opium. It is, in the face of the facts, time that we should turn our minds to the protection of the youth against the most deadly and the most insidious of all vices.

Missionary Treats Spiritual Ruler.—

Dr. Dennis V. Smith, in charge of the eye department of the Peking Hospital, and a missionary to China under the Methodist Episcopal Church, was called upon recently to treat the Panshan Lama, the spiritual ruler of Tibet and head of all Lamas in the world. The Panshan is the spiritual head of over 6,000,000 people, and the head of the Tibetan Church. He was making a tour of China with his court when stricken with chickenpox and a malady of the eyes. He heard that Dr. Smith was a great specialist, and sent for him in a high-power limousine. The doctor came at once, and in a few days had the Panshan well. While there, the Panshan and Dr. Smith talked about the hospital work, and the missionary activities, together with the part which Christianity is trying to give to the world. The Panshan said that he was teaching his people that war was wrong, that it settled nothing, and that it made the common people suffer. The Panshan made a gift to the hospital in recognition of the doctor's services to him. By this act of mercy and skill, the factions of the world's many faiths are drawn closer together and the kingdom comes a step nearer to the earth.

Little Hope for Compromise.—

John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers, in a letter to Samuel D. Warriner, chairman of the mine operators, declined any form of arbitration until the operators abandoned all opposition to wage increase and to full recognition of the union. It would appear now that operation of the anthracite coal mines would cease on September 1st. President Lewis gave Mr. Warriner to understand that the workers had not recovered from former arbitrations, and that until they did they would have no more of his prescriptions. It would seem to us that this is a time for President Coolidge, who is standing ready to do so, to intervene in behalf of the public. Neither the faction led by Mr. Lewis nor that by Mr. Warriner has any right to afflict the public with their disputing. If the anthracite coal miners don't like what they are getting, and the operators won't pay more, than the miners ought to get out and leave the job for others who will be satisfied. On the other hand, the operators ought to be compelled to pay the miners a living wage and to provide safe and healthful working conditions.

There are two sides to every question, and both sides ought to be considered. In the capital-and-labor dispute, however, it is difficult to be neutral. Our sympathy for the toiler, which in many instances has gone to the wildest extremes, sweeps us off our feet; or our defense of the right of capital to manage its affairs blinds us to the working-man's right to live and to dictate his living conditions. We must, as a public, seek to be just in our outlook on the matter.

A Problem to Face.—

The joint commission of home and family life of the Episcopal Church is seeking an answer to the questions as to what position the Church should take regarding the health certificates prerequisite to marriage, and national uniform standards of marriage and divirce. In The Witness, an Episcopal publication, Bishop William Hall Moreland made public a statement which presents the problem in a very vital way. It is one which the Christian Church, as well as all others, must face squarely, for should the Christian conception of home fade, there will be little left worth preserving. Bishop Moreland says: "We must not deceive ourselves; the real issue in this country is: Is marriage worth saving? Facilities for dissolving marriage abound, inflaming every trifling dispute, encouraging marital infidelity and stimulating hasty or secret unions. Thousands of young people, knowing that the law permits a consecutive or 'tandem' polygamy, enter the married state with the deliberate purpose of breaking it off should it be unsatisfactory.

"Divorce is invariably accompanied by sterility. Birth control is a problem that needs to be faced. The whole subject of the end and object of marriage must be set forth with patience, wisdom and love. The Church, sent to teach and lead, utters no strong, clear note on the vital theme. Our own Church is shamefully remiss in her neglect of plain preaching on the nature of Christian marriage.

"Allowing for notable and beautiful exceptions, it is generally true that the American home has ceased to function. We are not facing a crime-wave nor suffering from the effects of war; our ills grow out of the breakdown of the home. The essential need underlying all this is to make American life Christian."

NOTES-PERSONALS

Rev. P. T. Klapp, of Elon College, N. C., was a visitor in the city the first of this week.

Mr. J. E. Foster was chosen to deliver the annual address before the next session of the Virginia Valley Central Conference.

THE SUN can furnish blanks for Church reports. The Conference secretaries should see that all the Churches of their Conference are provided with the proper blanks.

Small forms for ministerial reports, in addition to the regular Convention blanks, have been printed; also blanks for Church members' transfer; 10 cents per dozen.

Among the visitors at the Virginia Valley Central Conference were Dr. W. A. Harper and wife, Miss Annie Watson, Rev. W. T. Scott, Mr. F. B. Corboy, of Elon College; Revs. A. R. Garland and A. W. Sparks, of Everett, Pa.; Mrs. J. J. Lincoln, of Hagerstown, Md., and Rev. W. C. Hook and wife, of Albany, N. Y.

Will the secretaries of the various Conferences send the time and place appointed for their Conferences to meet? An effort was made to give this information, but the "Annual" seems not to contain the data required. Post-office of the secretary of the Church at which the Conference is to meet should also be given.

Antioch Church, in Rockingham County, Va., is one of our oldest Churches. The present stone Church is said to have been built by a Mr. Deavers. During the Civil War it was abused, its doors and windows being broken asunder and otherwise rendered untenantable. Its history runs back to more than a hundred years. It was at this Church that the Valley of Virginia Central Conference met last week. Will the secretary of the Conference give readers of THE SUN a history of this Church?

It is reported through the Jewish Telegraph Agency from London that a Bible house for the purpose of placing on exhibition translations of Bibles published in hundreds of languages will soon be erected in Jerusalem, the British Foreigh Bible Society says. No agencies are doing more for the spread of Christianity in the world than the Bible societies. It is rather a romantic idea to establish a Bible depot in Jerusalem. It is like going back to the beginning to make that a radiating center for the written word of God.

Dr. W. T. Walters, the founder and first and only pastor to this date of the Christian Church in Richmond, Va., has resigned his work there, effective October 1st. The administrative committee of Elon College has elected Dr. Walters to become field secretary of the college on that date. His addition to the administrative force of the college will strengthen that institution and give general satisfaction in the Church. Dr. Walters is devoted to the college and to every enterprise of our brotherhood, and we speak for him the prayers of our people and prophesy for him the best of success in his field work. The college has long needed a field secretary as a permanent member of its administrative staff, and THE CHRISTIAN SUN congratulates the college on securing Dr. Walters for this purpose. THE SUN also learns with pleasure that Rev. W. T. Scott, who has been doing such effective work in the campaign for students for Elon this summer, is to continue in the employment of the college for another year as field secretary. These two brethren will certainly place our college in position to serve the Church as never before through its field work.

UNION, LONG'S CHAPEL, HAW RIVER.

As pastor of Union, Long's Chapel, and Haw River Churches I am pleased to report gracious revivals with a delightful spirit of good fellowship.

At Haw River, the meeting resulted in some fifty or sixty confessions, and fifty-three additions to the Church. At Union there were thirty-eight professions and thirty-seven additions to the Church. At Long's Chapel there were twenty-four confessions and twenty-five additions to the Church. Total members received during and since the meetings, 115, making a total of 126 for the Conference year thus far.

I think that we may safely say that Church attendance and Sunday School enrollment are the largest in the history of the Churches.

The pastor conducted the day services during the meetings, and the Men's Federation of Burlington, N. C., were with him in the evening services and conducted the same.

We are profoundly thankful to Almighty God for blessings bestowed. P. H. FLEMING.

LYNCHBURG, VA.

My dear Dr. Atkinson:

I am writing to give a bit of news that might be of interest to the readers of THE SUN who have shown a friendly interest in our Church.

For some weeks, things had not been running as smoothly in the Church as they should. Some misunderstandings had cast a damper over the splendid fellowship we have been enjoying. Sunday morning, at the beginning of the service, I read the twenty-third and twenty-fourth verses of the fifth chapter of Matthew: "Therefore, if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee, leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift."

After brief comments, I told the congregation I wanted to see some hand-shaking before we went further with the service. We sung that verse of the "Old-Time Religion" that says "It makes me love everybody," and the results were just what we had prayed for. The hand-shaking took place, and the congregation seemed mightily revived. One person joined the Church at the close of the morning service, and another at the evening service. Both of them are mothers of families in the community.

We will begin our revival campaign next Sunday—the third Sunday—and will continue it ten days or two weeks. I would like to think that the North Carolina and Virginia Conference was united in prayer for her infant Church during this campaign, and so I am asking you to assist us in that manner. M. F. ALLEN, Pastor.

WADLEY LETTER.

For my Church work this year I have Mt. Zion, Wadley, and Pisgah. This is indeed an interesting field of work. I left the Church at Mt. Zion thirteen years ago, and upon returning this time I found quite a change, but the same loyalty and devotion of those of former years. We closed our meeting on the 8th, with eighteen additions to the Church. Some of the services were taken up entirely with talks and experiences of the people. Rev. J. H. Dollar was in charge of the singing, and preached the last service. His services were greatly appreciated.

The revival at Wadley was held as a union meeting with the other Churches of the town. It was one of the best meetings we have ever had, this being the seventh since I came back as pastor. This is a very pleasant field, and the co-operative spirit existing between the Churches has a very great deal to do with this. Our people are loyal and congenial and have a desire to do things that count for the Church and community. We received seven members, while some of them are to be received at Rock Springs.

Pisgah is a new field in the northern part of the State, and is the result of the faithful and devoted life of our late-lamented Rev. J. W. Elder. In the front of the Church there is an appropriate memorial window which expresses their love for the man who did so much for the work in that section. The Methodist Episcopal Church and ours held the revival together. Their pastor is a most congenial Christian man. The pastors did the preaching. Every service was inspiring and resulted in much good for the Church life in the community. We received twenty-two members, nineteen of them into our Church. We are sure that others will join during our next appointment. The results or success of these meetings have come because of the earnest, prayerful co-operation of the Churches.

The last of January I was granted a leave of absence for three months to attend at Elon. I am very grateful, indeed, for this consideration; also the assistance given by Rev. S. L. Beougher, Rev. W. C. Carpenter and Rev. Caves in supplying the work while I was away. I returned at the end of the three months and found the work in fine condition. E. M. CARTER.

A BILL THAT WAS NEVER PAID.

A ten-year-old lad overheard a conversation about certain bills to be paid and conceived the idea of making out a bill for his own services, says the Compton Enterprise. So the next morning he laid this statement of account on his mother's breakfast plate:

"Mother owes Willie for carrying coal six times, 20 cents; for bringing water lots of times, 30 cents; for going ten errands, 15 cents."

His mother read the bill, but said nothing about it. That evening Willie found on his plate the 75 cents, and also another bill, which read as follows: "Willie owes mother for his happy home for ten years, nothing; for nursing him through a long illness, nothing—total, nothing."

When Willie saw the 75 cents he was pleased; but when he read his mother's bill his eyes grew dim and his lips quivered. Then he took the money to his mother, threw his arms about her neck and begged that she would let him do lots of things for her.

Mother's bill is rarely presented, but it will pay each person to think it out and over for himself and then pay it in love and service.—Downey (Calif.) Champion.

Little Jackie took the Church collection very seriously, and every Sunday morning he saw that his penny was ready.

One day just as the usher began to take the collection, Jackie noticed that a guest in the family pew was not duly provided. Sliding along the seat, he whispered, "Where's your penny?"

"I didn't bring one," replied the woman.

Time was short, and the matter was urgent, but Jackie came to a decision with great promptitude. Thrusting his penny into the woman's hand, he whispered: "Here, take mine! It'll pay for you, and I'll get under the seat."—Pittsburgh Sun.

A SERIES OF TALKS ON ELON COLLEGE.

I. The Carlton Library Building.

This is one of the most complete library buildings on any college campus in the country. Given to Elon College by the Carlton family—P. J., L. E., and H. A. Carlton, and Mrs. T. S. Parrott—it stands dedicated to Christian learning.

This building is 120x64 feet, three stories high, of modern fire-proof construction, and is well stocked with valuable books. Special attention has been paid in collecting books to furnish the very best parallel and research matter for all the college courses. The stack-room inside the building, where the books are kept, is built in the form of a vault, so that no accident could destroy it. The Southern Christian Convention, recognizing the double safety provision of this book-vault, has made it the depository for their permanent records.

The stack-room itself is five-stack stories high. Steel shelving, and marble floors and stairways are to be used in this vault-room. The total capacity of the library building is 225,000 volumes.

On the first floor are the reading-rooms, as well as offices, cataloguing and charging-rooms. The building is so arranged that the reading-rooms, reference shelves, and stack are convenient for the students, and they may secure the information desired in the minimum amount of time. The second and third floors contain stock and supply rooms, professors' studies, and seminar rooms. These seminar rooms are unique provisions of the Carlton Library and fill a vital need. Here, groups of students may meet for discussion and group research work. Each department of the college has its seminar room with special reference works on the courses of that department.

Library experts have pronounced it one of the finest libraries in the country, and the Christian Church and Elon are under lasting obligation to the donors. C. M. CANNON.

VIRGINIA VALLEY CENTRAL CONFERENCE.

This Conference met on August 12, 1924, at Bethlehem Church, near Timberville, Va., and was called to order by the president, Rev. W. T. Walters, D. D., who conducted the devotional service. After the enrollment of the members of Conference, the welcome address was made by J. C. Bradford, which was responded to by Rev. A. R. Flowers.

Dr. W. A. Harper and wife, P. J. Kernodle, Rev. A. R. Garland, Rev. A. W. Sparks, Rev. W. C. Hook, Rev. W. G. Clegg, and others, on motion, were invited to seats as deliberative members. The program committee and executive committee each made reports, which were adopted. Miscellaneous business was followed by adjournment, Rev. R. C. Crumpler pronouncing the benediction.

The afternoon service was preceded by a song service, led by Rev. J. F. Morgan, and devotional service by V. T. Huffman.

The annual address before the Conference was delivered by Rev. A. W. Andes; subject, "The Enlarging Vision of the Church." Then followed a paper on "Our Publications" by P. J. Kernodle. Next was scheduled an address by Dr. J. O. Atkinson, whose place on the program was taken by Dr. W. A. Harper, subject "Beginning at Home," who made it evident that the home was basic. After the transaction of some miscellaneous items, the Conference adjourned, with benediction by Rev. A. R. Garland.

The night session opened with song service and prayer by Rev. A. W. Sparks. The stereopticon lecture on the "Enterprises of the Christian Church" was presented by Dr. W. A. Harper, president of Elon College. Adjourned.

Thursday (second day) opened by song service, led by Rev. J. F. Morgan, and devotional service by Rev. R. P. Crumpler. The roll was called; new delegates enrolled; minutes approved. The address, entitled "Swamped," was made by Rev. A. W. Sparks, who gave an interesting discussion of the "open country" Church.

Then followed the report of the committee on moral reform, read by Rev. R. P. Crumpler, chairman; also the report of the committee on education was presented, Dr. W. T. Walters, chairman. Then followed an address by Dr. W. A. Harper, subject "Christian Education a Transforming Force." Adjourned for dinner.

Afternoon devotional service led by W. C. Wampler. The report of the Conference Mission Secretary was read by Rev. J. F. Morgan, and after discussion adopted.

Dr. W. A. Harper, in the absence of the Mission Secretary, spoke on "Christian Education."

Then the president of the Conference Missionary Association took the chair. The principal item considered was a plan to increase the number of memberships in the association. It was decided to set apart a given day for that purpose. Officers were elected for the coming year.

Conference then resumed business. Items of miscellaneous nature were disposed of. Adjourned.

The night session was given over to the Woman's Home and Foreign Mission Board. Reports of committees were read and officers for the year were nominated. An address was made by Rev. A. W. Sparks.

Friday morning—Song service, devotional service by Rev. D. B. Seal. Roll called, minutes approved. The report of the committee on Christian Endeavor and Sunday Schools was read from R. A. Larrick, chairman. Rev. A. W. Sparks addressed the Conference on the subject "Discovered"; a further discussion of the "Open Country Church."

The Conference listened to a beautiful solo by Rev. J. F. Morgan.

"Missions and Stewardship" was the subject of an address by Rev. W. T. Scott, who is now field secretary for Elon College.

The report of the committee on religious literature was received. The report of the treasurer was read and referred to the committee on finance. Adjourned for dinner. Benediction by Rev. W. T. Scott.

The afternoon devotional service was conducted by W. A. Crawford. Reports of the committee on home missions and committee on apportionments submitted; miscellaneous business; the election of officers and choice of a place for next Conference. Adjournment.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

CONFERENCE SECRETARIES.

One who does not consult our "Annual"—the only printed record we have—for facts, little realizes how much weight, authority, and responsibility our Conference secretaries have. It largely depends upon their work to show whether any gain or progress has been made within a year. For instance, in one of our Conferences last year, no less than four Churches, names, secretaries, statistics and all are eliminated. And one of the four is one of the strongest and most active Churches in the Conference. Compare the statistics of that Conference last year with those of the year before, and there is a heavy loss, not only in actual Church membership, but a loss from the Conferences of four Churches. And it takes all the gains in the whole Southern Convention to overcome that loss.

Now, those Churches are not lost, but are still in the field and have a large membership. That secretary's record to the world, as printed in the "Annual," was misleading. And the whole Church must suffer the loss.

In that same Conference, one cannot tell Sunday School secretaries from Church secretaries. It is a deplorable mix-up. Conferences certainly need accurate and painstaking secretaries.

THE NAME.

There is beauty as well as significance in the name Christian. What is more beautiful in practice than to wear just the one name—Christian? It is short, meaningful, pointed, and signifies. When one says, "I am a Christian," one has said enough—a follower of the blessed Christ, willing to wear His name, acknowledge His leadership, do His will, share His life, love and labor

The strange thing is that all His followers are not willing just to wear His name without wanting to hold up to the world some party or sectarian name that separates, divides, severs asunder. A Methodist wants, intends, tries, professes to be a Christian; but in advertising that fact to the world, the method of doing certain things, rather than the manner and the life of Him who prompts and redeems and saves, is put first and given the chief place in the category of names.

A Baptist will tell you that he is a Christian, or tries to be, or seeks to live to that end; but instead of submitting to the name only of Him whom they profess to follow, they advertise to the world that they are divided, severed, separated from others of the family of Christians by designating and emphasizing a manner, a mode of observing a certain ordinance.

Since baptism is a divine term, a disputed method of procedure; since methods differ in the conduct of human affairs and events, why not let the individual have his own liberty in such non-essential matters, and the whole wide realm of Christian believers come together under the one beautiful and significant name—Christian? One wonders! For there is much—very much—in a name, especially in one name. J. O. A.

OBSERVING LABOR SUNDAY.

September 6th is "Labor Sunday." The Federal Council of Churches requests that ministers observe it, reading during the service the message prepared by Mr. James Myers and printed in another column, and, if possible, preaching a suitable sermon. THE SUN wishes to give its endorsement to the idea.

We know that there are far too many special days in our Churches now, but labor is so fundamental to our life that we do not hesitate to urge our pastors to preach on the proper relation of labor and capital, of employee and employer, on September 6th.

It is not the business of the Church to settle labor disputes, but to prevent them by preaching Christian brotherhood so positively that strikes and lockouts cannot occur among Christians. The Church should never hesitate to discuss the Christian principles that underlie the industrial problem. It fails of its duty if it does not do so.

For this "Labor Sunday" service, special invitations should be addressed to labor organizations and to all employers of labor, and the day should not be an occasion of praising either labor or capital, but of real and uplifting facing of the principles that arise necessarily out of the desire to live the Christian life in business as well as in Church. W. A. H.

WHY?

Many of our good women—God bless them!—are making an heroic effort to interest themselves and others in missions. That is good! Now, because that is good, THE SUN'S editor wants to raise a question.

The one big business of the Church, we are assured, is missions. That seems to be good also; in fact, a quod erat demonstratum. So it needs no argument.

Now the question: If the one big business—the very greatest business—of the Church, in fact, is to be missionary, why does the Church relegate this business, for the most part, to the consideration and care of some of the good women? Not that the subject is not safe in the hands of the good women. It is. But do not the men, for their own sakes, and the children and all the others, for the kingdom's sake, need also to have a hand in the care of this the most vital issue and factor of Church life?

If we are going to have missions—the biggest business of the Church—principally in the hands of the good women, then why not leave some of the smaller items of the Church also in their hands, such, for instance, as "calling" the preacher and paying him; keeping up the Church building and grounds; running the Sunday School, and so forth?

Come, now, to a concrete issue. The study-book for the coming year is "Prayer and Missions." Now, this is a most marvelous book, setting forth, as it does, the power of prayer in the life and labors of men and women. Instance after instance of answered prayers of the most authentic types is recorded. One cannot read that book without saying, first, that God surely hears and answers prayer; second, thta the supreme prayer book for all times and tongues is the Bible.

Take those two salient facts—God answers prayer; the Bible is the best prayer book. Those facts are vital to Church-life and growth. Every man, woman and child in the Church ought to be taught those facts over and over again. Now, why should the Church, for the next year or so, relegate the study of such vital facts as those to a small fraction of our good women? Not that the women do not need to study them; they do, and they will—some of them will, and, God bless them, their prayer life and their home life and their spiritual life will be enriched accordingly. But why should not the prayer life and the business life and the spiritual life of us men and young people and all be enriched also by the same study? The men haven't time to read and study a book on missions, on prayer; on God's dealing with men through prayer? And yet those same men do read other things—their daily or weekly papers or magazines, or all three; in addition to their trade journals and farm papers, and so forth.

It is a puzzling question. It is a strange situation. Missions, the one big business of the Church! and yet for the most part, save for an occasional spurt at it, this business is left to the minds, the hands, the convenience of a few of the good women in the Church. Why?

That answered, then this: What can be done to interest the whole Church in the whole program of the Church? J. O. A.

THE CHAUTAUQUA.

The Chautauqua and School of Methods, in session at Elon College the past ten days, has proven its worth and has come to stay. One does not, in the future, have to argue for the need or the excuse of holding the Chautauqua. That has been met. That which must be looked to only is the proper arrangement of the program and the faithful carrying out of the same after it is arranged. In brief, a right idea has been discovered, and that which remains is to develop the idea and behold its growth and multiplying influence.

That more than two hundred registered by noon of the third day, and that the mark went far beyond this before the close of the session, is sufficient evidence that our people have begun, at any rate, to appreciate the Elon Chautauqua. Without doubt, the Churches, Sunday Schools and communities benefiting most from the Chautauqua will be those who patronized it most largely, and those who are to be pitied and to whom regrets are extended are those who did not avail themselves of the wonderful privileges and advantages that the Chautauqua offered. The fifteen to twenty pastors in attendance, teachers of Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor, also the leaders of Missionary Societies and the other auxiliaries of the Church, will carry new and larger messages to their people, and the impact of these ideas obtained at the Chautauqua upon the various Churches and communities represented will be tremendous and will be felt for many months. Our best workers, teachers and preachers, for the most part, were present during the Chautauqua, and besides giving their own ideas to those who attended, in turn secured many ideas that they could carry with them.

It was a real School of Methods. Pastors heard their problems prayerfully and carefully treated and considered; teachers and officers were brought face to face with the issues that confront them in the home Church; and many pupils learned methods that they had not known before. All Bible students had the privilege of learning more of the Book and getting new lines on its wonderful teachings.

The fellowship of Chautauqua is worth everything to one. To associate for a week or ten days in a Christian atmosphere with the best and most alert Christian workers and friends that one has, is worth more than can be told in words. The hours together in delightful fellowship and happy conversation formed an asset for all who attended the Chautauqua whose worth will be realized for months and years to come.

We may count our Chautauquas and Schools of Methods as real institutions, which, having sprung up in recent years, have come to stay and to mark an epoch in our Church life and improvement. We counsel all SUN readers to attend one or more of these Chautauquas. The one at Bethlehem is to be held yet; and here is deeply wishing that there may be a very large attendance on the part of our dear friends in the Far South. Chautauqua is worthwhile; it is great; there is nothing else like it, and all who can possibly do so should avail themselves of its wonderful benefit and blessings.

WINNING THE WORLD TO CHRIST.

A man by the name of Earl Kernahan has written a book, and the Revell Company of New York, has recently published it. That statement is common-place enough, and if it contained the whole truth, no more need be said. But the statement only makes a beginning. It does not go far enough. This one goes further: The man who wrote the book has had an experience, is now having an experience, and has made a very exciting, not to say a most thrilling, adventure.

This man Kernahan has the audacity to believe that this whole wide world of wayward, reckless and sinning men and women can be won to Jesus Christ and saved from sin through Him, if only those who profess faith in Him will take it upon themselves to go out and tell others about Him.

Now, isn't that a strange, wild notion for a man in our day to have? And what do you reckon this man calls his strange idea? Just this, "Visitation Evangelism." What a name! What an idea! What a notion! Kernahan tries to explain what he means by saying, "Just go to a man's house, his store, his field, his office, any where you can find him, and tell him about Jesus Christ and His power to save, and ask the man then, face to face with him, if he will not accept Jesus as his personal Saviour. Now, what does the reader think of that?

But this man Kernahan goes even further than that. Fact is, he goes a great deal further. He says this is not his way, but the Jesus way, of winning souls. He says Jesus found Zacheus up a sycamore tree, called him down, went home with him and talked to him about the better way —the Jesus way. Even further than this: Jesus went one day; He sat on a well, and when a lone woman in her sin and wickedness came there to draw water from the well, Jesus talked to her about the water of life till she got all filled up, and then she went back into her village—yes, sir, this lone woman did—and told one after another that they should go and find Jesus just as she had done. And so this man Kernahan says that was the Jesus way—winning men and women one by one, face to face, here and now.

Yes, he admits that a man named Peter preached on the Day of Pentecost, and more than three thousand were converted; but prior to this, even men and women, individual believers in Jesus, had been running about hither and thither here and there, everywhere, telling wicked sinners about Jesus and of His power to save.

Well, it cannot all be told here—not half of it can—of this man Kernahan's great adventure, his perfectly thrilling and romantic experience. He was a preacher, is now a "D. D." in fact, a regular Methodist in good and full standing, but he took up the singular notion that folks were not won to Christ en masse, but one by one. So he Quit trying to win them by Churchfuls and tentfuls, and by the acre, and just went out to handpick them, face them where and when he could find them and win them then and there by just telling them about Jesus. He has been two years at the business now—maybe a little more; maybe a little less—but in that time he has seen more than ten thousand souls won from this wicked world to a saving and a working knowledge of his Lord. No, Kernahan did not do all this himself. He has the habit of going to a Church, talking to the pastor and his flock about this way of personal contact with Jesus till that pastor and his flock, practically the whole business of them, are willing to go out, one by one—or better, two by two—and talk to every unsaved soul in the whole community about Jesus until something happens in the community. And it always happens! Hundreds are not only saved and brought into the Church, but the whole Church membership discovers the fact that each individual member, as well as their pastor, can win souls to Jesus.

Well, it is all so strange and so beautiful and so wonderful! I got hold of Kernahan's book of 157 pages the other night at bedtime, after a hard day, but I never put it down till I had read every word of it. My! it is a romance, a venture, an experience with a thrill—this "Visitation Evangelism" is. J. O. A.

WORLD-WIDE MOVEMENTS.

An article in the Christian-Evangelist, written by Henry C. Armstrong and entitled "Christian Union Movements World-Wide," says:

"We are living in the day of a world movement for Christian unity. Never before could this have been said. Not that Christian unity is something new. There have always been voices and movements for the reunion of the Church, but none of them before has attained to world proportion and world importance. As a matter of fact, no age since Pentecost has been without its witness for this sacred cause. Unity has the vital pronciple most zealously guarded by the apostles and leaders of the early Church, and from the second century to the present time there runs a long line of names, from Ignatius, Irenæus, and Cyprian to Thomas and Alexander Campbell, Philip Schaff, and Robert H. Gardiner, illustrious for their devoted advocacy of Christian unity. Paul's vision of a united Church and Christ's prayer for it have never been wholly forgotten."

We regard it as an indication of a better day that large portions of the religious world are beginning to recognize the importance of Christian unity. The divisions in the religious world are not only iniquitous and sinful, but are unreasonable and absurd. They all have the same Bible. Does the Bible authorize and teach one to preach something that it instructs somebody else to contradict?

Jesus prayed that His disciples "'may all be one" (John 17:21). The end in view was, and is, "'that the world may believe that Thou didst send me." The world is rejecting Jesus on account of things thaught and practiced by professed followers of Jesus themselves. Infidelity is caused by the Churches not being willing to be governed by the Bible, by Churches suppressing parts of it and introducing other things it does not authorize. It is disguesting to see popular "pastors," so-called "preachers of the gospel," raving and ranting because some infidel professor denies the Mosaic account of the origin of man. Of course, Christ indorsed Moses, and the divinity of Christ is the best-proved fact in God's universe; but Christ also sent His apostles "into all the world" to "preach the gospel to every creature," and these so-called "preachers of the gospel" who are raving so about the infidels are such infidels themselves that they will not permit what the apostles commanded sinners to do to be saved to be read from their pulpits.

The effort to bring about Christian union will be an abortion until everybody gets humble enough in the sight of God to be willing to come to the Bible. If all would accept God's word as their guide, preach what they can read therein word for word, "adding nothing thereto, nor diminishing from it," man-made denominations, with their man-made creeds, would automatically vanish and we would have Christian union before the rising of tomorrow's sun. No one expects all denominations to ever become converted to any one of them. Methodists do not expect all to ever become Methodists. Baptists do not expect all to ever become Baptists. The only thing there is any hope of all ever becoming is simply Christians. The only Church all can ever unite in is the Church of Christ.—Gospel Advocate.

THE HOLY SPIRIT.

The individual Christian generally has a clear conception of God the Father and of Jesus Christ the Son, but he very seldom knows the Third Person of the Blessed Trinity in such a way that He becomes the guiding factor and source of strength in his Christian life. And yet, he, the Holy Spirit, is just as important in the great plan of redemption as is the Father and the Son. The Father provided the salvation by setting forth His Son as the propitiation for our sins. The Son makes this salvation possible by Himself becoming the Atonement. But without the aid of the Holy Spirit, this salvation would be worthless to the individual. As the Father provides this salvation, and as the Son makes it possible, so the Holy Spirit makes it operative in the life of the believer. All religions have the idea of atonement or the paying for of sin. But the Christian religion alone has this distinctive feature, namely, the introduction of divine power into the being and life of the believer, which vitally changes the spiritual life of that person during his earthly career. It is this present work of the Holy Spirit in the believer that is so little known, the result being seen in the sterile lives of many Christians.

The young Christian should hear all the good preaching possible. The preaching best for him will be that which he hears at his own Church. If he hears it continuously it will come upon his soul with cumulative effect. One should not seek for mere novelties in the pulpit—they are of very little value. We do not grow by shocks and thrills. We grow by the love of the living word, which is heard at least in part in the pulpit of our own Church week by week.

"What! Ye can't hear what I'm sayin'? Well, thin, repeat what ye didn't hear, an' I'll tell it ye again."

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Evil is more conspicuous than goodness. A hundred men may do business honestly for a whole week, and no attention is paid to them; one man steals a pair of shoes on Saturday night and the local papers are aflame with it. Much is said about the multitudes at the seaside on Sunday—that army of bathers desecrating the Sabbath. Nothing is said about that larger multitude that attends Sunday School and Church back in the city. If all the people who attend Sunday School and Church in Norfolk, Portsmouth, and the nearby cities on Sunday were assembled in one place, on a given Sunday, the seaside multitude would not look so large in the eyes of those who are looking for the worst in modern society. And it should be kept in mind that the seaside crowd is there only a few Sundays in the year, while the Church-goers are there the whole year through.

More is said about the tornado and hail storm that damages houses and crops for a few miles than is said about the rains and breezes that water and fan a whole State. More is said about one week's sickness than is said about a whole year of health. Men magnify the evil and mimify the good. Whether this view comes out of better or worse life may be a question for philosophers; the fact remains that evil is more conspicuous than good. It seems to be a principle in practical life that men see in others what is potentially in themselves; and, if this is true, pessimism does not reflect any complimentary judgment upon those who see the worst instead of the best in men and times.

In every age the older people think the younger people are worse than they used to be. Judgment and opinion rest upon the standpoint from which conditions are viewed. Paul said: "When I was a child, I spake as a child, I understood as a child, I thought as a child; but when I became a man, I put away childish things." Grown people too often want children to think and act in terms of grown people. False opinions grow out of false angles and false standards. No sane Christian will condone evil, but the law of suggestion goes with knowledge, and much talk and much writing about evil suggests evil. That is the harm that grows out of vile pictures in the picture shows. They suggest evils of which children had not dreamed. There is evidently too much said about the evils of this age. It questions, unconsciously no doubt, the promises of the Word of God. "This world for Thee, O Christ" sounds better than the "Church is losing ground."

In spite of doubt, criticism, and fear, the kingdom continues, the Bible lives, and governments come more into harmony with God's will. A careful reading of history, even Bible history, would make a more hopeful outlook for virtue, religion, home, Church, and all the benevolent institutions founded and maintained by Christianity. The widespread publicity of evil is another source of false judgment with reference to the evils of the times. Look for the best!

ELON LETTER.

The seventy-seventh annual session of the Virginia Valley Central Conference met with Bethlehem Church, Tenth Legion, Va., August 12-14. The attendance was about normal; in fact, everything was about normal, including the fine weather and the even finer hospitality of the entertaining congregation.

The annual address was delivered by Rev. A. W. Andes. He struck a hopeful note to the effect that the Conference had gained a thousand and more members in twenty years, and that during the same time pastors' salaries and money given for missions had likewise shown a wholesome increase.

Dr. Atkinson could not be present. So I had the honor to speak twice in his great name. It is certainly exhilarating to speak in a great man's place on a program. He is responsible for what you say. So you have great "liberty." Then, everything you say has double authority—the authority of the great man and of yourself. It is good for Dr. Atkinson's peace of mind that nobody took down my addresses. I had not written them out. They were ex tempore, properly to be translated "'out of time." I think some jokes I told will be remembered. Jokes usually do stick, I understand.

I had another thrill, too, and perhaps I ought not to tell it, but the participants certainly will not object to seeing in print what they were willing, in the broad, open daylight, for everybody to see who cared to. A young man and two ladies, delegates to the Conference, ate their dinner on the Church ground and then diagonally crossed the "pike" to a store where they sat on a bench on the porch. It was not long till the lady nearest the young man found herself in the young man's embrace, with long, luscious kisses following each other with clock-like regularity. Several persons walked by and automobiles passed, but these lovers were totally oblivious of all that happened. They were interested only in themselves. They even forgot, or seemed to, the third member of their trio. I have been to many Conferences in many places, but this one proved to be the most demonstratively loving of my experience.

I witnessed a scene in Chicago once nearly like this. A young girl was being embraced by her lover while standing on a street corner. The police arrested them. Their excuse was that she could only entertain him in her bed-room, since she was clerking in a store for small wages, her home being in Michigan, whence her lover had come down to see her. She did not think it right to entertain her lover in her bed-room, and so permitted him to embrace her on a crowded street corner. (Lovers have to kiss these days, you know!)

The judge required them to marry, which they wanted to do anyway, and I hope they lived happily ever after. I sympathize with the young Chicago couple, but I don't know what to say in defense of this Virginia Valley escapade. Perhaps young women should be chaperoned to Conference.

Rev. A. W. Sparks, of Bedford, Pa., gave some excellent addresses on "The Rural Church Problem." Prof. P. J. Kernodle represented The Christian Sun. Rev. W. T. Scott spoke on "Missions and Stewardship." Rev. R. P. Crumpler made a very sensible moral-reform report and address. He had really prepared himself. Miss Verdie Showalter, Mrs. W. T. Walters, Mrs. B. F. Frank, and Mrs. W. A. Harper presented the work of the Woman's Board excellently. They more than doubled (the women did) their gifts to missions the past year. Four laymen of the Conference had parts on the program. Rev. J. F. Morgan had charge of the music, and led splendidly. It is greatly regretted that Bro. Morgan is to leave the work of the Conference. Eastern Virginia gains at the Valley's expense.

It seems to me that now is the time, of all times, to begin a Church in Harrisonburg, and the Conference really needs some objective like that to cause it to grow and flourish.

I was gratified to find that all the ministers having work in the Conference and active in its life are Elon men except two. And I cannot help thinking how Elon can be expected to continue to supply leadership for our Church and its work unless the sons and daughters of our people come here for their life preparation. The future leadership of our Church is in Elon now, if it is anywhere. W. A. Harper.

PEN-PICTURE OF A GREAT CONVENTION.

Two sentences will, I believe, describe in a general way, the great Portland Christian Endeavor Convention which has just closed, and the two years' work represented by this convention and the work planned for the young people in the coming years by this convention.

First: It was the greatest international convention ever held in the history of the Society of Christian Endeavor.

By this is not meant that it was the greatest in numbers. Many other conventions have far exceeded it in numbers. Only between 8,000 and 10,000 were present.

It was the greatest convention of all the national or international conventions of Christian Endeavor ever held on this side or across the Atlantic in its preparation by the local committee. There was absolutely nothing left unprovided that would contribute to the comfort, happiness and welfare of the delegates in attendance. Private cars were flying all times of day taking the officials and delegates from hotels to the auditorium and back. On the last day, which was known as "Recreation Day," the people of Portland came with their private cars and took all who desired to go on that most wonderful of all drives in the world—the great Columbia scenic highway and loop drive.

The highway itself is one of the greatest pieces of engineering in the world. For fifty or sixty miles it sweeps you by wonderful gorges, lifty waterfalls, majestic, rugged mountains on one side of the highway, and on the other the wonderfully beautiful Columbia River. Some of the time you are down near the level of the river, and some of the time you are thousands of feet above it. Then the highway leaves the river and plunges back into the heart of the mountains, winding among the great firs which stand like giant sentinels with heads reaching to the clouds seemingly, in thick ranks along either side of the highway. Again you are swept out into a great panoramic view of the wonderful Hood River Valley with its marvelous orchards, and all the time you are winding around that indescribably beautiful mountain, Mt. Hood, which rises like a great marble cone with its sides covered with snow, to an altitude of 11,225 feet. As you gaze on it, it seems like the great marble dome of some vast cathedral builded by God. The road winds completely around this, one of the most inspiring sights of the great Northwest. This marvelous trip covers 173 miles. The good people of Portland took their cars and took all the delegates who would go on this wonderful trip. Two thousand five hundred delegates signed up for the long or shorter trip.

Second: It was great because of its finely prepared program. It was a constructive program, dealing with high but practical subjects. The following list of subjects will give something of an idea of this program. "Our Friends for Christ," "The Community for Christ," "The World for Christ," "International Fellowship," "Interracial Fellowship," "The Evangelization of the Young People of America," "Why America Must Work for World Prohibition of the Liquor Traffic."

These great themes were most ably handled by men most competent to treat them. Never have I heard a finer line of addresses at any convention. Among the great speakers were the following: Dr. Francis E. Clark, Hon. Gifford Pinchot, Governor of Pennsylvania; Hon. Walter M. Pierce, Governor of Oregon; Dr. Daniel E. Poling, Dr. Lapsley A. McAfee, Dr. A. W. Beaven, Dr. A. Ray Petty, Bishop Kyles, Dr. William Hiram Foulkes, Dr. William Ralph Hall, Dr. Royal J. Dye, Bishop W. T. Vernon, Dr. J. Whitcomb Brougher, Dr. Ira Landrith, Bishop A. J. Carey, Dr. Mark Matthews, Dr. L. F. Jordan, Dr. Edgar DeWitt Jones. No finer, stronger group of speakers ever addressed a convention.

Your trustee was on the program twice, addressing a conference for life-work recruits, on the subject, "Service for Unordained Workers," and addressing a rally of the smaller denominations on the theme, "How Can I Serve My Church?" At this rally there were seventeen of the smaller denominations represented by one or more delegates.

There were some great incidents connected with this convention that some of us will never forget. One was when our beloved leader, the founder of Christian Endeavor and the one who for thirty-eight years has held the office of president of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, tendered his resignation of that office to the board of trustees of the United Society. Some of us knew it was coming, and knew that Dr. Clark had said that his decision was final, but we hoped it might not have to come yet. No one seemed willing to be the one to make the motion to accept his resignation, and in sad silence we sat until some one finally made the motion and it was finally seconded; the motion was put, unanimously carried, and the only man who had ever been president of the United Society had laid aside that office. Dr. Daniel A. Pohling, pastor of the Marble Collegiate Church, New York, and the associate president of the United Society was chosen to succeed Dr. Clark. We all felt, however, that Dr. Poling spoke the truth when he said "Dr. Clark has not now, and never will have, a successor." Dr. Clark was made president emeritus and still retains the presidency of the World's Christian Endeavor Union.

It was a great moment when, that evening, Dr. Clark announced his resignation and called Dr. Poling to his side, and the two strong men threw their arms over each other's shoulders, and Dr. Clark, presenting his successor, spoke of his love for Dan Poling and then said, "If I were not a cold-blooded Yankee from the shores of Cape Cod I would, like the Frenchman, plant a kiss upon both his cheeks." Cries from all over the audience, "Do it! do it!" Dr. Clark said, "Perhaps I will in private."

It was a tender moment when Dr. Poling was installed and his father, a pastor at Salem, Oregon, made the installation prayer. It was a great prayer, and we were all lifted very near the throne of God when he said so simply and beautifully, "God bless Dan, and help him to go forward in the principles of Christian Endeavor as he has in the past."

At this meeting the Clark recognition fund was launched. The officers of the United Society are to raise $100,000, this sum to be placed at interest and the interest to be given to the man who for thirty-eight years has given his life to the interests of Christian Endeavor, making three trips around the world and never receiving one cent of salary, caring for himself and paying his traveling expenses from the remuneration received from his writings. After his death the interest will be used in the extension of Christian Endeavor. The great convention gave a most hearty and unanimous vote in favor of this resolution.

This convention was favored with the greatest music of any convention. There was the great choir of three hundred voices, and the great orchestra of one hundred and thirty-five pieces, all of them members of the Endeavor Societies of Portland. Dr. Percy Foster, of Washington, D. C., veteran leader of the Christian Endeavor conventions of the past, led the singing of the convention. Then the musical organizations of Portland gave us some rich treats in the musical line. The Helvetia Swiss male chorus delighted the convention with their singing, as did also the Edelweiss Harmony Club, composed of about seventy-five women in Swiss costume. On another evening, the Arion Philharmonic Society rendered a number of beautiful selections.

The parade, although not nearly so large in numbers as many of the other conventions, was the most colorful, the costumes being rich and striking. As the crowds of young Endeavorers and some of us older ones too, swept through the streets of Portland singing, "Onward, Christian Soldiers," "Beulah Land," "Faith of Our Fathers," and many others of the great hymns of the Church, the throngs crowding the sidewalks for squares and squares cheering again and again. At the reviewing stand I met Mayor Baker, of Portland, and I said, "Well, Mayor, that was a great parade." "Yes," said he, tapping over his heart, "and what made it great was what was back of it. Those young people were not marching because they had to, but because they wanted to."

The climax came on the last night of the convention—the great consecration meeting—when the great crowd fillling the auditorium listened with bowed heads to the earnest words of the founder of the society and repeated with him the words of the boy who became the great judge and priest of Israel, "Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth," and then a little later joined with him in the words of the great apostle to the Gentiles, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" Percy Foster led the bowed multitude in singing, "Where He Leads Me, I will Follow."

The afternoon sessions were given to conferences along practical lines of Christian Endeavor work. Nine different conferences were in session at the same time. Each of these was conducted by competent leaders.

The report of Edward P. Gates, general secretary of the United Society, was most inspiring, revealing the fact that the last two years had been the most fruitful of any two years in the history of the society. Ten thousand new societies have been organized during the biennium. More than six thousand of this number during the last year. Fifteen thousand pledges to daily prayer and Bible study; 4,316 pledged tithers, and 1,028 have pledged full-time Christian service as ministers, missionaries, or in other ways. The report of the growth of Christian Endeavor in foreign lands is most heartening. The C. E. Union of China, with 2,500 societies, has taken as its slogan 35,000 societies by 1935.

The slogan for the coming biennium was given by Dr. Clark as "Fidelity to Christian Endeavor Principles."

The following points were given for emphasis by Secretary Gates for the coming year:

1. Promote hearty co-operation with denominational leaders and all leaders and all agencies seeking to serve young people.

2. Undertake intensive instructions in the principles of Christian Endeavor.

3. Extend graded Christian Endeavor.

4. Emphasize the new society standards.

5. Emphasize each month definite features of the program. Under this item, a list of features of C. E. work to be emphasized each month was given, beginning with September. During this month the Endeavorers are to seek to enroll five hundred thousand young people for Bible reading and Scripture memorizing.

October.—Plan a program of activities for the year based on the new society standards, the suggestions of the denomination, and its own local needs.

November.—Study the principles of world citizenship.

December.—Co-operate in the observance of "Golden Rule Sunday."

January.—The organization of classes in "Progressive Endeavor."

February and March.—One hundred thousand young people accepting Christ and uniting with the Church; ten thousand Christian Endeavorers enroll and train for Sunday School teachers and for leadership in junior and intermediate Christian Endeavor Societies or other organizations of young people in the Church; support the denominational missionaries; increase Church attendance.

April, May, and June (victory months).—A campaign to make every union an honor union and every society an honor society.

July.—World's Christian Endeavor Convention, London, England, July 16th to 21st.

Some great thoughts from the International Christian Endeavor Convention:

"A vote withheld for righteousness is a vote for evil. It is the votes that are not cast that keep corrupt politics alive."—Governor Pinchot.

"The bootleggers are bold because they know that the government of the United States has never yet determined to put an end to their criminal traffic. They know, you know, and I know, that the Treasury Department could have set its foot down any time and removed this scandal from the good name of the United States."

"Moral questions are always the most important questions, for they go to the heart of every problem."

"I am ashamed of the business organizations of this country that defeated the child-labor amendment; I am ashamed of the Christians who helped them do it."—Dr. Petty.

"The creed which makes Americans believe that they are the only children of God is an un-Christian one and a dangerous one. When you speak of people as Japs, Chinks, Dagoes, Wops, and the like, there is something wrong with your religion."

"Companionship, sympathy, tolerance and loyalty on the part of the parents in the American home would solve the so-called 'youth problem.'"

"Christian Endeavor dreams of a new and better world; Christian Endeavor envisions the new, the Christian order, but in all her teaching and in all her practice, is committed to the proposition that there can be no such consummation without new men and women made new in Christ."—Dr. Poling.

"Christian Endeavor as a ministry to youth seeks to lead young people to Christ, to strengthen them in the Christian life, to train and engage them in service for and with Christ."

"The message of Christian Endeavor to the world is supremely "Have faith in youth."

"Success is doing your dead level best."

Thinking Straight on Church Benevolences.

A great deal of loose thinking is done about the benevolences of the Church. Many have not thought the matter of the kingdom benevolences through. Many congregations are building new houses of worship. Others are enlarging, remodeling, repairing. All of this is splendid, but all have not stopped to think that during such periods there must be no decreasing of our general enlarging work. Missionaries connot otherwise be supported, colleges maintained, workers kept at the pressing and needy tasks. There are very important reasons why our work should have increased support. Our work is successful and growing, and must be maintained. The demands are greater. Agreements with fields and workers müst be carried out. There are great responsibilities resting on our Church, not only to maintain our work as at present, but the absolute necessity of enlarging to meet its normal growth is upon us. We must ever bear in mind that the whole work of the Christian Church is binding upon us all. Because a Church is building, or enlarging its equipment, it cannot follow that that Church can decrease its contributions to the work outside its local bounds.

Many of our Churches are now making Church budgets, and that is right. They should do so, but they must watch the ratio between the local part of the budget and the benevolent part. We should have a number of Churches whose benevolent budget should equal the local budget. Some of these budgets are very weak on the benevolent side, and there must be conscience aroused to the necessity of planning for and actually giving to meet the needs of our work. No one dare talk about the many calls or largeness of the benevolent work until after he has given the full one-tenth that belongs to the Lord.

There is great responsibility on the part of the every-member canvasser and the one who trains them so that the gifts, prayers, interest of every man, woman, and child be enlisted for the whole work. Your local work is important, but it is no more important than your work at your college, your Conference, your home mission, foreign mission and other interests. These are yours, and mine too. If they fail, we are disgraced, and if they succeed, God is honored. We should be giving more and more each year to the kingdom. It is a great privilege we have to be partners with God, and, as His stewards, we must see that no part of His work suffers. We must grow individually in our giving.

No more far-reaching, basic principle was adopted by our General Convention than that of urging every person, every Church to increase the giving annually by at least 15 per cent. The principle of growth is involved, not merely enlargement of work, but enlargement of life.

Then, again, paying one benevolent obligation does not excuse from another. It would not do that even in the business world, much less among Christians in a spiritual work. I cannot be excused from paying my grocery bill because I pay my shoe bills. No one can be excused from paying his obligations sacredly assumed by giving to some other worthy enterprise. Because I support my local Church, I cannot be excused from supporting my college, my missions, my Orphanage; because I can see a work that is near, I am not excused from my work that I cannot see.

We are Christians, and, as Christians, we must face our personal budgets and our Church budgets not as a matter of bargaining, but as stewards.

C., $75.23—total for month of July, $389.88.

While we are profoundly grateful to the schools named for their liberal offering, and to the other schools which contribute monthly to missions, it is noted with regret that there are quite a few schools in the Southern Christian Convention not yet sufficiently interested in enlarging the kingdom and building up schools and Churches elsewhere to make a monthly contribution. For the next few months these contributions, not otherwise designated, will go to the support and extension of our mountain work in Carroll County, Va., and it is devoutly hoped that many of our schools not already doing so will vote for and send us one offering a month for this most worthy and needy work of the kingdom. Fraternally,

J. O. ATKINSON,
Mission Secretary.

THE VALUE OF BOOKS.

We do not make enough of books—that is, of genuine books. Of some kinds, too much is made. They are books which exude poison until the very atmosphere is deadly—like that which circulates about the terrible "cotton-mouth" serpents in the Canal Zone. Such books are thrust into our faces nearly everywhere we go. The devil is never backward about urging his wares. But there are books which are like the tree of life whose leaves are for the healing of the nations. When we see a youth interested in a vital, healthy book, we are always glad. The scene is prophetic. There is a mind in the process of making. Collier's Weekly picks up an incident on the power of books:

"The jailer at Pueblo, Colo., who established a library in his jail some time ago, reports: 'The morale of the Pueblo County Jail has been raised 50 per cent. Prisoners now believe we have an interest in them and that their detention is for their benefit. Good books make prisoners stop and think, and thinking eventually unveils to them their present status as regards society. Thinking does no harm, and in the majority of cases makes better men and women of them when they are released.'

"'Most all of the decency and progress in the world is concerned in some manner with the use of books."

Our advice is, get good books and read them. They work on the character like magic. To read a good book means a new start in life. Often have we said it, and we shall keep on saying it—there is no dead-line for the preacher who reads; really reads! And probably the converse may be urged, that the preacher who does not read will find it in his road, harder for him to blast away than was the Hindenburg line in the World War. Rarely does a minister who neglects his reading keep his interest in life, his mental alertness, until he is old.

Even though he constantly worked under the mystical and wonderful stimulus of inspiration, Paul was also a reader. He knew the philosophers, the poets, the history of his times. And he admonished Timothy, the young preacher, to "give heed to reading."

We get many letters from pulpit committees and others asking our opinion of given preachers for their work. It is always a pleasure—in fact, nothing gives us keener pleasure—to speak a good word for a good man. We cannot recall that we have ever been asked whether the preacher in question is a good reader, a good student. Churches should put that into their list of satisfactory qualifications for their ministers. If a man reads well and constantly, and knows how to transmute his reading into light and power, his chances are a thousand to one that he will be a usccessful preacher in almost any field.—Christian-Evangelist.

"LABOR SUNDAY" MESSAGE.

BY JAMES MYERS.

The most important need of industry in America today is the co-operative spirit. As a nation, we have everything else essential for industrial peace and prosperity. We have men, ability, resources, organization and opportunity. The present situation, however, makes it clear that these things in themselves are not sufficient to insure abiding peace and prosperity in industry. As has been said recently, "National resources, available labor and capital are important, but these things are of little value until they are released by people with the spirit of God." "Of all the criticisms leveled against modern industrialism," writes the president of an important industry, "none is so basic as the allegation that the underlying spirit is ethically wrong. The fundamental trouble with the capitalistic-labor controversy has been its militancy." The will to co-operate is our first and fundamental need. Granted the co-operative spirit and the will to get together, the parties to industry may be counted upon to work out forms and methods for the practical solution of the great problems which face the industrial world.

Indications of Progress.

One of the gratifying features of the hour is that a new spirit of co-operation seems to be coming to birth. Representatives of capital and labor and the public are recognizing the possibilities of better human relations in industry and in various ways are feeling their way towards effective methods of co-operation. In several of our more important industries, employing above four millions of workers, employers and regular labor unions are now working with reasonable harmony and efficiency. The movement known as employee representation has also grown rapidly until now approximately one thousand concerns employing possibly a million workers are using democratic methods in solving the problems of industrial relations as they arise in the course of the daily operation of mills and mines. The best plans of employee representation take care that labor's solidarity is not sacrificed by any of their regulations, and concede the principle of recognition to organized labor. The millions of workers not as yet included in the ranks of organized labor, nor affected by various forms of employee representation, can no longer be expected to be silent about their wishes. The day of the docile organization of human units is gone. Free and intelligent co-operation affords the only sure foundation for American industry.

Constructive Note by Organized Labor.

A significantly constructive note is being struck by organized labor. President Green, of the American Federation of Labor, recently said in an address before the Harvard Union, "As evidence of our faith, we refuse to accept the oft-expounded theory that the differences between capital and labor, between employer and employees, are irreconcilable. . . . Inasmuch as collective bargaining is based and founded upon group action, the union of the workers must be unreservedly recognized. In similar fashion, the right of employers to control, direct and manage industry and to receive a fair return upon invested capital must be willingly conceded. A spirit and purpose to follow the right and to do the right, to take no unfair advantage, to practice no trickery or deceit, to neither threaten nor coerce, should govern the representatives of employers and employees in all wage negotiations and conferences. Through such reciprocal relationship, the common problems of industry can be solved, efficiency in service promoted, and economies in production introduced. The practical operation of such a plan of understanding must necessarily be based upon the presumption that employers and employees are no longer inspired by hate, malice and enmity toward each other. Instead, the antagonistic and hostile attitude, so characteristic of the old order in industry, must be supplanted by a friendly relationship and a sense of obligation and responsibility. This is the newer concept of modern trade-unionism."

The significance of this statement is that labor has deliberately approached a new departure, is definitely seeking to participate in a new era of co-operation, and is making sincere overtures to organizations of employers.

Progressive Employers.

While labor is pursuing this policy, an increasing number of responsible business men hold to the same conviction and are giving it outspoken expression. Manifestations of this point of view are appearing in the railroad service, in the notable agreement of the Baltimore and Ohio Railway with the International Machinists' Union, and in the more recent agreements of the unions with the Chicago and Northwestern and with the Canadian Ntaional Railroads; in the willingness of so many large industries to take the initiative in setting up works' councils within their establishments; and in the efforts of the Department of Commerce in Washington to bring about constructive co-operation within industry to correct its own evils, and especially to reduce forms of economic waste. In a recent address before the National Civic Federation, Secretary Hoover said:

Co-Operative Reduction of Waste.

"It has become far more possible to deal with the problem of waste elimination than ever before in our history, for co-operative action is easier to summon today than ever before, and more certain. . . . To deal with waste by such action is to strengthen these very foundations of a better relationship between employer and employee. . . . Labor has played a large part in these questions. Nor is labor's part that of distasteful speeding up to the ultimate production of nervous wrecks. It lies in the study of where the major wastes of industry lie in relation to labor, where labor can play its part in the field of identity of interest, not in the field of reduced wage or longer hours, but in the multiple directions of constructive action; decreased unemployment, decreased intermittent and seasonable employment; final extinction of restraint of effort; actual helpfulness in better method and broad policies, and thereby increased productivity. And labor has a right to insist upon its part of these savings." In a previous address before the Boston Chamber of Commerce, Mr. Hoover said: "We have devoted ourselves for many years to the intense improvement of the machinery and processes of production. We have neglected the broader human development and satisfactions of life of the employee that lead to greater ability, creative interest, and co-operation in production. It is stimulation of these values that we can life our industry to its highest state of productivity, that we can place the human factor upon the plane of perfection reached by our mechanical processes. To do these things requires the co-operation of labor itself, and to obtain co-operation we must have an intimate, organized relationship between employer and employee. They are not to be obtained by benevolence; they can be obtained only by calling the employee to a reciprocal service."

This co-operation is not only needed in the daily conduct of an industry, but it is absolutely essential to the effective solution of great problems to which the national thought is turning; such as unemployment, greater efficiency in production, greater equity in the distribution of wealth and income, elimination of forms of economic waste, and greater satisfaction for labor in work, due to a fairer share in the responsibilities and rewards of industry.

It will be freely recognized that there are great difficulties in the way of such a policy. They arise partly out of long years of suspicion and conflict, and partly from the fact that while there are great areas within which there is community of interest, there are others where interests are divergent. It may be expected that the first of these difficulties will yield gradually, and that confidence will grow as each side learns that the other can be trusted. Meanwhile, there is need of a Christian technique of conflict in the areas within which there is frank divergence of interest, where clashes of opinion occur, or where more drastic differences may unfortunately find expression in open strike or lockout. Fair men will still deal with one another in a spirit of conciliation, each endeavoring, in justice and sincerity, to understand the other's point of view and to take into account the very real problems which each faces. Christian men on both sides must guard their spirit and methods in such trying situations.

The Hope of the Future.

The great hope of the future lies in constructive co-operation along practical lines of industrial progress, rather than in the mere mitigation of the evils of conflict. Society is entering, slowly and painfully upon an era in which highly developed methods of co-operation will displace the less scientific method of conflict. The technique of co-operation should be developed and applied increasingly to the immediate problems of industry and to far-reaching reconstructions of the social order. Toward these great objectives it is the function of the Church to urge forward all men and women of good will.

While the Churches are not prepared to advocate any particular system of industry, they ought to affirm, and do affirm, that the time has come for the reign of human equity and brotherhood in industry. They should endeavor to see what justice demands, what honor requires and what the Christian spirit dictates. That industry has a right to look to the Churches for the creation and the encouragement of the co-operative spirit cannot be doubted by any one who accepts the mission and function of the Christian Church, as defined by Jesus Christ and taught in the New Testament. The Churches must make it clear now that they stand for an industrial order which is democratic in its ideal, humane in its methods, and co-operative in its spirit.

LONG OR SHORT SERMONS.

There is a good deal of what has been called "consecrated common sense." In a recent issue of the New York World we read that the average American sermon is too long. The complaint comes from a West Indian auditor, but it is none the less valid. He is not by any means the only complainant who has a long sermon and its drawbacks in mind.

"A sermon," the World remarks, "if there is any life in it, is largely an appeal to the emotions. There is a limit to our capacity to feel. However willing the spirit, the flesh is weak; exhaustion overtakes it, whether we will or not. The most eloquent sermon ever preached contains less than 2,500 words, and can be read aloud in fifteen minutes. It was preached by the Divine Carpenter from a mountainside, and it gives a hint on this very subject: 'But when ye pray, use not vain repetitions as the heathen do; for they think they shall be heard for their much speaking.'"

We are not among those who would hamper a pastor in his sermonic methods. It is largely a matter to be decided between his people and himself whether his discourses should be long or short. Dr. Jowett, for thirty years one of the most popular preachers on either side of the Atlantic, always wrote and preached short sermons, and it would be hard to think of any one who more satisfactorily reflected the true sermonic spirit.—Christian Herald.

A young woman took down the receiver of the telephone one day and discovered that the line was in use.

"I just put on a pan of beans for dinner," she heard one woman complacently informing another.

She hung up the receiver and waited for the conversation to end. Upon returning to the telephone, she found the woman still talking. Three times she waited, and then, at last becoming exasperated, she broke into the conversation.

"Madam, I smell your beans burning," she announced crisply.

A horrified scream greeted the remark, and the young woman was able to put in her call.

Ruff: "Hello, Fluff! I hear you married a woman with an independent fortune."

Fluff (disconsolately): "No, I married a fortune with an independent woman."

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

By H. S. Hardcastle.

MISS PATTIE COGHILL, Field Secretary

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

August 30, 1925.

Subject: "Paul and the Philippian Jailer."

Golden Text: "Believe on the Lord Jesus, and thou shalt be saved."—Acts 16:31.

Lesson: Acts 16:16-31.

Devotional Reading: Psa. 40:1-5, 11-13.

Paul had won one convert in Europe—a woman named Lydia. He was about to win another. There was a maid who seemed possessed with the spirit of divination, or "fortune-telling," who was in the employ of a group of men who used her for making money. There was something about the missionaries which attracted the maiden, and she followed them, testifying that they were servants of the Most High God, and that they would show men the way of salvation. The plight of the maid grieved Paul and he turned to her one day and commanded the false spirit to come out of her. There was a note of authority in Paul's voice, and the maid got a new hold of herself and became normal.

And then the fun began! Her masters saw at once that their hope of gain was gone, and they "raised a howl." They caught Paul and Silas and drew them into the market-place unto the rulers. There they brought a charge against the missionaries that was as false as it was subtle. They said that the reason why they had brought the culprits there was because they were troubling the city. They took care to say that these men were Jews, for the Jews were in disfavor with the Romans. So adroit was their method that the crowd rose up and beat Paul and Silas, and then the magistrates ordered them to be put in prison and made doubly safe by being put in stocks.

"And when they saw their hope of gain was gone"—ah! there's the rub. As some one has said, the most sensitive part of a civilized man is his pocket. There are few people who are opposed to Christianity on general principles, so long as it is a vague and sweet thing, telling them of God's love and assuring them of God's forgiveness. But they will have none of it when it demands an account of stewardship, or interferes with their profits. One reads with a sense of humor the statement of the fact, and then turns to contemporary life to find it confirmed in a hundred ways. Why all the opposition on the part of anti-prohibition forces against the "dry law"? It is because prohibition cuts off their profits. Why does big business tell Christianity to keep its hands off business? It is because big business knows that the application of Christian principles to big business would take away a great deal of its hope of gain. Why do the warjingoists clamor for preparation and ridicule the idea of peace? It is because they see in the growth of international brotherhood and co-operation the end of their illegitimate—I believe it is illegitimate—profits. Why do many men refuse to accept Jesus Christ? It is because they know that if they accept Him and His way of life they will have to give up their nefarious business in many cases.

And the thing is all so human. Like the masters of the girl, they declare that their motive is the common welfare of the people. "These man are Jews, and do exceedingly trouble the people, and teach customs which it is not lawful for us to receive nor to observe, being Romans." What public-spirited men they were! How gracious and magnanimous it all sounds! It finds its counterpart or echo in the cry that it raised over prohibition. It takes away personal liberty. It is an infringement of personal rights. Here is one of the wonders of the Bible and an evidence of its divine nature. It shows human life in all of its phases, and does it in a contemporary way. An old Book, out of date? Never! It is modern and new, and its characters can be found in every city and town and country-side today and always. He who reads the Bible and does not find himself in it has not read it at all.

It may have been because the stripes from the beating they received were so painful that there was no sleep for the prisoners; or it may have been because they were happy because they had been persecuted for righteousness sake; or it may have been for some other reason—in any event, the prisoners did not sleep, and at midnight they had a "prayer and praise service" in the jail. There must have been something genuine and vital about the religious experience of men who could sing and praise God at such a time as this. As they sang, there was an earthquake, the foundations were shaken, the doors were opened, the bonds of the prisoners were loosed, and confusion reigned. The jailer, a man of honor in his position, thinking that the prisoners must have escaped, and disgraced in his own eyes because such a thing might have happened, was about to fall upon his sword and kill himself, when he was restrained by Paul. Calling for light to prevent the escape of the prisoners, and trembling with fear, he sprang in and asked Paul, saying: "Sirs, what must I do to be saved?" One questions fear as the highest motive leading to repentance, but one wishes that there were more fear if it would lead to such sound consequences as in the case of the jailer. It may be that we cannot preach a literal hell-fire-and-brimstone sermon in the light of the modern interpretation of the Bible, but the minister still has the material to assert that it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God. There is a deep need for a gospel that will strike at the roots of sinful lives, even if it has to resort to fear as an ultimate motive.

There is a great deal of discussion about creeds and confessions now. Theer are those who say that a man cannot be saved, cannot be a Christian at all unless he subscribes to a certain creed or submits to a certain ordinance or ceremony. It might help some to study again this lesson. As one seeks to find what Paul thought was fundamental and essential, he finds that it is comparatively simple. Paul said, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." It would seem that the important thing was a vital faith in Jesus Christ. The man who gives himself in filial trust and obedience to God through Jesus Christ is saved. Salvation is, of course, progressive, and a man must grow in grace. But all the king's horses and all the king's men can never save a man through mere acceptance of theological creeds apart from Christ. And if a man is in Christ Jesus, creeds do not become of surpassing importance as a factor in salvation.

Teaching Points.

1. Christianity has a message for women.
2. The faithful servant of Jesus Christ will show men the way of salvation.
3. Christianity must face the economic question.
4. The acid test of many a man is his attitude toward money.
5. Religion is not deep until it touches the pocketbook.
6. It is easy to impute motives to conduct which are not motives at all.
7. He who would live a godly life in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution.
8. A prayer meeting is not so much a matter of place or numbers, but of spirit.
9. Christianity helps a man in the crises of life.
10. Some men are frightened into the kingdom of God.
11. Faith in Jesus Christ saves men.
12. The conversion of one member of the family may be the means of saving the whole family.

CROSS-WORDS VALUABLE.

It was recently revealed that cross-word puzzles are a great help to humanity. They serve many purposes besides brain-teasing. For example, the cross-word fad has caused the many people who formerly left their newspapers on trains, subway cars, ferries, etc., to take them home with them now. This in itself is a small thing, but it has greatly eased the burdens of the poor car cleaners. One reliable train paper collector reported that the amount of paper to be collected now is only about one-third of what it was before the advent of the puzzles.

Solving cross-words is now claimed to be an aid to insanity cure. Occupational therapy has been in use at institutions for the insane in this country for a number of years. Solving cross-word puzzles is along the lines of occupational therapy. The working of puzzles is said to have a quieting and beneficial effect on insane patients. Cross-words have also been introduced into prisons. Many prisoners are said to be regular fiends.

On a number of occasions, puzzles have been the means of announcing engagements and weddings. Preachers also use them to impress upon their congregations the importance of certain texts. These "brain-teasers" are even credited with aiding digestion. They adorn menu cards in dining-cars and some restaurants. They may be indulged in either before or after the meal. It is claimed that those who finish their puzzles before their orders are served are permitted to take the menu cards with them.

TESTING THE SERMON.

A sure test of whether a preacher is preaching God's word is the presence or absence of miracle power at work in his Church. For God's work is certain to work miracles. "No word from God shall be void of power." A writer, referring to the secret of the success of the Reformation, has said: "The power which attended the movement was the power of God manifested through the living Word, the sword of the Spirit." And he added: "Human philosophy and the higher criticism have robbed too many preachers of this power. Their messages are too tame to arouse the people, too weak to strengthen the people, and too vague to guide the people." If our preaching is tame or weak, or vague, it does not get those qualities from the Word of God. Many sermons would not be preached, and many others would be considerably shortened if preachers realized that only to the extent that the message is a supernatural utterance from God does it avail.—S. S. Times.

MIRTH AS A SHOCK ABSORBER.

The prediction of Dr. Charles Shaw, professor of philosophy, in an address before the summer school of New York University, that with diffusion of learning the human race will lose its sense of humor and its ability to laugh is on a par with the statement of another professor that mirth will pass from the world along with alcoholic beverages. The theory of the latter is that laughter was introduced to mankind through the use of liquor; he explains the fact that children and other total abstainers have a sense of humor by saying, in effect, that there is an alcoholic taint in their blood, inherited from countless generations of wine-drinking ancestors. The predictions of both savants provoke a smile.

It is interesting to speculate as to the nature of humor and to try to account for mankind's possession of this valuable quality. It is difficult to explain why we laugh. Looked at from the point of view, say, of the inhabitants of Mars, or of perfectly sensible persons, if there are such, many of the things which provoke our mirth are far from comical. Let us consider a typical example of something which most persons would regard as funny. A man takes a run preparatory to leaping over a ditch. Just as he reaches it and is about to jump, his foot slips and he tumbles into the muddy water. Wholly rational beings would see this occasion only for pity. But the average person, while sympathizing with the unfortunate man in the ruin of his clothes, would also be amused at his mishap. It may be that in getting pleasure—for of course when we laugh we are getting a certain amount of pleasure—from misfortunes of this sort befalling others we are betraying unsoundness of mind. But if a sense of humor is due to a kind of insanity, it is insanity that is well worth having.

Mirth is a shock absorber. If we took every mishap seriously instead of laughing at it, our minds would be overburdened with sorrows, and life would be unbearable.—Pittsburgh Sun.

THE HAPPY FARMER.

It is a common complaint that the farm and farm life are not appreciated by our people. We long for more elegant pursuits, or the ways and fashions of the town. But the farmer has the most sane and natural occupation and ought to find life sweeter, if less highly seasoned, than any other. He alone, strictly speaking, has a home.

How can a man take root and thrive without land? He writes his history upon his field. How many ties, how many resources, he has—his friendships with his cattle, his team, his dog, his trees, the satisfaction in his growing crops, in his improved fields; his intimacy with nature, with bird and beast, and with the quickening elemental forces; his co-operation with the clouds, the sun, the seasons, heat, wind, rain, frost!

Nothing will take the various social distempers which the city and artificial life breed out of a man like farming, like direct and loving contact with the soil. It draws out the poison. It humbles him, teaches him patience and reverence, and restores the proper tone to his system—John Burroughs.

Uncle: "Well, Bobby, what did you learn at school today?"

Bobby: "I learned that the world is round and turns on hinges like that globe in the library."

Uncle: "Well, what do you think of that!"

Bobby: "I think they are asking me to believe a good deal for a small boy."

A STUDY OF THE PSALMS.

Chapter V.

MONDAY.

Security of Him Who Trusts in the Lord.

Psalm 91.

Psalm 91 is a meditation written at a time when the singer was in a worshipful mood. From the 1st to the 43d verse the speaker celebrates that security. That follows is the Lord speaking in response, confirming the magnificent exposition with a personal promise. This is a religious quiet monument. It is the ideal attitude of the meek and the poor who trust God for everything.

So read the psalm and trust Him.

Prayer.—Our Father, we desire to dwell in Thy secret place all our days. We desire heaven's blessings that come from such a trust. Deliver us from temptation and evil and cover us with Thy wings. With the forgiveness of our sins, we ask it in the name of Jesus. Amen.

TUESDAY.

A Citizen from Zion.

Psalm 15.

We have seen that righteousness has become the fundamental requirement of the Lord for all. In Psalm 15 we have a song which has been called "A Catechism for the Proselytes." It answers the question of the conditions of true communion with God by a pronounced emphasis on special morality.

Read it now. Enter into its spirit. Quite justly did an eminent Jewish commentator remark on this psalm:

"If Israel had accepted this conception of God, the religion of Jehovah would have become the religion of the world." But it was not accepted. Religion became legalistic, and a legalistic form of religion, however exalted in its ethics, can never be a true expression of the religion of spirit. It becomes external, and when that happens, there is too much form and ceremony. In it, one never gains peace. It requires too much study of law that one by the law may become righteous, and that is impossible. Yet it was out of this spirit the legal psalms were written, such as 19:7, that long one 119 with their extravagant praise of the law.

Prayer.—Our Father, forbid that we shall ever forget that Christianity is of the heart and makes all wrong things right. Give our hearts Thy spirit. In His name, we ask it. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

The Lord Our Shepherd.

Psalm 23.

David the shepherd so longed to be a sheep of the Lord that it found expression in tones deep and human and in terms of a shepherd care. So beautiful is it that it still touches the deepest chords of the human heart. His delight in God's supreme care found itself in the cry of the lamb to the great shepherd, the living God. It proceeded out of the far depths of the soul, and it seems like the cry of our own souls whose yearnings it also awakens. Happy, thrice happy, is he who can sing with all his heart this most beloved of all songs.

In the strength of this personal experience of the psalmist, we have our own longings unto God and our own divine fellowship that transcends death by a victorious faith that is never broken.

Prayer.—Oh, Lord God Most Holy, our Shepherd, be with us yet. Forgive our waywardness and shortcomings. Guide us, that we may not go wrong. Refresh us, that we may be strong. Comfort us, that we may not be cast down. Anoint us, that we may be filled with Thy Spirit. Baptize us with Thy goodness forever. Amen.

THURSDAY.

Security of the Righteous and Insecurity of the Wicked.

Psalm 37.

To the Jews it was hard to harmonize the experiences of life, the prosperity of the wicked, and the suffering of the righteous, with their faith in God's moral government of the world. It didn't seem right. The psalmist challenges this question by trying to steady the doubters by his counsel. "Fret not," he says; and he says it many times, and then sings, "I have been young, and now am old, yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread." That is a happy preachment.

Though the facts appeared against it and had almost shipwrecked his faith, he is certain of God's ultimate righteousness. His regard for the good of pious people anchored him safely. He went into the sanctuary and sang this song, which seems to be a salvation of his spiritual dilemma. He considered the latter end of the wicked and understood. He realized with sudden gladness that he, in striking contrast to the wicked, had found in God the salvation of life. Had he tried to see Jesus, who said, "All things work together for good to those that love God," he would have understood more and known that he was absolutely right.

Read the psalm and take heart.

Prayer.—Our Father, forgive our faithlessness and doubts. Hearten us in our faith. Give us the victory over our souls. Amen.

FRIDAY.

The Triumph of Faith.

Psalm 27.

The practical solution of life by communion with God is as true today as it was then. Faith triumphs over doubt today as then, and only because of its experience of direct fellowship with God. Combine this fellowship with common sense and a brave sense of righteousness, and we are bound to develop hope. Without this combination, vital faith is difficult to attain. Perhaps the psalmist does not know immortality, but he is "mighty close" to the apostle who defined knowledge of God as being "eternal life." It is this trust that enables him to say:

"The Lord is my light, my salvation, Whom shall I fear?"

A trust so strong that it bursts into the shepherd psalm.

Read the 27th psalm and then the 23d and worship God.

Prayer.—Our Father, let Thy light and Thy salvation shine along our path this day and forever. Amen.

SATURDAY.

The King's Marriage Feast.

Psalm 45.

The psalms make up a book of wonderful religious literature. Among them all there is only one secular song (Psa. 45), a wedding ode used at the marriage festival of a king with a foreign princess.

It is hoped that these five installments have furnished an insight in the songs that have been uplifting.

It is the warmly pulsating religious life that makes the psalms of perennial value. Much of it seems hard, and not in accord with our understanding of good morals, but the most of them voice deep human longings, and kindles spiritual devotion and teaches pure religion. Its poetic value and spiritual insight deserves to be used throughout the ages in public and private devotions.

Prayer.—Our Father, in turning to Thy Book, turn our thoughts and hearts to Thee. Teach us to live for Thee now and forever. Amen.

SUNDAY.

Sunday Meditation.

"Do your work—not just your work, and no more; but a little more for the lavishing sake: that little more which is worth all the rest. And if you suffer as you must, and if you doubt as you must, do your work. Put your heart into it, and the sky will clear. Then out of your very doubt and suffering will be born the supreme joy."—Dean Briggs.

"The man who reaches the top is the one who is not content with doing just what is required of him. He does more."

"Every man should make up his mind that if he expects to succeed he must give an honest return for the other man's dollar."

"Grasp an idea and work it out to a successful conclusion. That is about all there is in life for any one."—E. H. Harriman.

Prayer.—Our dear Heavenly Father, reveal to us today our duty of doing more than is required of us. that of doing for others, and that work that helps Thee to make all men great and good. In His name. Amen.

UNLOAD YOUR BURDENS.

If you can keep your head when all about you
The earth's supporting pillars seem to fall;
If you have faith in men when all men doubt you,
And even doubt that God is over all;
If you can keep on hoping, trusting, praying,
When all your praying seems to be in vain;
If you can see the sunshine round you playing
When all the world sees nothing else but rain;

If you can smile through tears at friends departing,
Congratulate them that their work is through;
If you can keep those bitter tears from starting,
Resume the work you left to bid adieu;
If you can keep the joy of life 'mid sadness,
Push back the clouds that heaven from earth divide;
If you can use your good to quench earth's badness,
And walk with Jesus ever by your side;

If you can lay your burden on His shoulder,
And be at peace, because you know it's there;
If you can trust that brother, who is older,
To ne'er forsake nor leave you with His care;
Can you dismiss life's troubles in a minute,
Because you trust the Pardoner of sin?
Yours is the earth and heav'n with all that's in it,
Ah! what is more: you have the Christ within!

—Rev. D. Raymond Taggart.

The young Christian—every Christian—should understand the ideals and works of all the religious groups taken collectively. We recommend that every Christian get a short, clear, history of the whole Church and of Christianity and read it. We recommend that then he should find out the sweep of Christian enterprise in the world. One who is really a Christian is a vital part of all the big movements taking place in the world at large. His life reaches to the end of the world.

Kiddies' Korner

MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT, Editor.

Dears:

Here is a letter from a Kiddie I love. Wouldn't it be loads of fun to write to each other?

Now, listen carefully, and see how you like this. I want all the Kiddies who belong to the Korner to send me just their names and addresses next week sure. Write your name plainly with pen and ink and send it to me at Ramseur, N. C. Don't forget, dears—I want those names sure by next Saturday! Can you do it? Oh, goody! you know we are going to have loads of fun; and it's best to hurry as fast as possible, for soon—very soon now—we will be starting to school again; and then I'm 'fraid you will only have time to read the Kiddies' Korner, much less— Sh-hh! I'm 'bout to tell. My, my, I can hardly wait to tell you. Of course, you will like it. I have played it— Oh! there I go again. Wait till next week, Kiddies, and I believe you will all be happy as can be!

Your name, and your address—send it to me at once.

Your playtime editor,
MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT.

THE COPPER-KETTLE FAIRY.

By Miriam Clark Potter.

There was once a fairy who lived in a Copper Kettle in a cook's kitchen. He led a very dangerous life, for every time the cook took down the Kettle to stew something in it he had to jump out quickly, in great danger of his head. The Kettle hung on a peg behind the stove; it was big and clean and shining, and being in it was like being in the inside of a golden drum.

The Fairy spent his time sliding down the sides of the Kettle, tapping on it very lightly when the cook was out of the room, and polishing it so that he might make faces for himself to laugh at. From living in the Kettle so long he had grown to be of a deep copper color, and the tip of his shiny nose shone like the dot of light on a yellow shoe-button.

One rainy day, the cook came into the kitchen in a great hurry, saying to herself: "Cream sauce! cream sauce for the cabbage! I forgot to make it, and they must have it at once, and they are waiting at the table." She snatched the Kettle from the peg so quickly that the Fairy, who had been taking a little nap, as he felt that he could do safely at that hour of the day, did not have time to jump out.

There he was, inside the Kettle, and the cook carried it swiftly over to the mixing-table and dropped a lump of butter and a great spoonful of flour right in upon him. It was like being caught in a snowstorm with a terrible yellow mud underfoot, and the poor Fairy did not have time even to sneeze or to cry out. Then came milk, pouring like a burst of white rain; and the cook stamped over to the stove to put the Kettle on.

"Oh! I shall be boiled alive!" thought the Fairy. But just then the woman, in her hurry and peevishness, slipped and fell upon the floor. The Kettle flew out of her hand, and the lump of butter, with the Fairy under it, slid under the table; and the milk spread in a little pond all round him.

Quickly the Fairy freed himself from the butter, and climbed up the table leg. So when the cook had picked up the lump, wiped the milk away, and started a fresh sauce, scolding to herself all the time, the Fairy was sitting on a nail on the under-side of the table.

"A narrow escape!" he thought. "I must look out for myself, and never sleep except at night, when there is no cooking. Now I shall keep a sharp lookout, and when she puts the Kettle back I will get into it again."

The sauce was prepared and served, the dishes were washed, and by the time the early afternoon sun came peeping into the kitchen the Fairy's house was hanging on its peg again. The cook left the room for the garden, to pluck some lettuce, and the wee sprite ran lightly across the floor to the Copper Kettle.

But oh, what a state it was in! The cook, for whom the whole day had gone wrong because she did not try to do her work well, had left burned milk and butter and flour sticking to the Kettle, all thick and messy. It looked bad and smelled bad, and the little Fairy began at once to work to make his house all clean again.

The cat, on the hearth rug, lifted her head; she thought she heard a mouse. Then she realized it was just the Copper-Kettle Fairy, and, though she did not like him very well, she let him alone.

But the Fairy worked so hard and scratched so mightily that the Kettle fell suddenly to the floor with a great bang, just as the cook came into the kitchen. "Why, how did that happen?" she said, and ran to pick it up, and again the Fairy had not time to jump out.

"I had better soak the thing," she told herself. "I left it in a hurry, because I did not feel like scrubbing it; the mistress may come into the kitchen and say that I do not do the dishes clean." She had been out in the garden, among the cool lettuce and tomato plants, all sweet and clean and fresh from the rain, and something dusty and disordered had been washed out of her mind while she was there.

She went to the sink and turned the spigot just above the Fairy's head, so that he was drenched with water and was floating round on top of it when she turned the spigot off. It was a mercy that she did not see him, but she was looking the other way and wondering how the Kettle could have fallen from its peg.

The clock and the cat were laughing at her, for they knew who had done it, but she did not see them.

The poor Fairy splashed round in the water till at last he reached the rim of the Kettle and pulled himself out, all dripping. "A great day!" he thought. "This is my second terrible adventure. What shall I do till the Kettle is dry and clean and hung up again?"

On the lettuce that the cook had just brought in was a cricket, hiding under a leaf till he could find a way of escape. He spoke to the Fairy now, and said: "Why don't you go and live in the garden? It is much pleasanter out there, even with the storms and the rain, for the people let us very much alone, and the nights, with the stars and the breezes, are sweet. There is plenty of good sunshine too, and you can make all the noise you want."

"I don't want to make any noise," replied the Copper-Kettle Fairy. "I just want a chance to polish my Kettle, slide down the sides and make faces into it."

"You're a silly thing!" laughed the cricket as it jumped out of the lettuce and slid through a crack in the floor.

"Perhaps," thought the fairy. He got down from the sink and went and hid behind the leaky teapot on the shelf, where he always stayed when the Kettle was in use.

Some time, the cat and the clock both think, the fairy will really be caught and taken to the table in a dish of cream sauce, but the people will see him swimming and spluttering round there, fish him out with a spoon, and cry aloud that a real fairy has been discovered at last. But the Copper Kettle knows better than they do, that that will never happen, for it has found out, just from daily living with such a creature, what a clever, lucky, bewitching thing a Fairy is.

Christian Orphanage

On Wednesday, August 12th, New Lebanon, Mt. Bethel, Kellam Grove, and also some of the members of Howard's Chapel Sunday School, all of Rockingham County, N. C., held their joint Sunday School picnic on the Orphanage grounds. They came more than two hundred strong and had a most enjoyable day. It was a congenial crowd, and the sweet spirit manifested was fine.

At 12:30 our picnic table, eighty feet long, was filled to the limit of its capacity with good things to eat, and the Orphanage family was invited to partake with them, which invitation was gladly accepted. From the way the table looked when the lunch was spread, it made us feel that they had had no drought in their section.

On Thursday, August 13th, our good friends from Pleasant Hill Church Sunday School, in Southern Alamance County, held their picnic on our grounds and had a pleasant day. The little children had a great time playing on the giant stride and the ocean wave. Some playing tap hand and other games.

At noon they spread a bountiful dinner and invited all our family to dine with them, and we all enjoyed another picnic dinner together. Our Pleasant Hill friends have been loyal for these many years, and I hardly think a month has gone by without a contribution to help us in this work.

We are glad to have Sunday Schools picnic here, and we are always glad to help make the occasion pleasant for the visitors. We have good shade, good water, plenty of shelter in case of rain, and lots of children to keep you company. Come and spend a pleasant and happy day and see your institution and the children you are helping to support.

THE INSCRIPTIONS ON THE CROSS.

The variation between these in the four gospels has given rise to charges which detract from the claim of the gospels to the accuracy involved in inspiration; while the defenses and explanations have been little less injurious in their effects.

1. Matt. 27:37, "This is Jesus, the King of the Jews."
2. Mark 15:26, "The King of the Jews."
3. Luke 23:38, "This is the King of the Jews."
4. John 19:19, "Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews."

It is universally assumed that there was only one inscription, and some interpreters account for the differences by a further supposition that the full and complete version was, "This is Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews," the four consisting of certain words which formed a part of the whole.

It has been suggested by one that these four are, respectively, in harmony with the special object and scope of the gospel in which it is found. This is ingenious, and would be worthy of Divine revelation if it could be substantiated.

Others suggest that, as the inscription was originally in Hebrew, Greek and Latin, they are the translations of these, respectively.

But this involves another assumption, viz.: that these three were not only the same, but were different so as to allow of such various renderings. It also accounts for only three out of the four; and does not explain how the Greek form could be a translation of the Greek!

In all these cases of difficulty it is well to "open the book" and see exactly what is said, and whether there is any ground for the original assumption that theer was only one inscription, which is the foundation of the difficulty and the cause of its explanations.

1. Let us begin with Mark 15:26: "The King of the Jews." Here we have not a word about a "title" (titlos, John 19:19) being on the cross at all, or which any one had seen. It is a question of "his accusation." It is the bill of his indictment, or the ground or cause of his condemnation, which was His claim to be "the King of the Jews."

2. John 19:19. This was written by Pilate, and put upon the cross before it left Pilate's presence. For no one suggests that Pilate went to the scene of the execution and wrote anything there. It was written in Hebrew, Greek, and Latin. The Latin was put last as Pilate's language.

This title was read after the cross was put up; and became a source of argument between the chief priests and Pilate (John 19:21-22) before the parting of the garments (vs. 23, 24).

What the final result of this argument was does not appear from John's gospel.

3. But it appears from Matt. 27:37 that it must have resulted in that one being taken down, another "set up over his head" after they had parted his garments among them" and after they had sat down to watch him there (vs. 35, 36).

4. Luke 23:38. This appears to have been a different one again. For we are not told all that took place. It is evident from John that the feelings of those concerned were deeply stirred.

The inscription mentioned by Luke was evidently much later, and was seen close upon the sixth hour (vs. 44), when the darkness fell. It was put upon "over him" (vs. 38, ep auto), and this order: "Greek, Latin and Hebrew," and after the revilings of the people (compare vs. 35-37 with vs. 38). Matthew's was before the revilings. (Compare Matt. 27:37 with vs. 39.)

If we accurately notice what is written, we conclude:

(a) That Mark's was only his indictment.
(b) That John's was the first written by Pilate and put on the cross before it left his presence.
(c) That Matthew's was substituted for it and placed "over his head" after the dividing of the garments and after the soldiers had sat down to watch; but before the revilings.
(d) That Luke was the last, put upon or "over him" after the revilings, and seen near the sixth hour.—From "How to Enjoy the Bible."

FOR HIS MOTHER'S SAKE.

The florist's boy had just swept some broken and withered flowers into the gutter when a ragged urchin darted across the street. He stooped over the pile of mangled flowers, and came upon a rose seemingly in better condition than the rest. But as he tenderly picked it up, the petals fluttered to the ground, leaving only the bare stalk in his hand.

He stood quite still, and his lips quivered perceptibly. The florist's boy who had been looking at him severely, felt that his face was softening. "What's the matter with you, anyway?" he asked.

The ragged little fellow choked as he answered. "It's for my mother. She's sick, and she can't eat nothing, and I thought if she'd a flower to smell it might make her feel better."

"Just you wait a minute," said the florist's boy as he disappeared. When he came out upon the sidewalk he held in his hand a beautiful half-opened rose, which he carefully wrapped in tissue paper; then he said, "Take that to your mother."

THE LOST PRINCESS.

By Alice Whitson Norton.

There was nothing Peter Parks liked better than playing pirate, and no boy ever had a better chance to enjoy his pet idea any more than Peter, for he had a sister named Betty whose pet hoppy was dolls. Betty had dolls from all over the world—one from France, one from Italy, one from Sweden, one from Norway, one from China, and any number of good, old American-made dolls—but the one she loved and prized above all the rest was one that her Uncle Tommy, a soldier in the World War, sent her from London. Immediately on receiving the doll, Betty had given her the name of Princess, in honor of the lovely daughter of the king and queen. Over all her other dolls, Betty gave the Princess first place, and Peter, seeing this, wondered if that was quite right; finally, being the good American he was, he decided it wasn't, and straightway he decided to play pirate and steal away the Princess.

To do this in a regular pirate way, Peter brought out the little wooden craft that come at his last birthday, and tied it out on the waves of the swiftly flowing stream that chanced to flow near the Parks' home.

Of course, he really intended to only scare his sister, for he tied a heavy cord to the wooden boat, by which he fully intended to pull it back to shore when his act was discovered; so far as he was concerned, everything was ready for the capture of the Princess, but Betty, for some unknown reason, seemed to have suddenly lost all desire to play near the water with her dolls. But one day a neighbor girl came over for a little visit with Betty, and in a very short time Peter saw the opportunity of capturing the Princess, for, much to his delight, Betty and her visitor, with all her choice dolls, were building a wonderful play-house very near the river. For hours the girls played contentedly, and Peter, at a safe distance, waited with what patience he could muster up for a chance to get the Princess. Finally the girls, returning to the house for some refreshments, gave him the much-desired opportunity, and in a very short space of time the Princess was afloat in the little wooden craft upon the water's breast.

Unwinding the string slowly, Peter watched the little craft move outward until the entire length of the string was reached, then he began to rewind the cord—but a stout little wind had risen, and rewinding the cord wasn't nearly as easy as it seemed. Then Betty, coming on the scene, saw what was taking place, and began to weep aloud. "Don't cry, Betty," comforted the boy, "I'll get her back; I was only playing pirate."

But Betty refused to be comforted; her beautiful doll was out on the water, and she wasn't at all sure that she would ever get back. Then suddenly a great puff of wind came along and almost pulled Peter into the stream, but he didn't let go the string—maybe that was the trouble—in holding on to it without giving any, the slender cord snapped, and away went the craft, carrying the Princess with her.

Betty began to sob aloud and wring her hands, and Peter began to prance up and down the bank like something crazy, wondering how he was going to rescue the Princess, but nothing he thought of seemed effective.

Then old Tige, a friendly Airedale dog, belonging jointly to the youngsters, came on the scene, and sensing something terrible had happened, began to look about for the trouble, and once discovering it, he plunged into the water and made for the craft. For a little while he made a desperate effort to tow in the craft, but finally he gave it up—the wind was too strong. The children watching from the shore, realized their pet was seriously considering something, and the next instant they saw him clutch the Princess in his mouth and strike for the shore.

Some minutes later he came struggling up the bank, thoroughly wet, as was the lovely doll, but neither Betty nor Peter made any complaint. The lost Princess had been restored and all was well; but all desire for playing pirate was gone from Peter's heart.—Junior Herald.

BLACKMON.

Died at his home, in Haw River, N. C., July 17, 1925, John Henry Blackmon, aged 78 years.

Bro. Blackmon was married twice. His first wife was Mrs. Sarah Thornton, and to them were born six children. His second wife was Mrs. Minnie Adams, who died in 1916. A daughter of Bro. Blackmon, Miss Julia Blackmon, was with him in his declining days and cared for him very tenderly.

He was a member of the Baptist Church and had been for some years. He was a very familiar figure in his home town, where he was greatly respected as a loyal friend, good citizen, and kind neighbor.

The funeral was from the home, conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. Mr. Starling. The interment was made in the cemetery at Graham, N. C.

May the Healer of broken hearts comfort those who mourn.

CLIFT.

Mr. Wellington Bradshaw Clift died at his home near Shenandoah, Va., August 5, 1925, at the age of 82 years, 11 months, and 24 days. His funeral was conducted at St. Peter's Union Church, near Shenandoah, August 7th, and the body was buried in the cemetery nearby. The writer of these lines conducted the services. R. P. CRUMPLER.

POLITE, THOUGH ARMLESS.

In New York State there dwells a young man who was born without arms. For this reason he is compelled to perform the duties of the missing members with his feet. However, he is said to do this very successfully. His socks are fitted like gloves, which gives him free use of his toes. He is considered to be exceptionally bright and is a skillful penman with his foot. At present he is traveling from town to town selling soaps, perfumes and other small toilet articles to get money to complete his education. He carries the articles in a sack with a strap around his neck. On the inside of his trousers leg he has a pocket in which he carries his money. When traveling, he wears low, loose-fitting slippers which he can slip off and on easily. He feeds and dresses himself with his feet, and when he meets a lady acquaintance on the street he doffs his hat as politely as you please.—Pathfinder.

Some people who do not read widely nor think closely imagine that Christianity is losing its grip on the world. What would those who hold such a view make out of the fact that the Bible is the best seller and that a new "Life of Christ," such as Papini's instantly comes to the top of the list of popular books?

Chinese Execute White Man.—

Korniloff, the notorious Russian bandit, was put to death by strangulation at Harbin, Manchuria, by order of the courts. Korniloff escaped from the court-room during his trial two years ago. He was recaptured and sentenced last November.

Dr. Cadman Goes Abroad.—

Rev. Dr. S. Parkes Cadman has sailed for Stockholm, Sweden, to attend the great conference of Protestant Churches. On August 28th he is to address the conference on "The Contribution of America to the Christian Religion." Before returning home, he will visit his boyhood home at Wellington, England, where as a youth he worked in the coal mines.

Dr. Soper Goes to Duke.—

Dr. Edmund D. Soper, professor of the history of religions, Northwestern University, has accepted the call to the vice-presidency of Duke University, Durham, N. C. Dr. Soper will act as dean of the school of religious training. Before going to Duke, Dr. Soper has had an eminent career in the North. He has been a member of the faculty of Ohio Wesleyan, Drew Theological Seminary, and Northwestern University. His books on comparative religion are recognized texts. Dr. Soper will be a most valuable addition both to the faculty of Duke University and to the South.

Missionaries Favor China.—

A letter signed by 170 missionaries supports Senator Borah's resolution opposing extraterritorial control in China. They feel that the powers should abandon their efforts to hold Chinese territory, and they strongly oppose military intervention in China. France and Japan are also favoring the abandonment of extraterritorial agitation for the present. The missionaries feel that China should be allowed to work out her destiny, and that military intervention would run counter to the spirit of Christ which they are endeavoring to carry into China.

Rockefeller Endows Seminary.—

John D. Rockefeller, Jr., has just given one million dollars to the endowment fund of the divinity school of Chicago University. This gift has nothing to do with the seventeen and a half million dollars which the university is attempting to raise this year. In announcing the gift, Dean Shailer Matthews said that the divinity schood had long wanted to do investigation work in the field of religious education, and this gift would enable them to do work in that field, and so fit young men for practical service in the Church. More fellowships are to be established, and many other progressive steps taken.

Jewish Educational Center.—

Excavation of the two blocks on Amsterdam Avenue, New York, between 186th and 188th Streets, has has been started. This work begins the construction of the five-million-dollar Jewish educational center. The first building to go up will be the high school, and it is to be followed in rapid succession by the college, a theological seminary, a library, athletic grounds and stadium. This will be the first Jewish college to be erected in this country.

A New Tubercular Vaccine.—

Professor Calmette, head of the Pasteur Institute, France, has announced the discovery of a new vaccine against tuberculosis. The new discovery is known as BGG and is named for the two principal workers on the vaccine—Professors Calmette and Guerin. Out of 170 babies vaccinated three years ago, none have died of tuberculosis, and at a recent examination ninety-four were found in perfect health. At the beginning of 1924, 137 babies were vaccinated. None of these have died, when 32 per cent should normally have succumbed to the disease. The vaccine is administered in the milk of the babies when they are from three to ten days old. The new discovery is purely preventive, and is of no use if the baby has already contracted the disease.

Postal Rates to Cause Deficit.—

Postmaster-General Harry New has predicted a post-office deficit of forty million dollars, and charges it jointly to the salary increases for postal employees and to the new postal rates. This prediction has added fuel to the already flaming postal controversy. It was expected that the salary increases would bring the deficit of ten millions up to the sum of thirty-one millions, but the increased rates were expected to take care of the twenty-one-million-dollar increase in salaries. It seems, on the contrary, that the increased rates have caused a nine-million-dollar increase in the deficit. At present, a joint committee is holding hearings in various parts of the country, and will recommend a permanent schedule in December. There seems to be considerable agitation in favor of a 1-cent rate for first-class letters instead of the present 2-cent rate, but according to some authorities this does not seem advisable.

Editors Discuss Crime News.—

At the recent convention of the American Society of Newspaper Editors, the question of the publication of crime news came up for discussion. Of late years, it has been coming up frequently in many places, and many people are beginning to feel that it should be suppressed. The New York Conference of the Methodist Church has agreed to recommend the publication of a chain of newspapers by the Church, "framed in words of soberness and truth." This resolution brings to mind many experiments in this direction, most of which have been failures. The Fayettville, N. C., paper tried a run without crime news, and on a vote by its readers, standing 60 to 1, restored it. Other papers have attempted similar experiments, always with approximately the same result. The Christian Science Monitor, which is the chief supporter of the effort toward elimination of crime news, publishes no crime news. Speaking in support of the publication of crime news, the editor of the New York Herald-Tribune emphasized the fact that to the primitive man the fact of a tiger's presence in the next thicket was news, and there was no news when there was no tiger there. The Monitor's editor responded that there would be no news even if the tiger was there, according to the present news standards, until he had seized a victim. Then, in lurid detail, the papers would photograph the beautiful teeth and claws of the beast, and describe his velvety coat, and his excellent cleverness in securing his victim, and induce other tigers to do the same, and make gentler beasts desire to be tigers. The Herald-Tribune editor pointed out that the Monitor would have said nothing of the kidnaping of Charlie Ross, the assassination of Abraham Lincoln, and the murder of Sarajevo which startled the world war.

All that the editor of the Herald-Tribune contended is true, but there is a vast difference in merely telling of a crime and in going into its nauseating details, as most of the newspapers pandering to popular tastes are doing. An effort will probably be made to suppress the play-up side of the crime news in various parts of the country. The Ohio Editors' Association has taken steps in this direction. There is some justification for publishing crime news when it is news, but not in playing it up. Our daily newspapers publish details of crime which, if carried in the Police Gazette and True Story Magazine, would be and are bitterly condemned. Just as we are taking a stand against magazine trash, just so we should take a stand against vermine-infested newspapers. This is a problem for the Church, and one which demands the backing of the educative forces of the country in order to eliminate, if possible, the taste for crime news. The newspapers, it is true, create a taste for lurid and nauseating details, but at the same time the taste of the populace compells them to give out such material or go out of business. One drink of liquor demands another, and one crime story demands another. Only the educative forces of the Church and the public school can eliminate crime news playing-up from the pages of our newspapers, and to that end we must bend our energies.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Rev. H. C. Caviness changes his address to Cary, N. C., where his correspondents will please address him.

Rev. C. C. Ryan is announced to preach at the First Christian Church of Richmond next Sunday morning.

Dr. W. T. Walters, who has accepted a secretaryship with Elon College, is moving his family this week to Burlington, N. C.

Mr. L. E. Carlton and wife, who have spent the summer months in Richmond, leave this week for their home in Kinston, N. C.

Last Sunday, at the morning service of the First Christian Church of Richmond, a most excellent sermon was preached by Rev. H. J. Fleming, a visiting minister.

Uncle Wellons has spent the summer in Greensboro, as chaplain of the Masonic and Eastern Star Home. He is well, but feeble. We are praying he may reach his 100th year, which will be January 1, 1926.

Work on the new building for our Christian Orphanage is shortly to begin. Let the people rally to Supt. Johnston in his effort to help the fatherless and motherless children of our Church. We have no finer work than our Orphanage.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Howell, Jacksonville, Fla., were pleasant visitors to their alma mater on Monday. They had helped to rebuild Elon, but had not seen it since the fire. Needless to say, they were delighted with what their eyes beheld.

Bethlehem College begins its third session on September 7, 1925. President Beougher looks for a fine enrollment. Bethlehem fills a long-felt need in our Far Southern territory. Our people there should support it with money and students.

The Elon Sunday School enjoyed a great picnic at Kimesville on Tuesday. The superintendent, Bro. C. M. Cannon, certainly deserves our community's praise and gratitude for his untiring efforts on behalf of the religious life of our town and community.

Elon is to open her thirty-sixth session September 2, 1925. The college authorities report an excellent prospect, for which we are glad. Our own people will miss a great opportunity to help our Church and themselves if they fail to patronize our college.

The Men's Federation of Burlington, a laymen's evangelistic organization that resulted from the Ham-Ramsay meetings, has resulted in nearly 2,000 conversions in a little over two months. We note that three of our laymen are very prominent in the work—Bros. D. R. Fonville, W. H. Carroll, and Chas. A. Walker.

The second session of the Bethlehem College Summer School of Christian Education was held from August 10th to 16th, and 121 ministers and Christian workers were enrolled. The Summer School, according to Miss Coghill, the executive secretary, did a high grade of class-room work, and the prospect for the future is splendid.

THE SUN is just informed that Rev. B. J. Earp, assisted by Rev. J. D. Wicker, has concluded a splendid meeting at Bethlehem, Warren County, with thirteen added to the Church. These brethren are also conducting at this time a meeting at Antioch, Warren. These are border Churches, and for that reason should have our earnest prayers and attention.

The union services held by the Grace Methodist, St. Mark's Episcopal, Westminster Presbyterian, and First Christian Churches have closed, and each Church will now have its own evening service. These services gave the opportunity to the members of the several Churches to visit and hear other ministers than their own. Tht attendance was, in general, good, and the spirit devout.

The brotherhood will be grieved to learn that Rev. A. F. Isley passed to his reward on Friday morning, August 21st, at his home in northern Alamance County. Bro. Isley was one of our consecrated and faithful ministers. He was in his seventy-ninth year, we understand. Obituary notice will appear later. His remains were laid to rest at Bethlehem Church, Alamance, on Saturday, the 22d, with Rev. J. F. Apple, his pastor, officiating.

MOUNT AUBURN.

Preaching was held at Mt. Auburn, Warren County, N. C., on August 9th, and seven united with the Church. One was immersed; the others sprinkled. The Church extended a call to Rev. W. C. Wicker, D. D., to serve as pastor for 1925 and 1926. D. A. LONG.

NOTICE.

The place of meeting of our annual North Carolina Conference, to be held of December 9th, was left to the executive committee. Any Church willing to entertain the Conference for two days—December 9th and 10th—will please extend an invitation as early as convenient. Your executive committee desires to announce the place of meeting, so that the Churches and ministers may make their arrangements accordingly.

W. C. WICKER,
President N. C. Christian Conference.

EARTH'S GREATEST ARMY.

You hear the rumblings of an organization that in days to come will be the most powerful in the world, and that is the organization of "radio listeners."

The first definite expression comes from Chicago, where every Monday night is "Silent Night."

Local broadcasting stations are silent, that all the Chicago radio sets may devote that night to listening for far-away broadcasting.

But other stations near Chicago refuse to observe the "Monday night silence," and, much annoyed, the radio owners threaten a general strike.

There are 5,000,000 radio sets in the United States today, costing $500,000,000, and those 5,000,000 sets undoubtedly have more than 25,000,000 of listeners. There you have the possibilities of such an organization as the world has never seen.

For the first time in the world's history, outside of the printed word, it becomes possible for one man to be heard by all the people at the same time.

An ancient Greek said that a nation could not remain free when it became so big that its citizens could not all meet in the public square, hear the speakers and protect their interest.

Today 115,000,000 of people can hear the President of the United States speak at the same time, and in a few years it will be possible for one man to be heard by every human being on earth.

The difficulty will be to find anybody worthy of such an audience. The first step will be a universal language, and it will not be any fancy, made-to-order language.

One of the existing languages will crowd out the others, and English, made up of many languages—Latin, Greek, Sanscrit, Arabic, Saxon, and many others—has the best chance just now.

WORLD CONFERENCE ON EDUCATION.

It is difficult to exaggerate the importance of education in the molding of national character. It is a well-known fact that Scotland owes much of the pre-eminence which she has long held in the councils of the nations as well as in many of the fields of learning and research to her national schools founded by John Knox and perfected by his successors. It was quite fitting, therefore, that the recent World Conference on Education should be held in the Scottish capital. It is not possible to measure the world-wide effect of the meeting of representatives of all nations, all imbued with the idea of the value of education as a formative influence in human life. The president of the conference lifted the whole subject to the highest plane when he made universal harmony the keynote of the conference's aim. Nations, he said, must learn the lesson, which at present they do not know, that the nations of the earth must live together in harmony. The great purpose of the conference is to build up the highest type of civilization, through education, and to develop a patriotism upon love of service and love of country rather than upon hatred of other peoples. The nations of the future will be largely as they have been molded in the schools of the present; and those who are more directly responsible for the shaping of the mind and character of the rising generation cannot distill their aspirations in a common crucible without taking with them into the schools of all nations fresh methods and fresh ideals, which must have a potent influence in bringing nearer "the parliament of man the federation of the world."

ON GROWING OLD.

Don't grow old and dull in spirit. The best recipe for keeping young is to keep your interest as keen and alert at fifty, sixty, seventy and to the end of your life as it is possible to keep it. Do not let life grow monotonous and narrow—there are world-wide interests for us all. Do not let your range of emotions grow less and less until you can neither be interested in nor sympathetic nor sensitive to the joys and sorrows of others. Keenness, zeal, enthusiasm, these are the yeast of life. I came across a splendid example of this lively interest in things only the other day. Volunteers were sought for a stage crowd in a fifteenth century pageant play, and among those who offered themselves was a charming old cottage widow of seventy. 'Oh!" she said, "I shall just delight in it, and in being dressed in the beautiful fashion of four hundred years ago. Fancy me in a wimple!"—Selected.

It is better to be interested in real life, rather than to waste your tears over the imaginary woes of imaginary people. Truth is much stranger than fiction, and we work to some purpose when we seek to alleviate the measureless woes of the children of men who are suffering around us.

E. J. Eckert, radio amateur of Philadelphia, picked up a message from Dr. Alexander Hamilton Rice, explorer, sent from the upper waters of the Amazon River for transmission to his wife in Paris, France.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

By Rev. Wilson F. Minton, Secretary.

Miss Martha Stacy has been giving a course of lectures at the Elon Summer School as her final deputation work, before returning to Japan for her second term of service there. She has spent the winter in study at Defiance, where she has not only gotten a great deal by way of information and inspiration, but where she has been able to render most valuable service among the students along missionary lines. She has also done a fine piece of deputation work in many and various sections of our Church, and as she returns to Japan it will be with an even more solid support than ever before from many of our people who have learned to know her during these days.

We are happy to be able to announce that Miss Stacy sails the first day of September from San Francisco. This will be good news to all our people, who will remember the anxiety we all felt when she came home so completely broken in health after her first term of such strenuous and unusual experiences even for a mission field. If you want to reach Miss Stacy with a farewell message, send it not later than August 23d to Miss Martha R. Stacy, care Toyo Kisen Kaisha S. S., Taiyo Maru, Sailing September 1st, San Francisco, Calif.

Miss Stacy and Miss Angie Crew will spend the coming year in Sendai, where they will cooperate with our Japanese workers in that large field during the absence of the McKnights, who have just come home for their first furlough. We are very sure that our people will remember all these workers very earnestly in prayer as they meet these necessary changes in work for the kingdom's sake.

In passing, let us remind you that Miss Stacy's salary is paid entirely by the Burlington, N. C., Sunday School, and has been ever since she went to the field. If just one Sunday School can, and does, so faithfully and so systematically take care of this splendid share of our overseas work, it ought to prompt many others to accept a proportionate responsibility and privilege.

WHAT SHALL WE DO WITH OUR MONEY?

A friend of ours went around the world in 1914 and landed in Tokyo the day a high official had his will published in the morning paper. The first sentence was, "That I give, I have; that I spent, I had; that I leave, I lose."

No finer responsibility comes to any man whom God intrusts with wealth than the decision as a Christian steward of what he will do with it.

The other day we were at Princess Anne, Md. We stood beside a beautiful brick Church erected by the colored people more than forty years ago, and from its front looked over half a mile away at the beautiful grounds and stately buildings of the Delaware Conference Seminary for the many colored people of the peninsula of Delaware, Maryland and Virginia. We recalled when the old jail property was to be sold at public auction and the Olney Farm on the same day. My father was then a presiding elder, living in Princess Anne, and he attended this auction to bid in these two properties. I remember the sacrifices that our family made—the things we went without that these two properties could be paid for. The old jail was given to the colored people for a Church site and the bricks were taken down and saved for the new building. There it has stood for forty years, lifting a whole generation into Christian righteousness. The Olney Farm has become one of the most successful seminaries for the training of leaders of the negro race to be found in the world. My father spent his life doing this kind of thing, and when he died twenty years ago his boys chipped in enough to bury him. They had been left rich in the heritage of a Christian example, in the memory of a devoted and generous father. But there was no estate. The only thing he ever saved is what he gave away.

The investment made for the kingdom at the personal sacrifice it cost all along are standing yet, and will stand until the judgment day.

Why will men hoard wealth, when to give it is to invest it for eternity?—Wesleyan Methodist.

A CUP OF TEA.

Aunt Sarah Morgan was noted the countryside around for her hospitality. Whenever you went there, whether it was in the early morning hours, or in the afternoon or evening, she would always say, "sit still a while now, and I'll make you a cup of tea." Everybody said Aunt Sarah made the best tea in the country. It was always hot, always fragrant, and never too strong. "It's all in the way you go about it," she explained; "there's nothing like an old brown, crockery teapot to make tea in. Of course, I always scald it first, and then put in a level teaspoonful of tea for every cup, and then pour boiling water on. Remember, it must be freshly boiled, and all bubbly before it is used. After the tea has steeped for from five to eight minutes, then I pour it off into this old rose-sprigged teapot that has been warmed, and that Great-Aunt Hepsibah brought from England years ago. Really, there's no secret about making it, but there are a few rules that must be learned and followed if you want to serve a real cup of tea.

SEWING AND SOWING.

By Verna G. McCully.

The farmer is sowing, and so do I sew,
But it isn't the same thing at all—
The farmer plants seeds while I lengthen a dress
For my doll, who has grown very tall.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

MEN AND MILLIONS MOVEMENT.

Many are tired of hearing about Men and Millions, and some wish they had never heard or seen such a movement. After all, we must admit, however, that there has been one unquestioned benefit accruing from it. It has at least taught us to think in clearer, larger terms for the Christian Church and her task in the world. The movement has not yet accomplished all that many had hoped for it, but it has brought the whole Church face to face with the fact that if we are to "carry on" as a Church in the future as in the past, we must make larger plans, bigger and better programs, and undertake together larger tasks than we did prior to the initiative of the movement.

And while the movement did not appeal to the entire membership of the Church, the necessity is now upon us of adopting a program, of undertaking a task in kingdom service, that will appeal to each and every member in the Church. Let us who subscribed to the movement be faithful in finishing our pledges, knowing therein that we are blazing the way for bigger, better things in the kingdom as served by our Church. J. O. A.

PEACE.

Jesus was very much interested in peace. In fact, His chief mission was to establish peace on the earth—peace in each heart and throughout the whole world.

His was a different peace from that which the world, with all its wealth, wit and wisdom, could give. It was His peace, peace in Him, peace through and by Him, a peculiar peace which He could and would suffuse upon those who came into His fellowship and saving grace. It was and is a peace that would calm the troubled heart, give comfort to the disturbed mind, comfort, strength, love to the purturbed soul and body. When His disciples were told that He was soon to leave them, be with them no more in the flesh, they were very much troubled and in a disconsolate frame of mind. He comforted them with these words, "Peace I leave with you: my peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth, give I unto you."

This was enough. Whatever might befall Him or them, whatever troubles, tragedies or trials might come, here was a peace wholly adequate and sufficient.

And so in life now. In this purturbed and doubtful time, in this era of doubt, danger and dread, we have the assurance that in Him we have ample and adequate peace. J. O. A.

BUTLER AND PROHIBITION.

President Nicholas Murray Butler, of Columbia University, New York, is in England, according to the newspapers, and is having somewhat to say about prohibition in the United States. It is strange that this distinguished educator displays such gross ignorance of conditions in his own country, or wilfully and deliberately falsifies the facts!

One paragraph from his utterance in England is typical of the rest: "It has become plain to every one that nation-wide prohibition simply cannot be enforced, for the simple reason that it affronts the judgment as well as the moral and political principles of the vast numbers of the population, including a large proportion of the most intelligent and most upright."

One wonders how a man of President Butler's supposedly wide acquaintance with conditions and principles and peoples and facts in the United States could go so wide of the mark in stating his case. For instance, "It has become plain to every one that nation-wide prohibition simply cannot be enforced." So far as we know, this fact is plain only to President Butler and a few others who live in rum-soaked centers like New York City. So Butler pronounces prohibition "a dead letter, a colossal failure." Our laws against murder are violated every day. Shall we, on this account, pronounce these laws "colossal failures" and proceed to abolish them?

And since when has prohibition been an affront to the moral principles of the vast number of our population? It has been stated—we presume authentically—that no amendment to our Constitution has ever been adopted with such unanimity and overwhelming majorities as the prohibition amendment. Moreover, prohibition had already been adopted, covering seven-eighths of all the territory and more than three-fifths of all the population, even before the proposed amendment was proposed. If ever the great majority of the people of the United States registered their will and judgment on any matter, it certainly was registered in the case of prohibition.

President Nicholas Murray Butler is not the man to speak authoritatively on the workings and the worth of prohibition. The proper man to consult is the working-man, the wage-earner, who used to spend the week's wages at the saloon, and now carries that wage to his family or the bank. J. O. A.

HAS THE CHURCH A PROGRAM?

What is the program of the Church today? Does it satisfy the Church to have preaching once, twice or eight times a month? and to have Sunday School every Sunday morning and Christian Endeavor every Sunday afternoon or evening? Does it satisfy the Church to "hear" preaching on Sunday and do nothing else about it all week? to teach the children, or have them recite, the lesson half-hour in the Sunday School every Sunday morning, and then have no more to do with them all the week?

Without taking time to make the actual count, one is safe in saying that at least three-fifths, if not four-fifths, of the Churches of the Southern Convention have preaching once per month, and for the most part a Sunday School Sunday morning for an hour, and if these Churches have any other program or objective than this, it is not apparent. One out of five may be having preaching twice per month, and one out of five twice each Sunday of the month.

Then, for the most part, these Churches seem to have two objectives. First, a revival once per year to recruit the membership; second, meet Conference apportionments. In a small percentage of the Churches there are the ladies' aid and the woman's and young people's missionary societies. In some four or five of our larger city Churches that have been recently added, a director of religious education with a program during the week for the young people.

If this is a fair inventory of the program and activities of our Church at present, one would like, in all candor and kindness, to inquire if this is an adequate program for the Church! We are living in very perilous times. Ours is an age of activity. There was a time when churchmen debated and emphasized creeds. That time produced the philosopher, the debater, the theologian, and, incidentally, sects, denominations and divisions. Ours is the day of deeds. This time produces men who do things. The whole world, including the pulpit and the pew, sings the praise of men who produce. One hears the name of Ford, Rockefeller, or Edison ten times where one hears the name of Luther, Calvin or Edwards one time. It is the man of action, results, products who is the hero of our time.

In such a time, one wonders if God is pleased with a Church whose only program is to have preaching and teaching an hour or half-hour one day in the week! Will the thoughts and theories, however good and wholesome, that one gets that half-hour or hour on Sunday suffice to guide one's life aright in the absorbing pursuits and activities of the whole week that is to follow? Every business enterprise or institution that succeeds in these days has a program—a well-rounded, six-day-in-the-week, all-the-year-round program.

Does not the moral and spiritual need of our time demand that the Church also have a program that covers more than a brief period of one day of the week?

From the day the Church was founded till this good hour, God has spoken to the people through the Church in the terms and thought and needs of the people of the age in which they lived and wrought. One cannot doubt but that the Father's heart yearns today to speak through His Church a message of interest and of saving activity to meet the moral and spiritual needs and demands of our time. He will be a wise man, and a benefactor indeed, who gives to our time "the whole program for the whole Church." J. O. A.

Organized Christianity faces in this hour an unusually difficult situation. It has responsibilities under God for saving the world, and just now the world is in very great need of its beneficent and healing ministries. Opportunities for service were never so many nor so insistent. The call to the Church is world-wide. For the first time in Christian history the organized Church finds itself with sufficient resources in men and money to fulfill the command of Christ to go into all the world and Christianize all nations. For the first time in history, the doors to these nations are open. Yet, with adequate resources, the Church of God stands by wide-open doors and hesitates. God calls and the world calls. What will our answer be today, or— what will it be at the judgment?—Missionary Voice.

III. THE THREEFOLD WORK OF THE HOLY SPIRIT.

THE HOLY SPIRIT, THE CONQUERING POWER OF THE CHURCH."

When Peter responded to the question of Jesus "But whom say ye that I am?" and said, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," he laid the foundation for that remarkable statement of Christ concerning the durability of His Church. "Upon this rock I will build my Church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

The foundation for the Church of Jesus Christ is the truth that He is the Son of God. When Jesus said He would build His Church, and against it the gates of hell should not prevail, it was a challenge to Satan, the avowed enemy of the Church, and he accepted the challenge and has made war on the Church ever since. He has marshaled his forces and filled them with a bitter hatred against the Church and all for which it stands.

While Satan has thus incited his hosts with this bitter hatred for all that is good, Jesus, by His teachings and by His example, has inspired His followers with a spirit of love and service, and a desire for all that is good and uplifting.

The life of Christ and His teachings bore testimony to the fact that the whole moral fabric of society was out of harmony with humanity's highest good.

Jesus taught that the seat of all trouble in the world was to be found in the heart of man, and that God, the Father, looked upon the heart and held it responsible. He taught that man had an enemy, the devil, who made it his business to incite the heart with hatred, jealousy, envy and ill will. He taught that the human heart, though susceptible to evil influences, was also susceptible to good influences. He also taught that there must be a change in the heart and life before the kingdom of heaven could become a reality to the individual or to society. His teachings found a responsive chord in a few hearts, and with these he began to establish His spiritual kingdom here on earth, a kingdom which was to have love as its motive power. Jesus was pleased to call the association of these kindred hearts His Church, and this Church was to be His representative on earth when He should return to His Father.

His disciples witnessed the constant opposition to their Lord and to His teachings. He admonished them not to lose faith, though He was to meet His death at the hands of His enemies. Their hearts were filled with sorrow which could be allayed only by the promise of the Holy Spirit, which was to be to them a comfort in His absence.

These few disciples, the nucleus of His Church, finally witnessed His death upon the cross. And, not understanding the teachings He had given them concerning His death and resurrection, they had three days of deep lonesome darkness. But on the third day tidings reached them that their Lord had risen from the dead. This gave them the first clue to the meaning of the promise, that the gates of hell should not prevail against His Church. He was with them forty days, demonstrating the power of His resurrected body and teaching them things pertaining to the kingdom.

Before He left them, He gave the great commission which revealed to them more fully than anything that He had hitherto spoken, that His gospel was to be given to all the world, and He gave them the assurance that He would be with them alway, "even unto the end of the world."

The last day He was with them in bodily form He led them out as far as Bethany, and paused on the way for His final conversation with them. He said, "Behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you; but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high."

He knew that Satan had accepted the challenge that "the gates of hell should not prevail against" His Church. And He knew that they, as the nucleus of the Church He was establishing, would need more than mortal power and wisdom to carry on the work He had commissioned them to do. Hence, He had provided for their need in every emergency that would confront them. And all He asked as a condition of receiving His aid was obedience to His directions.

They had now come to the end of a most interesting walk. He had finished His farewell message, and lifting His hands He gave them His parting blessing. In this act of blessing, gravitation lost all power over Him, and He was parted from them and "carried up into heaven." "And they worshiped Him, and returned to Jerusalem with great joy, and were continually in the temple praising and blessing God." Luke, in making mention of this incident in the first chapter of Acts, says that Jesus told the disciples that they should receive power after that the Holy Spirit had come upon them, and this was to be their conquering power.

We are all familiar with the victories the early Church gained by depending upon the conquering power of the Holy Spirit. We are also painfully conscious of the defeats the Church has suffered since by failing to follow its leader and by neglecting to depend upon the conquering power of the Holy Spirit. That conquering power has never failed the Church from the day of Pentecost until the present day, when it was relied upon. That conquering power is available for the Church today the same as it was for the early Church. Pentecost, and the days immediately following were wonderful days, but no more wonderful than God would have His Church experience continually. The joy and the power of Pentecost were but the meaning and fulfillment of the promise of Jesus, just before He left the disciples that morning on Mount Olivet, "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Spirit is come upon you." Every minister, every Christian who has read the story of those Pentecostal days has longed to be a personal witness to such days of power, and thank God, in a measure, some ministers and some Churches have witnessed the manifestation of that same conquering power.

If that conquering power is still available for the Church, what has taken place or what stands in the way of the Church having the full measure of power that is for it today? The Church has had the power in the past, and still has access to the conquering power, just in proportion to its fidelity to the word of God and to the leadership of the Holy Spirit—the Spirit of Christ.

I think all observing people recognize the fact that the Church is robbed of its power in a very great measure by its divisions into denominational distinctions. I am not going to discuss the question of denominational divisions, but simply say that I believe denominationalism is sin, and the devil is the most interested person in creating and fostering divisions among the prrofessed followers of Jesus Christ. Many of the greatest leaders in all the denominations are feeling condemned because of the sin of denominationalism, but still they do not feel free to speak forth their convictions. Dividing God's people into opposing sects is Satan's way of defeating Christ's purpose for the Church. Moreover, He has become very busy of late in dividing all Protestantism into two great divisions—fundamentalists and modernists—in another Satanic attempt to prevail against the Church. Many of the best men and women of the Church are lined up against each other in these two divisions, and the tragedy of the situation is that many on each side feel that the Church is doomed to defeat unless their position wins out. What is needed? A renewed tarrying until we are endued with the conquering power of the Holy Spirit. We may all have to give up some of our cherished notions or opinions in order to receive this power. We may find it necessary to make some change in our Church machinery or organization. We will very likely have to confess our sin of trying to run the Church on 90 per cent human wisdom and 10 per cent divine wisdom. We will have to free our minds of prejudice and exercise a spirit of tolerance before we can hope to experience the power of the Holy Spirit. When a book with a title "Fifty Ways to Make the Church Go" has a ready sale, we may conclude that in the minds of some the life of the Church is just an experiment depending upon many methods instead of a divinely created institution depending upon one power—the conquering power of the Holy Spirit. There are not fifty ways to make a Church go successfully. There is but one way, one source of conquering power, and that is obedience to the leading of the Holy Spirit. The local Church that has the largest percentage of Spirit-controlled members will, other things being equal, be the Church that will carry forward the work of the kingdom most successfully and most pleasing to our Master.

I have incidentally referred to Church machinery, or organization. I hope no reader of these lines will misunderstand that reference and conclude that I am opposed to organization, for I am not. I am in favor of all the organization that can be put under the direction of the Holy Spirit. The Church that is well organized with the dominant purpose of extending the kingdom of our Lord more rapidly by serving its community more efficiently and by giving the gospel to those who have it not, will have the sanction of Christ, the only Head of the Church, so long as it follows His plan for the financing of His kingdom. Any deviation from His financial plan will weaken the power and influence of the Church.

What is true of the local Church is true of the Church in general. If the Holy Spirit is to be the conquering power of the Church, it must of necessity be the conquering power of the membership of the Church. And one of the important convictions that the Holy Spirit has to impress upon the individual Christian's heart is that he must assume a scriptural attitude toward his time and his possessions. The Holy Spirit depends largely upon the leadership of the Church for instruction on the relation of the individual Christian to his time and money. If every Christian in every local Church recognized and accepted the responsibility of stewardship, the conquering power of the Spirit would again be experienced as truly as it was experienced by those early Christians at Pentecost.

God is no respecter of persons nor of times. Heaven is just as full of power today as it ever was. And the Church of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ can again experience a Pentecost, can again have the conquering power of the Holy Spirit, if the people who call Christ Lord will answer His prayer for a united Church and will practice His will in stewardship.

D. M. HELFENSTEIN.

We believe the greatest need of the Church today is sacrificial consecration and greater growth in knowledge and grace. We do not need another gospel, nor a new gospel, but the better application of the teachings of Jesus Christ in all the motives, aims and works of life. That is genuine Christian progress. Out of it will come the solution of all vexatious questions that seem to balk the Church on the way to the goals set by the Lord Jesus Christ.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

This is an age of ready-mades. Ready-made, ready-to-wear, ready-to-eat, ready-to-drink, ready-to-use, ready-to-think! Machinery has done the work. Electricity furnishes the power. Labor is reduced to a minimum. Time is shortened and life is easy, compared with other centuries and other years. Graveyards are beauty spots now, and caskets are luxurious compared with the old-time coffin. The horse has retired from the road, and gas carries us over good roads to distant places among the mountains or by the sea. "God moves in a mysterious way His wonders to perform," and man moves after Him as man "thinks God's thoughts after Him." "The heavens declare the glory of God," and the world "declares the glory of man." The difference is, that God created all in six days, and man has been working at his for six thousand years, and he is still busy and improving all the time.

It may take centuries more for man to complete his world. But it is getting easier all the time to live and travel. "Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be made low: and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough places plain; and the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together; for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." This, to be sure, is spoken of moral conditions under the Christian dispensation; but moral and spiritual conditions always determine physical and social conditions. Where Christ is known and obeyed, all conditions are improved.

Every invention for convenience increases work, but the work is easier. The sewing machine has not reduced needlework; it has increased it, but it has made it easier and more abundant. The vacuum cleaner simply means more rooms, more cleanliness, more going over the floors. As the world gets richer, it gets busier. The world gets smaller as it gets richer and more people. All this means that the more people, the more each one has; and that means that the world is becoming more democratic. As the roads are leveled, the people are leveled. We have ready-made education, and the big men are growing less and the little men are growing larger. Big and little go by comparison or contest. As the multitudes increase in intelligence, in wealth, in position, the distance between them and the few grows less. The brotherhood of man is working itself out through travel, education, wealth, and social conditions. Thinking is less, hard work is less, distance is less, but results are larger. The sea grows less as steamers, cables, and wireless intercourse between nations increases. "God hath made of one blood all nations of men, for to dwell on all the face of the earth; and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation." And this is manifest in the progress of the human race. The race has made its greatest progress under the inspiration of the Man of Galilee. Christianity has transformed the world by transforming the human race.

All progress begins with God, operates through man, and shows itself in the world itself. Religion is no vague imagination, no impractical theory, but a real discovery, a real invention, and activity, a real salvation to those who believe and follow Christ. Christianity is the only religion that has a hymn book, and that has come out of the psalms and the harp and gone into the nursery, the business, the Church, the music hall, and filled the world with praise. It would be a dull world without music. Choirs have not had proper appreciation. If all the members of the Church would give as much time, and work as hard for the worship of God, it would convert the city. Criticism of choir music comes from ignorance of music and lack of prayerful attention to the songs the choir sings. The choir is the most faithful small group in the membership of the Church.

ELON LETTER.

Before another issue of THE SUN reaches our people, Elon will have entered upon her thirty-sixth year of service to the Church. It so happens that the opening day is the same as that of the first session—September 2d. Then the students came to an unfinished plant. Today they come to one of the finest college plants in existence.

But fine as our new plant is, I am not thinking especially of it. I am thinking rather of the boys and girls—the very flower of the youth of the Christian Church—who will be arriving at Elon on September 1st. Many of them will be returning for further study to a place they love. Many will be coming for the first time to college. It will be their first experience from home for any length of time. They will be on their own responsibility and must choose in many directions for themselves. They will cease to be youth and will become men and women.

It will be a splendid thing for the pastor to write every one of these young people a letter, telling them how glad he is they are in our college, that he misses them, and that he feels sure they will be faithful to the work of the Church and kingdom while they are in college. Pastors, don't stop at one letter, but keep up a correspondence with these young people throughout their college course. If they fail to reply, keep right on writing. It will be a good investment of time and money. These young people are destined to be leaders in our Church. Attention paid to them and encouragement given them in their college days will yield a splendid harvest in the future years; if not for you, brother pastor, then for some one else and for the kingdom, which is more to the point.

A young man graduated from Elon a few years ago. He had never had a word from his pastor during his four years, but he had regularly attended Church when he was at home. He needed a word with view to a good position, as to his character, and wrote his pastor for a statement on his behalf. The minister declined on the ground that he had been only a chance attendant at his Church for the past four years. Those who knew him more intimately should testify, he thought.

The young man loved his Church and remained true to it. He is one of her leaders today, but his disappointment was keen and cutting when he needed help from his Church and failed to get it. He deserved the help, too, as his record here had demonstrated and his life achievement has since abundantly proved.

I trust that our pastors will take my suggestion seriously and be willing to give encouraging attention to their young people who will enter Elon on September 2d, whether as former students or as freshmen.

VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL.

People's Christian Church, Dover, Del., held its first daily vacation Bible school during the month of July last. The sessions ended on Friday, July 31st, after full four weeks' session under the direction of Miss Martha L. Denison as supervisor, and a corps of efficient instructors, including Misses Ruth Daily and Cornelia Harper Taylor, pianists; supervisors of departmental work—Mrs. Joseph Hoskins and Cornelia H. Taylor, kindergarten; Mrs. E. E. Benson, Mrs. Anna VanSant and Miss Ruth Daily, primary; Mrs. H. C. Taylor and Mrs. John B. Hutton, intermediate department. Recess hour was in charge of Miss Elizabeth Tomlinson, while Clive Newton assisted with the manual training, and Miss Ruth Hall in sewing.

Children from practically every denomination in Dover, of which there are Christian, Methodist Episcopal, Methodist Protestant, Presbyterian, Baptist Episcopal, Roman Catholic—attended the school. The enrollment averaged 63.

The citizens of Dover of the various Churches expressed their great appreciation of the work started by People's Christian Church, and hope that another year will find it on even a larger scale, with all denominations co-operating.

The program of the daily school included Bible study and stories, expression work, memory work, Bible drills, flag salutes, instruction in worship service and Church hymns, and work and play hour—all supervised by the instructors.

During the session, many little gifts were made and brought to be sent to the children in Japan for their Christmas, as the smaller children studied about Japan. A Christmas tree, known as a "summer Christmas tree," was brought to the Church, and the gifts made by the children were placed thereon, later to be taken off and sent to the Japanese children.

At the evening service at People's Church on August 2d, the entire program was given over to the children attending the Bible school, which was as follows:

Processional, "Lead On, O King Eternal"; call to worship by the three departments; prayer, by Beatrice McColley, of the junior class, closing with the Lord's Prayer; response, "Father, Hear Thy Children's Call"; announcements, Miss Denison; offering; recitation of 23d Psalm, by the beginners' class; song, "For the Beauty of the Earth," by the primary class; recitation of the 24th Psalm, by the primary class; story, "Jesus, the Friend of Little Children," using painting by Plockhurst, "Jesus Blessing Little Children," by Nancy Adams, of the primary class; salute to the Christian flag; crusaders' hymn, "Fairest Lord Jesus"; story, "Abraham and Lot," written by Frances Daly, of the junior class; recitation of the 19th Psalm, by the junior class; missionary story, "Malee and Her Brother, Tiny Pig," by Dorothy Helfenstein, of the junior class; salute to the American flag; "America"; talk by Miss Denison; benediction, "Saviour, Again to Thy Dear Name We Raise"; recessional.

John Satterfield and Wilbur Burton acted as flagbearers. Franklin Wise, Ralph Boyer, Calvin Smedley and Layton Bishop were ushers. At the close of the service, some of the articles made by the children were exhibited in the beginners' room.

The opening worship of the Church school was held in the auditorium of the Church and was conducted by the children's division, Ralph Boyer presiding. Songs were sung by the various groups, prayer was given by Dorothy Helfenstein, and a recitation was given by Sarah Garrison.

Be sure to reserve the date and attend your Conference this year.

WADLEY LETTER.

In the mail this morning came the bulletin of Elon College. I have read it through. There are things of interest from lid to lid. The first, I suppose, is that it is "our college," and, as I think of what "our" means, there is an unlimited field; all down through these years the sacrifices and sacrificial service it has had; and the scope of its influence. I am reminded of how one's service in word, action and money echoes and re-echoes down through the ages to bless mankind. It is the sluggard who would say, "I don't care," for it is the all of life that should be directed into channels for a better world. I feel that the ideal of Elon is to direct the youthful lives in this way. In this school, God is honored as the great source of all life. There are efforts put forth to stress the spiritual life and to enlist every student in this way.

As the opening day draws so near, and the parents with the youth are looking out upon life, I am wondering what choice will be made as to the kind of schools they are to patronize. Let us hope that the Church school will be given preference.

Then, too, I am thinking of "our Bethlehem." It is the outgrowth of Elon. It is in a section which needs a school of its kind. Quite a number of our people are sending their children to college. The important thing is not what the child may be when he is through school, but it is necessary to consider under what influence this preparation is to be had. One can be ever so great in mind and hand, and the soul be neglected, and a great failure is already made. From Elon has come influences that have stimulated our work in this section, and from both schools, with Bethlehem in our midst, we may expect even greater things.

The child needs the tenderest guardianship to train its instincts in the proper channel. The adolescent needs personal supervision, with examples to inspire preparation for actual service. In this, I feel that the Church school has much the advantage. It is supposed that all activities shall be directed with the one great ideal in mind. As one goes out from school, he loves to look back upon those things which influenced his life. I, individually, would not stress fraternalism, but the spiritual and literary, for I am convinced that fraternalism should be discouraged.

Then, it is easy for one to attend to that which he terms as his own. Therefore, I am sure the colleges are to have our very best, because they are "our own." E. M. CARTER.

LINVILLE D. V. B. SCHOOLS.

During the last week in July and the first week in August of this year, Linville and Antioch Christian Churches, respectively (of the Virginia Valley Conference), had their first experiments with daily vacation Bible schools. Under the leadership of Miss Lillian Horne, of Burlington, N. C., with the assistance of a few sacrificing members of each Church and the pastor, the schools which were held, first, at Linville, and then at Antioch, were pronounced by all a marked success. The one at Linville was more largely attended than the one at Antioch, for the reasons that there are many more children in the community, and they live much nearer to the Church. Fifty-six or more pupils attended the school at Linville. All denominations represented in the communities and parents who belong to no Church patronized these schools. It seems to be the opinion of all that the pupils of each of these daily vacation Bible schools learned more Scripture in one week's time than they learn in one year's time in the Sunday School. This opinion was voiced on the Conference floor during the recent session of the Valley Conference by Bro. W. C. Wampler, of the Antioch Church. The leaders and the people of both Sunday Schools and communities are very enthusiastic over the work and results of these first attempts at anything of the sort, and are determined to have, if possible, a two weeks' daily vacation Bible school in each Church next year. This was Miss Horne's first experience in conducting such schools as director, and we highly appreciate the great work that she accomplished. The pastor and the people also greatly appreciate the able assistance of the local helpers who made it possible for Miss Horne to accomplish the success attending her efforts. W. P. CRUMPLER,

Linville, Va. Pastor.

THE SIN OF IRREVERENCE.

Among the unfavorable moral symptoms of the day in which we live is that of irreverence. It is seen in a careless and flippant use of the Scriptures, in an idle as well as a profane use of the names of deity and in a lack of respect for the house and service of God. The tendency is a very dangerous one. Customs and fashions may change without any grave moral losses, but there cannot be a loss of reverence that does not vitally affect the character of our people. We are interested to inquire of the reasons for the lack of reverence so widely prevalent. We think several may be found.

Much of it can be traced to home training. There is little ground for hope that children coming out of homes where God is not honored shall have great reverence for Him or deep respect for His house. It is a priceless heritage to have been brought up in an environment where God is loved and worshiped, where the Church is revered and where ministers of the gospel are spoken of with respect. Parents can do no greater hurt than to speak disparagingly of the Church of God, and discountingly of the ministry. A promiscuous criticism may so break the confidence of children in religion and religious leaders that barriers are lifted up between them and an experience of grace which it will be difficult to overcome.

Another reason for the irreverence of the day may be found in the much-overemphasized need for amusements. A great many young people take the attitude that the Church owes them what they are pleased to call a "good time," and insist on turning the Church into a playhouse. We are ready to grant that the Church ought to minister directly or indirectly to all the needs of men. It is well to remember, however, that that cannot be done unless there are hours when the people are invited to a reverent waiting upon God. We would not undertake to place old heads on young shoulders. We would not restrain the play tendency in the lives of young people. But we would insist that there are times and places where everything of that nature is to be dismissed.

We fear sometimes that some of our Church services minister to a frivolous spirit. Many of the songs that have found their way into meetings for the promotion of holiness have a syncopated time that gets into the heels of people more than into their hearts. Some of them could be used for waltz tunes. In fact, some of them have been so used. A good deal of present-day demonstration is purely human emotion. We do not call it carnal; it certainly is not marked by the perennial freshness of a real, divine joy. It does not sober people; it does not convict them. We have seen seasons of great joy upon the people of God when no one laughed. A deep and pungent conviction results from such a visitation. We have ground for questioning the spiritual significance of anything in our worship that incites to levity and a shallow emotionalism.

Christian workers, and preachers especially, have upon them tremendous obligation to seek to correct any tendency to irreverence. The preacher has no right to let his congregation be disturbed by whispering, giggling young people. Against such conduct he should take a kindly, but firm, stand. The preacher himself must be reverent in his handling of the Bible, in his use of the Scriptures, in his speaking of the names that belong to detiy. He must conduct the services and deport himself as one whose "eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts."—The Way of Faith.

BEAUTIFUL MARRIAGE.

Holland Christian Church was the scene of a beautiful marriage on the evening of July 21, 1925, when Miss Marion Lee Newman and Mr. Carlyle Campbell were united in marriage by Rev. N. G. Newman, assisted by Rev. J. A. Campbell. The Church was tastily decorated with ferns and cut-flowers in white and green, and lighted with candles set in candelabra.

Mr. W. H. Baker, Newport News, Va., sang "Because" and "O Promise Me," accompanied on the piano by Mrs. R. T. Bradford, Drivers, Va. Mrs. J. H. Lightbourne presided at the organ, rendering Schubert's "Serenade" and "Salut d'Amour," by Elgar, as preliminary numbers, and during the ceremony "Believe Me, if All Those Endearing Young Charms." The bridal party entered to the Lohengrin march and retired to the recessional from Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream."

The bride entered with her brother, N. G. Newman, Jr., who gave her in marriage. She was attired in white satin, beaded with pearls, and wore a coronet of orange blossoms and carried a shower bouquet of bridal roses and lilies of the valley. She was attended by her mother, Mrs. N. G. Newman, as dame of honor, who wore orchid Georgette, with gold lace, and carried asters in shades of lavender; also by her sister, Mrs. W. H. Baker, of Newport News, as matron of honor, who wore yellow Georgette, with cream point lace, and carried blue delphinium and yellow daisies. The bridemaids were Miss Lila Newman, Elon College, N. C., and Miss Pattie Coghill, Henderson, N. C., who wore blue Georgette over pink, and pink Georgette over blue, trimmed in silver lace, and carried bouquets of garden flowers. June Joy Hyatte, of Newport News, was flower girl, and wore green Georgette over pink, and carried a basket of roses. The ringbearer was Mary Elizabeth Vaughan, of Norfolk, who wore yellow taffeta. Mrs. F. O. Forbes and Mrs. Job G. Holland, of Holland, were matrons of ceremonies.

Mr. Leslie H. Campbell, Buies Creek, N. C., brother of the groom, was best man. The ushers were Mr. Carl E. Fitchett, Drum, N. C.; Rev. Eugene Olive, Chapel Hill, N. C.; Dr. G. G. Holland, and Mr. Howard Luke, Holland, Va.

The bride is the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. N. G. Newman, Holland, Va., and the groom is the son of Rev. and Mrs. J. A. Campbell, Buies Creek, N. C., and president of Coker College, Hartsville, S. C.

THE ANT

BY CLINTON SCOLLARD.

I like to watch the journeying ant
Who never thinks of saying "can't."
He always goes ahead and does;
He's like the bee without its buzz.
He ever travels to and fro
And just as fast as he can go;
A very wise and busy thing,
He's like the bee without its sting.

STEWARDSHIP AND PROMOTION.

WARREN H. DENISON, D. D., Secretary.

Getting Ready for Your November and December Stewardship Program.

The Elon Summer School closed last night, August 7th. Your secretary taught a large class in stewardship for ten days. Various members of the class offered the following ways to help in your local Church stewardship campaign:

1. A series of stewardship sermons.
2. Choose a stewardship secretary to co-operate with the pastor in working out and executing such a program.
3. Conduct one or more stewardship classes and find out what the stewardship message is and what it means to the spiritual life of the individuals and of the Church.
4. Have a special service, where tithing testimonies are given.
5. Use stewardship pageants, playlets and stories.
6. Teach it to the children in the Sunday School, daily vacation Bible school, the junior Church.
7. Hold a stewardship institute in your Church.
8. Use posters, Church bulletins, budget account books, mottoes, charts.
9. Hold reading contests for the entire congregation.
10. Get your Conference stewardship secretary to come for a special address.
11. Enlist and enroll tithers at a public service.
12. Conduct a class in stewardship for your Christian Endeavorers.
13. Carefully select and distribute literature in the homes of your people and call attention to its importance in a public way.
14. Stress the importance of parents practicing stewardship and early teaching it in the home.
15. In making your annual every-member canvass, regard the tithe as the standard amount of giving, and urge it upon all.
16. Have a real study of the Bible on this subject from pulpit, and in midweed services, missionary societies, ladies' aid societies, class meetings.
17. Study your local Church financial plans and secure such revision of the same that will conform to the scriptural teaching on Church finance.
18. Urge each family to buy at least one good stewardship book and read it.
19. Place some of the best stewardship and kingdom finance books in your Church workers' library.
20. Hold stewardship contest essays by the high school pupils of your congregation.

ROCKY FORD BUILDING.

On August 3d we began the foundation of our Rocky Ford building. The building has been begged for, and promised for more than two years, and the people have almost worn out their patience waiting on promises. Now that we have started the building, it does not mean that our work is finished. It is only begun. We are a long way from having the amount of money necessary. It would be a great pleasure for us workers to be able to donate this needed building to this worthy cause if we were able to do so. Now that we have given our time and all that we have in order that the good people at large might have an opportunity to give to a worthy cause, we are starting this building on the hope that our good people are not going to let this cause suffer or force us to stop the building.

Three years ago you called on that person loved so much here, Miss Margaret Morey, to give her time to the field. She left a good home and has here toiled and labored with untold hardships and disappointments. Then, one year later, you asked Mrs. Sorrell and myself to leave our college work and take a field that had been left vacant. We did so, knowing that you good people were coming to our rescue. Since then, we have given all our time to the people we have learned to love so well. Because of their love for us, we have promised from time to time a building for their place of worship. They are asking if we are going to be true and faithful to our promise. The only reply we have been able to give is that we are going to give them a building. Now that our promise has begun to be made good, we began our work with a prayer on our lips that God would not let us fail in our work for Him.

I know every Christian worker feels that his cause is the most needed of all. We will agree that every enterprise of the Christian Church is a worthy enterprise and that any one will do well to invest in any of its fields of labor. Yet we have waited patiently for three years without a start. We do not feel that any other enterprise has suffered as we have. You are aware of the fact that we are dealing with a people that are not as able to help themselves as they are at other places. Yet they are doing all they can and are willing to do more for the sake of having a place to worship.

Our earnest prayer to God, and plea to you, is that we may be able to put our building up without any delay from the lack of funds. If we can find fifteen hundred people that will donate just one dollar each, we have our Church paid for without any further canvass or plea through the columns of our Church paper. All donations will be greatly appreciated.

Send all contributions to Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Secretary, Elon College, N. C., designating same for Rocky Ford; or to Miss M. H. Morey, Fancy Gap, Va., and same will be acknowledged in THE SUN and receipts sent.

Gratefully yours in His service,

Fancy Gap, Va. M. T. SORRELL.

MT. OLIVET DEDICATION.

Sunday, August 16, 1925, was a "red letter" day in the history of Mt. Olivet (R) Christian Church, Virginia Valley Central Conference. It was on that day that the handsome frame structure which, together with all the furniture and fixtures and an acre of ground, was donated to the Mt. Olivet congregation and the Virginia Valley Christian Conference by that noble man of God Bro. Edward Herring, and was dedicated to the Lord. All-day services—forenoon, afternoon and evening—were held. Rev. W. T. Walters, D. D., of Richmond, Va.; Rev. A. W. Andes, of Harrisonburg, Va.; Rev. W. T. Scott, of Elon College, N. C., and the writer, all took part in the different services. A large crowd was in attendance. After an able, interesting and inspiring sermon on "The Ideal Church" was delibered by Dr. Walters, the Church was formally and impressively dedicated by Dr. Walters, President of the Valley Conference, assisted by Rev. A. W. Andes, Secretary of this Conference. Dr. Walters had charge of the offering, which was surprisingly large, since so large a part of the congregation inside the building consisted of women and children.

After a sumptuous dinner, served on the grounds, and a feast of sociability, Rev. A. W. Andes preached one of those fine sermons for which he is noted. He was assisted in the afternoon services by several Christian crusaders from Harrisonburg and elsewhere.

At the evening service, Bro. Scott gave a very interesting and instructive stereopticon lecture on "The Christian Church and its Enterprises." He was also assisted by Bro. Funkenhouser, of the McGeheysville M. E. Church, and some crusaders who furnished the music for this service, and by the pastor of the Church. This, the last service of the day, was also largely attended.

The pastor, the membership of the Mt. Olivet (R) Church, and the people of the community are justly proud of and duly appreciate this munificent gift that Bro. Herring, out of the largeness of his heart, has made to the Church, to the denomination and to the Lord. He has built for himself a monument that, by its influence for good on this and future generations, will outlast any that could be carved from marble or granits, and has written his name in large letters in the affections of the people by far more deeply and more indelibly than could be chiseled in stone.

Linville, Va. R. P. CRUMPLER, Pastor.

A SECRETARY OF PEACE.

Let's see. The United States has in its Cabinet, appointed by the President, ten members. Of these ten members, eight are secretaries—State, Treasurer, War, Navy, Interior, Agriculture, Commerce, Labor. The other two members are the Attorney-General and the Postmaster-General. Each of these members of the Cabinet has a large force of assistants and clerks.

This government of ours considers it within its province to administer, at tremendous cost of money and vast outlay of energy, departments that have to do with the production of food, the relations of labor and commerce, the carrying of mail, the affairs of the law, the affairs of interrelated State matters, the intricate financial problems of a nation, and the building of material to be used in war on land and sea, and the maintenance of enormous budgets for army posts, war colleges and hospitals and pensions.

But why not have a "Secretary of Peace" as well as a Secretary of War? And give him, for assistants, the finest human helpers, whose entire time should be given to the promotion of the sentiment of peace, not only here at home, but internationally. The occupant of such a place in the Cabinet would have to be a man of widest knowledge, with statesmanlike vision and a love of mankind. We can understand how the position of some of the Cabinet secretaryships could be filled by some man who needed only technical knowledge and professional skill; but the place of "Secretary of Peace" could be filled only by a person who combined qualities of head and heart in the highest degree.

Is this suggestion to be considered as an idle dream, a fantasy, an impossible ideal? If money, and food, and correspondence, and militarism are reckoned to be of so much importance that a human government considers them to lie within its economic administration as a government, why should not the administration of a department that would advance the welfare of the citizens economically far more than the department of finance, be considered within the province of a civilized nation?

May we venture to predict that the time is not far off when, perhaps, the most important secretary in our Cabinet will be the "Secretary of Peace." Even as late as the year 1886 we had no Secretaries of Agriculture, Commerce or Labor. They have been added because they seemed so important for a nation to carry on. If world-wide peace would solve our economic burdens, lessen our taxes, increase human welfare without increased cost, answer the world's problems of race hate and raise the whole world into better and higher life, why is the proposal for a "Secretary of Peace" so visionary after all? If the question were put to a vote by the people of this country, how many citizens would instruct Congress or the President to add another member to the Cabinet and call him the "Secretary of Peace?"—C. M. S., in Christian Herald.

ECHOES FROM BETHLEHEM CHAUTAUQUA.

It is an easy matter to say that the "last was the best," but when records prove the statement there is substantial evidence. The registration did not come up to our expectations, while that was some better than last year. The interest was manifested in attendance, and following up the course clear through the session.

The faculty was entirely satisfactory, and held the classes with increased interest. It was often said, when the bell rang, "the periods are all too short." The inspiration received by those in attendance will be used for great profit to the work. Beyond a doubt, the instruction was practical, and will be helpful to any leader in his school and Church. We have wished for leaders, now that we have this school, we are looking forward to the time when that will be supplied, to a great extent, and that with little cost.

It was voted in the business meeting that we would hold the session next year at the same time as this. The name was changed from "Chautauqua" to "The Summer School of Christian Education." This, we felt, would convey in a better way the idea of the school.

The commencement exercise given by the daily vacation Bible school on Saturday evening was fine. Plain, but very impressive. It may be that we have such inspiration from it that we will put on that work next summer for two or three weeks' time. For the closing service Sunday at 11 o'clock, Dr. Denison was at his best. It was indeed a very helpful service. Being a consecration service, it seemed to fit in so well with the idea throughout the entire week. Let us hope and work for a better school next year.

MISSIONARY SOCIETY ENTERTAINED.

The Ever-Ready Missionary Society of the First Christian Church was most delightfully entertained last evening by Mr. and Mrs. L. Russell Cather at their home in Winchester, Va. It was the first meeting of the Society since the meeting of the annual session of the Valley of Virginia Central Conference, and a goodly number of the members were present, and an interesting session was enjoyed by all. The new president, Miss Anna Amelia Seabright, presided, and the records were kept by Miss Evelyn Cather.

One item of interest in the business meeting was the decision to hold a picnic at Golighty's Bottoms on Friday evening of this week, and all who can go are urged to meet at the home of Miss Seabright, 20 West Clifton Street, at 7 o'clock, and go to the place of the picnic in a body.

At the close of the business meeting last evening, delicious refreshments were served, and the happy young people went away with their unanimous thanks to Mr. and Mrs. Cather for the lovely way in which they had entertained them.

THE TEACHER.

By Prof. J. Henry Highsmith.

The teacher is the soul of the educative process, the "high priest of the future." "The inspiration of the school is the presence of the living teacher."

The responsibility of the teacher and the importance of the teaching profession are universally recognized. Since the work of the teacher is so significant and so vitally affects childhood, and therefore society, it is supremely important that he should be qualifiefid for his task. The qualifications demanded for this high function of teaching are well-nigh innumerable, but a few of them are absolutely essential, and these will be discussed here.

1. Character.—The character of the teacher is all-important, since the formation of character is the end of education—"like teacher, like school." The ideals of the teacher, and the ideals of the school, will be determined by the teacher's character, for only a person of good character will permanently desire the things of great and lasting worth.

The elements of character are love, sincerity, honesty, integrity, sympathy, patience, perseverance, and determination. The teacher who has character which embodies these fine qualities will be sane, not a crank; decisive, not pondering, yet not dogmatic; stable, but not stubborn; tentative in his attitudes, yet fixed when occasion demands; honest, but not puritanical; prayerful, and hence powerful; pious, but not pietistic; righteous, which means right-wise, standing foursquare to every wind that blows.

The teacher's character must match the dignity, the significance and the permanence of his office.

"The teacher lives forever. On and on Through all the generations he shall preach
The beautiful evangel; on and on
Till our poor race has passed the tortuous years
That lie fore-reaching the millennium,
And far into that broad and open sea
He shall sail, singing still the songs he taught
To the world's youth, and shall sing them o'er and o'er
To lapping waters, till the thousand leagues
Are overpast, and argosy and crew
Ride at their port."

There is no force so potent for good as splendid character.

"You remember that when the Pharisees questioned him that aforetime was blind concerning Jesus, he said: "Whether he be a sinner or no, I know not. One thing I know, that whereas I was blind, now I see.' The one was a speculative, the other a personal experience, and no man could take it from him. Just so the ideal teacher has a character which is something more than a bundle of cold negations; it is positive, bold, living, expressing itself in every way, concisely and unconsciously, upon the habits of the pupils under his care."

2. Scholarship.—This is abundant, thorough, fresh knowledge of the subjects one teaches. It is absolutely essential. Meager scholarship is fatal to success in teaching. No other qualification can atone for lack of scholarship, the knowledge of what one teaches. The teacher must know his subject matter, and a knowledge of the fundamental, underlying, advanced principles is necessary in order that the elements of any subject be taught properly. The teacher must know much to teach little. This abundant knowledge on the teacher's part gives reserve force. Knowledge or scholarship is extremely important, because it begets enthusiasm, creates confidence, secures the respect of the class, and gives proper perspective. This knowledge on the part of the teacher should include not only the what, the subject matter, but also the whom, the child. Every teacher ought to be a student of the modern child-study movement. A scientific knowledge of child-life is essential to any considerable success in conducting the educative process. The teacher who performs his tasks intelligently must know the history of education, the record of achievements in this great field of human endeavor. Modern educational method is based upon psychology, and a working knowledge of educational psychology is indispensable. School management and administration have come to occupy a large place in the equipment of a well-qualified school man, and no teacher should neglect these aspects of his profession. The philosophy of education, while not absolutely essential, practically, will nevertheless make any teacher stronger for his daily duties. "Above all," says Mr. Papne, "the teacher must be a scholar, and if he is to be a teacher of real power, he must be a man of wide and accurate scholarship."

"It is the man who takes in who can give out. The man who does not do the one, soon takes to spinning his own fancies out of his interior, like a spider, and he snares himself at last, as well as his victims."—Dr. John Brown.

"Wisdom is the principal thing; therefore, get wisdom, and with all thy getting, get understanding."—Proverbs.

3. Ability to Teach.—Scholarship the teacher must have, but there must be also the ability to make known to the pupil the things which the teacher knows. Teaching, then, is causing another to know something that he does not comprehend at the present moment. If the teacher hasn't this ability to cause another to know, he is not qualified for the teaching profession, no matter what other fine traits he may possess. As Prof. Horne and others have so well shown, the sources of ability to teach are two—heredity and training. Heredity gives us the "born teacher," and there are some people who believe still that magister nascitur non fit. Heredity is a great force in the making of a teacher, but hereditary ability is not enough; there must be added the process of training, which gives one scientific, rational method. Method is the way the teacher works.

4. Inspirational Leadership.—It is expected of the teacher that he shall be an inspirational leader, and he is not completely equipped for his task until he has this quality, nor can he influence his community to the largest extent possible without it. In order to be an inspirational leader, the teacher must believe something, he must have a creed. The teacher must feel called to his work, and if he can say "for this cause was I born," so much the better. Happy is that teacher who can say, with Edwin Osgood Grover: "I believe in boys and girls, the men and women of a great tomorrow; that whatsoever the boy soweth, the man shall reap. I believe in the curse of ignorance, in the efficacy of schools, in the dignity of teaching, and in the joy of serving others."

5. The Spirit of Humanity.—This is the spirit of service. The teacher must be willing to serve. Of course, he ought to receive all that society can pay in the form of money and appreciation, but he must have a willingness to spend and be spent. He must realize that greatness comes through ministering, and chieftaincy through service.

These, then, are the essential qualifications of the teacher—character, scholarship, ability to teach, inspirational leadership, the spirit of humanity. "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed."

The above is presented in these columns for the benefit of our Sunday School teachers, for the reason that the principles set forth by Prof. Highsmith for secular teachers have a strong application to Sunday School work.—Religious Herald.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

By H. S. Hardcastle.

MISS PATTIE COGHILL, Field Secretary

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

September 6, 1925.

Subject: "Paul Writes to the Philippians."

Golden Text: "I can do all things in Him that strengtheneth me."—Philip. 4:13.

Lesson: Philippians 1:4.

Devotional Reading: Phil. 2:5-11.

The Philippian Christians became Paul's best friends, and their Church his favorite Church. This letter reflects this spirit of friendship and personal appreciation, and is one of the best of Paul's many fine letters. For devotional purposes, it is perhaps one of the best. It is interesting to note that the letter was written in prison when Paul was an old man and when the end of his career seemed at hand. One would not glean this from the letter, however, for it reflects the spirit of joy and the hope of victory to a degree that makes it an inspiration to all who read it. Finally, it might be said that the immediate occasion for the letter was the fact that one of the Philippians—Epaphroditus by name—had come with a gift for Paul, an expression of the love and appreciation of the Philippians for their spiritual father. This act of love inspired the letter.

Paul says many fine things in this letter. But it is safe to say that the section of the letter as printed for the lesson today is one of the finest. Here is a passage that bears witness to the fact that holy men of old wrote as they were moved by the Spirit of God. Criticism may do much, but it can never destroy the spiritual appeal and power of such passages as this.

There are those who interpret Christianity in terms of subtraction or "giving up things." But Paul is not among their number, for he says that whatever he had, whatever things might have been gain for him, he counted them but loss in the light of the fact that he had found Christ. One is reminded of the Master's suggestion that the kingdom of God was like a goodly pearl for which a man would sell all that he had that he might buy it. Paul had much. Far beyond the ordinary man of his day, or of our day, he had things that were counted valuable from the world's standpoint. But out of a personal experience of Christ be affirmed in no uncertain terms that Christ was of surpassing worth. As Dr. Davis says, "Paul means to tell us that every thing must be reckoned a positive loss if it in any way takes the place of that personal relationship with the living Christ which is the one essential fact in being a Christian." To know Christ, to experience the power of his resurrection, to know the fellowship of his sufferings—there are many who would like to know the power of His resurrection, but there are few who want the fellowship of His suffering—yea even to be conformed to His death; these were the things that Paul counted most worth while. How cheap and common do our values appear alongside of these supreme values!

Religion was not a static thing for Paul. How could it be? For religion for Paul was life, a vital life experience of Christ in the heart through faith, and life can never be static. Therefore, he set himself to the task of growing into the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ. As one reads of Paul's life and service, and as he reads Paul's letters, he gets the impression that Paul was a very good man. And yet Paul frankly confesses that he has not already attained unto the ideal. As good as he seems to us, there is the break between the actual and the ideal. Far beyond him was the Christ with all his power of appeal and His beauty of character, and when Paul measured himself by that matchless figure of all time, he knew that he "had not laid hold." Here is inspiration for us who feel our limitations so keenly. We are not the only ones who feel that we are not good enough. Paul joins us in a company across the ages.

But if Paul realized that he had not achieved the ideal, he did not stop trying. In fact, he tried all the harder. Forgetting the things that were behind—the failures and the successes; and looking unto the things that were before—the larger possibilities and challenges—he kept incessantly at the task of making a Christ-like life. He believed that he who does the best he knows will always know better. He, therefore, urges the Philippians to do the best they could, to walk by the rule to which they had already attained, confident that to him who is sincere in his purpose to follow Christ, God will reveal his limitations and impart the needed wisdom and power. There are those who are asking for more light; it might be better to see to it that they walk in the light they have.

Does it make any difference what a man thinks? There are those who say that it does not. They have some eminent authorities against them, for both Paul and Jesus insist that a man is, in a sense, what he thinks. A man's thoughts affect his physical appearance; they write their message on his face. But far more powerfully they affect his moral and spiritual stature. The thoughts that a man thinks really make the man what he is in a general way. We will do well, then, to give heed to our thoughts. One of the crowning qualities of man is his capacity to control his thinking. By an act of the will, man has the power to think what he ought to think. And if, perchance, unlovely thoughts should creep in, they can be driven out. As Dr. J. U. Newman, Elon's scholar and saint, used to say, "You cannot keep birds from flying over your house, but you can keep them from building their nests in your parlor." Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honorable, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report—think on these things. Turn your mind to the finest things of life, keep them there, and you will be releasing in your life one of the most powerful forces in character building and right conduct.

Teaching Points.

1. There is a ministry of benediction through letters.
2. Seek first the kingdom of righteousness, and things will be added. (This does not mean, of course, that being a Christian guarantees a big bank account.)
3. Christianity is a matter of an intimate, personal relationship with Christ.
4. This is life eternal to know Jesus Christ and God.
5. The Christian life involves growth and progress.
6. The best Christian usually sees the great gulf between what he is and what he ought to be.
7. No one of us has any right to make today's encampment his permanent habitation.
8. Persistency is an essential quality of a growing Christian life.
9. Concentration counts.
10. It is just about as important to forget past successes as it is to forget past failures.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

September 6, 1925.

Topic: "Learning How to Pray."

Lesson: Matt. 6:5-15.

(Consecration Meeting.)

Some Bible Hints.

Prayer should be made to God, and not that man may hear and admire. Pray naturally. (V. 5.)

Secret prayer is the thing that makes a Christian life powerful. We must have personal and secret dealings with God. (V. 6.)

God's recompense is not always the answer to prayer that we ask for. He has many ways of blessing us. The joy of speaking with Him is blessing enough. (V. 6.)

If God knows our needs, we may trust Him to give us the best things when we pray. (V. 8.)

Suggestive Thoughts.

Prayer lifts us to a higher level. It enables us to walk with God as well as with men, and to know the mind of God.

Learn to pray regularly. Every evening, as well as morning, we should talk over the events of the day with God and study our acts in His light.

Learn child-like confidence in prayer. It is wonderful to tell God our needs and leave the matter in His hands, believing in His guidance, whatever happens.

Learn the truth that there is no prayer without love. Prayer that is dictated by human will, prayer that is selfish, can accomplish nothing. Only love prevails.

A Few Illustrations.

The foundation of prayer is the Bible. Build up your prayers on the Bible and its promises, and you will be blessed.

Soldiers in the front-line trenches, brought face to face with the realities of life and death, began to pray. If a person does not pray, it is because he does not face reality.

"Keeping in Touch with God," a booklet published by the United Society of Christian Endeavor, will help any one that wishes to know how to pray and get results. Prayer is both science and art.

If a radio sending apparatus can send out electric waves, why may not the human mind also send out waves of thought that reach God, who is not far from any of us? That would be prayer.

To Think About.

Why do we need to pray without ceasing?

What helps may we have to an understanding of prayer.

What is the Christian Endeavor quiet hour?

A Cluster of Quotations.

"Accompany your prayer with honest confession of definite sins, if there are any. This helps us to see ourselves as God sees us."—Henry Churchill King.

"I see more and more that prayer is not always asking for things; it is soaking one's self in the Bible, bathing in it, talking to God."—Dr. F. B. Meyer.

"A God to whom we cannot pray is no God at all."—Anon.

"When I pray for a man in doubt, I am liberating in his behalf a power as real as the electric energy that glows in the carbon filament above us. You are never doing finer work than when you finely pray."—Anon.

BIRDS CHANGE CLOTHES IN AUGUST.

Of course, all the birds came back in the spring, just as we knew they would—birds that sang joyously, gathered bits of string and grass and twigs, built their nests and raised their babies. But about August, with babies grown to fly on their own sure wings, what has suddenly become of the birds? Most of the birds we know best have stopped singing, and if you didn't see one, now and then, perhaps you would think they had all flown away. No, they are quiet and shy, because they are changing their feather clothes. A long process it is for birds to change their clothes—sometimes weeks. Of course, if a bird lost all his feathers at once, he would be exposed to rain and chill, as feathers don't grow in again in a minute; and how could he fly? Instead, he changes two or three feathers at a time. He begins to get a new suit by dropping a feather from each wing, and, when the two new ones are nearly grown, he drops two more. His tail feathers he sheds in the same way, one from each side of his tail at the same time until he has a brand-new tail. His body feathers drop out one by one, so, all through the changing process, he wears part of his old and part of his new suit.

Some birds have two different suits of clothes each year. For instance, the goldfinch. When he flashes about in the spring, on his arrival from the South, his suit is bright yellow, with black wings. When, in August, he changes into the clothes he intends, a little later, to wear back to the South, he is in dull olive-green, though still with black wings—much the same color that his modest wife wears the year round.—Christian Register.

THE SIN OF HATING.

Stirring up race hatred, or sectional or religious strife and ill will of any kind, or for any reason, is doing the devil's business as thoroughly and completely as any man can ever hope to do it. Very frequently, an effort is made at justifying that sort of thing, but there can never be any possible justification for it. Hating in a world that was made for brotherhood is a sin of hideous proportions.

But, it is a sin that we are all subject to, a sin that creeps in very subtly and often making a good face for itself. Why shouldn't a man hate another who isn't the same kind of a Christian as he is, or whose creed seems to him to be dangerous and upsetting? It is a well-known fact that some of the best haters and stirrers-up of strife have been people believing themselves to be specially good.

The trouble is that there is only one way of killing hatred or the tendency to it. If we don't learn to love people we are always in danger of having some argument or impulse lead us into a feeling of hatred toward them. Most of us do not live our lives in a vacuum, or go through our days without some sort of reaction toward the people who for various reasons and in various ways touch and jostle us. We are never safe from hatred until love becomes a very positive factor in our lives.

And there is only one way of lessening the hate that is threatening the very existence of our race and is spoiling life after such a terrible fashion, and that is by adding to the world's stock of positive good will and kindliness and friendship. Any man who helps to make life kinder is helping to bring in the kingdom of God in the earth.—New Outlook.

Boatman: "Not many; you're the first I've seen this season."

MISSIONARY SOCIETY MEETING.

The Madge Moffitt Missionary Society met at the Christian Church in Ramseur Monday evening, August 10th, at 7:30 o'clock. Eighteen members were present. Two programs were prepared. The first was entirely social and was made very pleasant with a delightful picnic supper. At the close of the social hour, the boys and girls went to the Church auditorium for the sacred program.

The president, Miss Frances Vickary, presided and gave a splendid welcome address. The hour was spent in story-telling by Miss Moffitt, and incidentals peculiar to a real missionary society. The young people are very much interested, and the Church is expecting great results from this organization. CORRESPONDING SECRETARY.

Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

A STUDY OF THE PROVERBS.

MONDAY.

Proverbs 1.

The proverbs is a producr of the new emphasis placed on the heart of life, and they are written to enable the people to keep their true balance between form and spirit. The writers addressed themselves to individuals of any walk of life, and not to any particular class or race. Their interest is in human life, and not the Jews. They addressed their hearers as men on common level and interests in questions common to all.

Nothing could show more clearly than these wise sayings that universal righteousness was the thing, and everywhere in the proverbs the fruit of life's experiences is expressed in this manner with universal application.

There are three of these books—Proverbs, Job, and Ecclesiastes. There were others, but they did not get in the cannons of the Scriptures. The heart of the proverbs which we are studying now is that one may know wisdom and instruction and be able to discern in righteousness, justice and equity.

Prayer.—Our Father, as we turn to Thy word, day by day, give unto us Thy spirit of wisdom and understanding and draw us closer to Thee. Forgive us and keep us from sin this day. In His name we ask it. Amen.

TUESDAY.

Proverbs 24.

By "wisdom," the writers of the proverbs meant sagacity and common sense which enables men to live a happy and a prosperous life, and by brief maxims and long and shrewd observations they taught the people these things. Their teachings dealt with the whole range of life from the smallest personal affairs to best manners and the highest morals; from family relations and servants to social intercourse between friends and enemies and the rich and the poor; from professional and business matters to the affairs of public life.

The ideal of the writers was to make men know how to conduct themselves so that they might be righteous, successful, honorable, and happy, and make all society the same. The great motive of most people in living was personal happiness. There was little concern about others. Thus the exquisite words:

"Rejoice not when thy enemy falls,
And let not thy heart be glad when he is overthrown."—5, 24:17; or as found in 25:21:
"If thine enemy be hungry, give him bread to eat," etc.

Prayer.—Dear Lord, show us, step by step, the way to happiness ultimately. If it takes us through sacrifice and suffering, help us to understand it and endure as a faithful soldier. In His name. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

FRIENDSHIP.

LESSONS: Proverbs 11:13, 17:17-9, 18:24, 27:6-9; Psa. 55:12-13, 41:9; Matt. 26:48; 2. Som. 1:26.

"Fine as friendship is, there is nothing irrevocable about it, the bands of friendship are not iron bands, proof against the strongest of strains and the heaviest of assaults. A man, by becoming your friend, has not committed himself to all the demands which you may be pleased to make upon him. Foolish people like to test the bands of their friendship, pulling upon them to see how much strain they will stand. When they snap, it is as if friendship itself had been proved unworthy.

"But the truth is that good friendships are fragile things and require as much care in handling as any other fragile and precious thing. For friendship is an adventure and a romance, and it is in adventure the unexpected happens. It is the zest of peril that makes the excitement of friendship. All that is unpleasant and unfavorable is foreign to its atmosphere; there is no place in friendship for harsh criticism or fault-finding. We will "take less" from a friend than we will from one who is indifferent to us."—Randolph S. Bourne.

Prayer.—Our Father, give unto us, Thy children, a keen insight into true friendship and help us to be faithful. Help us to love at all times and, in Christ, to show ourselves a friend that sticketh closer than a brother. Amen.

THURSDAY.

A THOUGHT.

"Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God."—Rev. 3:12.

Wherever souls are being tried and ripened, in whatever humble and commonplace ways, there God is hewing out the pillars for His temple.—Phillips Brooks.

Prayer.—Our Father, we acknowledge Thee, and help us to acknowledge Thee in all our ways. Direct our footsteps and our way, and strengthen us when we are tried. Help us to show Thy spirit in the commonplace ways. Use us for Thy service here and hereafter. In His name we ask it. Amen.

FRIDAY.

WORK AND SUCCESS.

LESSONS: Gen. 3:19; Prov. 13:11, 28:19; Eccl. 5:12; Jno. 6:27; Matt. 11:28; Matt. 6:3.

"My son, remember you have to work. Whether you handle pick or wheelbarrow, or a set of books, dig ditches or edit newspapers, ring a bell or write funny stories, you must work. Don't be afraid of killing yourself by overworking. Men die sometimes, but it is because they quit work at 9 P. M. and don't go home until 2 A. M. It's the interval that kills, my boy.

"Work gives you appetite for meals; lends solidity to slumbers; gives perfect appreciation of a holiday.

"There are young men who do not work, but the country is not proud of them. It does not even know their names; it only speaks of them as old so-and-so's boys. Nobody likes them. The great busy world doesn't know they are here. So find out what you want to be and do. Take off your coat and make the dust fly. The busier you are, the less harm you are apt to get into, the sweeter will be your sleep, the brighter your holidays, and the better satisfied the whole world will be with you."—Bob Burdette.

Prayer.—Dear Father, give us an even balance of things and work that is best for us. Forgive us of what we have lacked and blot out our sins. Save us at last. In His name. Amen.

SATURDAY.

"What is man that Thou art mindful of him? . . . Thou hast made him but a little lower than God, and crownest him with glory and honor."—Psa. 8:4-5.

"It is of dangerous consequences to represent to man how near he is to the level of a beast without showing him at the same time his greatness. It is likewise dangerous to let him see his greatness without his meanness. It is more dangerous yet to leave him ignorant of either; but very beneficial that he should be made sensible of both."—Pascal, the French philosopher of the sixteenth century.

Prayer.—Teach us, Lord, at the opening of each day to praise Thy name most excellent in all the earth. Teach us by Thy spirit to acknowledge Thee in the universe; the heavens, the stars, the sky, the earth, the flowers all are Thine. If we have the possibilities of heaven in us, if we may have anything of an angelic spirit, by Thy spirit develop this and finally make us Thine. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

SUNDAY.

AN EVERY-DAY GUIDE.

"The word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path."—Psa. 119:105-112.

A friend who was having a peculiarly hard time in his business, said to me on one occasion, in answer to my inquiry as to how matters were faring with him: "I'm having a hard struggle just now, and I do not know what I should do were it not for these great sentences which I read over every day before I start in on my day's work." He showed me several of the promises of Scripture written on a card and placed in his cardcase. They were his guide, his stay.

A fine sight is a well-worn Bible, where the soiled and broken leaves show steady use extending throughout the years. No crisp, fresh, clean pages of the Bible can take the place of this old copy with which the reader has weathered all the storms of life.

In these times of political and social crises in which we are now living, it would be well to listen to the words of one of our great leaders: "If we abide by the principles taught in the Bible," he declares, "our country will go on prospering; but if we and our posterity neglect its instructions and authority, no man can tell how sudden a catastrophe may overwhelm us and bury all our glory in profound darkness and obscurity." And one of our late Presidents, a champion of the Bible, addressing a great audience some time before his death, pleaded as follows: "I have a very simple thing to ask of you. I ask that you may realize that part of the destiny of America lies in the daily perusal of this great Book, and if you would see America free and pure, you will first make your own spirits free and pure by this baptism of the Holy Book."—Rev. W. S. Stranahan.

Prayer.—That we and our children may value more and more the teachings of the Bible. We come with thanks, not with selfish outcries. Bless us with cheerful habits that make others glad.

There are all sorts of ways of putting things, and some sound much better than others. For example, there is the case of the man of whom Lord Coleridge used to tell, whose father was hanged for highway robbery. Some one asked him how his father died.

"Sir," said he, "he fell from a scaffolding outside Newgate while he was talking to a clergyman."—Youth's Companion.

Granny's come to our house,
An' oh, my lawsy, Daisy!
All the chillun on the place
Is jest arunnin' crazy.
Fetched a cake fer little Jake,
Fetched a pie fer Nancy,
An' fetched a pear fer all the pack
'At runs to kiss their Granny.
Lucy Ellen's on her lap,
An' Kate and Silus Walker
Both aridin' on her foot,
An' Bridget on the rocker.

MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT, Editor.

Dear Little Folks:

Did you send your name this week? Oh! oh! one of you forgot it, sure as the world. Hurry up, now, as fast as fast can be! Your editor wants your name and your address—at once. We are going to play a wonderful game before school starts. But I won't tell you the name of the game, or how to play until you have sent me enough names and addresses to play it with. See, the name of yourself and your address is the main thing in this game. Oh, hurry, dears, do! September is most here, and then comes school.

Oh, deary me! I most forgot to tell you, I am going 'way up in the Valley of Virginia next week. Yes, sir-ee, where the beautiful caverns are, and down inside the caverns. Do you remember, the fairies have made their homes there in the wonderful, cool earth—I most forgot; I told you about those fairies last summer, didn't I? But if you like fairies as well as I do, you'll always be glad to listen to more stories about them. In the meantime, send me your name and address to Ramseur, N. C., and when I get back we will have a surprise waiting, I am sure. A surprise! Oh, that's the bestest fun at all! Even grown-ups, like your editor, like surprises.

Your surprise, if you will do your part—you know what 'tis; I mean your part! So rush along Uncle Sam, bring me a huge sack of letters from the "Kiddies' Korner" children.

Your vacation editor,
MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT.

MRS. MUD PIE AND THE HILLTOPPER.

By Miriam Clark Potter.

There was once a neat, very sweet, cheerful fairy person who lived on the tippest top of a little hill. She kept her tiny house as carefully as could be; the curtains were always washed and clean, the furniture was dusted, the rugs were swept. All the fairy people called her the Hilltopper; and indeed she was that.

At the bottom of the little hill lived a squat, brownish fairy person, very dumpy and fat. Her house was made of mud, spread out, patted, baked into cakes and built into a queer little bit of a dwelling; it had one tiny, dusty window, the door was always shut, and the yard had no grass at all. The fairy folk called her Mrs. Mud Pie; and indeed she was that.

Every morning when Mrs. Hilltopper went down the path to the fairy market by the bridge she would call out: "Good morning, Mrs. Mud Pie!" very gayly and cheerily, without stopping. And there would be no answer, but just a sort of gruffy, sniggery sniff from behind the window.

But Mrs. Hilltopper was not discouraged.

One morning, when a gray fog breathed low over the bushes, Mrs. Hilltopper came down as usual, bent on getting some mushrooms for her midday meal. "Good morning, Mrs. Mud Pie!" she called; but then her voice changed to a light scream, and she cried: "Oh, oh, do open the door and let me in quick! Are those the wild, bright eyes of the fox looking at me from behind the berry bush?"

The door did not open; the answer did not come; there was not even a gruffy, sniggery sniff from behind the window; but Mrs. Hilltopper knew that Mrs. Mud Pie was there, because she saw the dusty curtains stir.

Then she thought to herself: "She is not only unfriendly; she is mean! I shall get in, anyway!" and she ran quickly to the front door and beat upon it. "Let me in!" she cried. "Do you wish me to be devoured in your very dooryard, Mrs. Mud Pie?"

Then her voice was still.

Pretty soon the door opened, slowly and thickly, like a lump of mud. Mrs. Mud Pie looked out, and oh, she was an ugly thing, with a brown, gooberish dress, and a mussy old cap, and big black eyes peeking out. She looked this way and that, to the left and to the right, and up and down again. Then she shut the door softly, with a slow, squashy sound, and disappeared from sight.

"She is all done for," she whispered. "Well, it is rather a shame, but I cannot help it."

After a while, when the soft mist was beginning to lift and blow about like lovely lace among the trees, Mrs. Mud Pie opened her front door and went slowly up the little hill, through the fern and daisies, to Mrs. Hilltopper's little house.

"Ah, the hill is steep," she thought, puffing. "Oh the thorns are scratchy! Ugh!" But she went on, seeing only the unpleasant things, and after a while she came to Mrs. Hilltopper's neat, sweet little house.

She crossed the wee porch and looked in. The fresh curtains (made of peachbloom cloth) blew in the breeze. The green carpet (made of woven moss and pine needles) was clean and sweet-smelling. The wee, rooty chairs and tables were all in order; the tiny bed of thistlefluff and plantain leaves was all spread and ready to lie upon. "It is not so bad here at all," thought Mrs. Mud Pie. "I shall take all the things down to my own house." She began piling them together and trying them with grapevine ropes, so that she could drag them behind her.

"Wait! I must look in the little cupboard," she said to herself. "There may be something good to eat in it." So she opened the wee door, and stared inside. Fine! Bright, fresh honey, and chestnut cakes, baked in the sun! Blackberry jam! Fairy bread! She licked her thick lips; and then it occurred to her to sit down and eat a snack, right then and there, before she left.

She filled her hand with the goodies; she climbed on top of the heat of furniture and began to eat. Just as she did that she heard a noise on the porch outside. "Mercy me; the fox!" she thought in a fright. There was a shadow upon the floor, and in walked Mrs. Hilltopper.

Very neat and cheerful she looked; she stood still and stared at Mrs. Mud Pie.

"I thought the fox had got you!" gurgled the brown, squdgy lady, with her mouth full of jam.

"Of course you did," replied Mrs. Hilltopper. "You hoped he had! Well, I have found out just what sort of person you are, Mrs. Mud pie, and I do not want to be friends with you. Now go."

Then a queer thing happened. Mrs. Mud Pie began to cry. It was the first and only time she had ever cried, and she had years and years of tears inside her eyes. She cried, and she cried, and she cried! and the tears washed her, of course, as such tears always do. They washed away all the mud on her face and her hands and her brown squdgy feet; even her dress looked fair and pretty.

Suddenly Mrs. Mud Pie opened her eyes wide and began to laugh. She looked at her white hands and laughed; she looked at her clean dress and laughed.

"I am laughing because I have no home!" she said. "I do not want to go back to my old brown, squdgy house at the bottom of the hill, because it does not suit me any more. I like your sort of home best, Mrs. Hilltopper. Please let me stay with you and fix myself a neat little place just like yours, over next door. Something strange has happened to me; I am white and new and shining!"

Then Mrs. Hilltopper was glad, because this was just what she had hoped for. She said: "I rather believed, Mrs. Mud Pie, that, if you ever came out of your awful old hole and saw the fresh, pretty world, you would get to be your real self. I am very glad I had that scare about the fox, and I will forgive you for not opening your door. Yes; fix yourself a house beside mine, and I will help you."

So they set to work busily, and soon the speck of a place was done. And after that, when the fairy folk saw them going by to market together they would say: "Look! look! there goes the Hilltopper and her friend. Who would ever think her name was once Mud?"

Christian Orphanage

We are happy to inform you that the contractor is digging out the foundation for our new building. Sand, brick and lumber are being placed on the ground and the work on the real construction will begin next week.

In a few months you will see another beautiful new building on our grounds. Now, won't you be happy to see our Church's Orphanage grow, and the little fatherless children have a home? Two things will enter into making you happy. One is that it is an institution of your denomination; the second is that you have invested some of your real, hard-earned money in it. A little girl sent us five dollars last week to invest in the new building. She will be happy each time she visits the Orphanage and looks at the building she helped to build. The little children in that building will feel nearer and dearer to her because she has had a part in building a home for them.

I read a story some time since that impressed me very much. A man of wealth gave a building for a college that cost him quite a sum of money. Some years after he lost all he had. He though of the building he had given to the college, and decided he would visit the college and look at the building he gave. While looking at the handsome structure he had donated in his days of prosperity, he said, "What I kept I lost; what I gave away I saved." What you invest in the building, you will save.

My very dear friend, Mr. M. Orban, Jr., of the Far West, and his good wife sent us subscriptions this week amounting to $1,000.00, to be invested in our building. Bro. Orban and his good wife are good friends of the Christian Orphanage, and always take advantage of an opportunity to help us.

Let all of our Churches have self-pride enough to raise the small amount they have been asked for. Won't it just be wonderful if all our Churches take a part! We would feel like shouting.

The following articles have been sent in since our last report: Mrs. C. W. Parker, Portsmouth, Va., 8 suits for boys, 3 hats, 4 pairs of pants and 1 waist; Holy Neck Vacation Bible School, 16 beautiful little dresses; Miss Ara Scott, 4 sheets; Ladies' Aid Society, Franklin, Va., Christian Church, 40 dresses and 1 quilt; Mrs. Egbert Truitt, 1 quilt; Antioch Vacation Bible School, Frankford, Ind., 1 qullt; Rev. M. T. Sorrell, 1 bag apples.

THE CROSS AND THE CRESCENT.

Rev. Dr. Samuel M. Zwemer, one of the leading Christian authorities on the Mohammedan world, summed up the present conflict of the cross and the crescent, in his address at the Foreign Mission Conference at Washington, D. C., in the following language:

"We need a new note in view of the new conditions throughout the Mohammedan world. The day is past for directing a crusade against the Turks. In the missionary litany of the Moravian brethren, the prayer of Abraham, the friend of God, for his prodigal son finds an abiding place.

"Every Sabbath they pray, 'O that Ishmael might live before God!' And this briefest and oldest of all missionary collects includes not only the Arab race, but the world of Islam; volumes of history and geography are packed into a single sentence.

"Mohammedanism is the prodigal son among the non-Christian religions. God's love goes out to them as to no other section of the non-Christian world.

"Because of their numbers and neglect, He is compassionate on this multitude. There are 234,000,000 Mohammedans. In India alone, 60,000,000. Under the American flag in the Philippine Islands there are 587,000. In every land the Moslem population has been most neglected. Among these millions, eighty millions are under fourteen years of age. Surely Christ has compassion on this great world of childhood.

"The Heavenly Father loves them because they are a great way off, as in the parable of the prodigal. The Moslems always have a claim to His love because they have always kept the first and greatest commandment. Islam is the only non-Christian religion, besides Judaism, that is theistic. The minarets of Aurangzeeb, at Benares, typify the witness for one thousand years of God's personality and unity in India.

"Again, we know that God loves them because He is not left without a witness. The Koran testifies in scores of passages to the chapter of Jesus and His place in human history. There are many references to the gospel record.

"The history of missions to Moslems is the story of a father running out to meet the prodigal. The head cannot say to the feet, 'I have no need of thee.' How weary, torn, bloodstained were the feet that ran out on Christ's errands of love to meet these prodigals. Raymond Lull, in the thirteenth century; Henry Martyn and his followers in the Near East; the pioneers in Persia, Arabia, Afghanistan, India and North Africa. Such devotion can only be explained by the constraining love of the Crucified.

"Lastly, we know that God loves these Mohammedans because today they are more accessible, more responsive than ever before. We face a new Moslem world, whose dimensions have been measured, whose gateways have been thrown wide open, and where freedom of the press and of speech have become realities.

"Islam today is not merely a challenge to faith or a refute and reproach to Christian apathy, but an appeal for sympathy and love and the outpouring of lives in sacrificial service."—Ex.

PROFIT IN TIMBER GROWING.

In the August number of our Canadian Forest and Outdoors, there is an article which estimates the value of timber as a crop. It is optimistic, decidedly so, and yet, under favorable conditions, we believe the estimated profit might easily be possible. The writer, E. A. Sherman, of the United States Forest Service, figures on the planting of 3,160 acres in 1924 and the value of the crop in 1974. The cost of planting is placed at $2.94 per acre; and after allowing $75,000 for interest, $53,000 for fire protection and administration, $15,000 for selling, marking and scaling, and $17,000 for insurance, the cost totals $160,000. He estimates that in 1974 there will be a yield of 20,000 feet board measure per acre, or 63,200,000 feet board measure in all, which at $15 for 60,000 M. will yield a total of $900,000, or a net profit in fifty years of $740,000. Of this, $90,000 would be put into forest road construction, $225,000 would go to the county, and $435,000 would go to the government. We suppose that some of our forestry experts would be inclined to discount Mr. Sherman's figures, but even if we admit that the financial returns might not be quite so good as estimated, we have the other advantages which Mr. Sherman has not estimated of a shelter belt for a great stretch of country, the added scenic value of a beautiful forest and its commercial possibilities as a tourist attraction. Ontario and most of Canada may profitably consider the advantage of replanting many thousands of denuded acres, some of which are wholly impossible as farm land. Each township and county may well consider this matter.

WHAT THE WORLD WANTS.

The secret of what we want is, I fancy, just this: a sort of new perception of what Jesus Christ would do if He walked down the streets of London or Paris or Berlin. Let us rescue Him from the artists, from the plaster saints, from the people who have never understood Him. Let us bring Him out into the turmoil, shame, bitterness, vice, sordidness, brutality, and heart-burning passions of our great towns. And as we look at the shining glory of His stainless figure, let us say: "Son of man, Son of God, what are you going to do about this?" And then, before He can answer, let us kneel down and say: "What do you want us to do about this?" If we should just happen to do that, we should become such mighty men that we could touch the issues of the new age with a living power."—Lynn Harold Hough, D. D.

PRESIDENT SWAM IN POTOMAC.

John Quincy Adams, when President of the United States, made it a regular practice during the summer to swim in the Potomac in the early morning. The following quotation from the "Autobiography of Thurlow Weed," the journalist and politician, will give us a glimpse of John Quincy Adams at one of his favorite sports: "One June morning I saw a gentleman in nankeen pantaloons and a blue pea-jacket walking rapidly from the White House towards the river. This was John Quincy Adams, the President of the United States. I moved off to a respectable distance. The President began to disrobe before he reached a tree on the brink of the river, where he deposited his clothes, and then plunged in head first, and struck out fifteen or twenty rods, moving rapidly and turning occasionally on his back, seeming as much at ease in that element as upon terra firma. Coming out, he rubbed himself thoroughly with napkins, which he had brought for that purpose in his hand. The sun had not yet risen when he had dressed himself and was returning to the presidential mansion."

However, John Quincy's morning sport did not always end so happily. One morning he went swimming with his son John and his servant Antoine. Their small, leaky boat sank and the President narrowly escaped drowning, besides losing most of his clothes. The servant, who had lost all his clothes, made his way to the White House to order a carriage, while the almost-naked President hid under a bank of the Potomac.

A BRITISH OPINION OF BRYAN.

It is difficult to analyze the secret of Mr. Bryan's power over vast audiences. That power was almost magical. It was due, in part, to his singularly impressive personality and to his magnificent voice. But it was the impression of sincerity and of deep earnestness which he conveyed to his hearers that kindled them and swayed them at his will. There was little knowledge and little reasoning in his most famous and most effective addresses. They were rather sermons than speeches; they were turgid and full of metaphors not more proper than that which made his political fortune; but they were directed with a skill which was instinctive to the minds and to the feelings of excited crowds. Few speakers knew so infallibly what was just the right note to strike at the right moment. Bryan's flow of words was inexhaustible and, if they were not always the best words or always rightly applied, they were good enough, for they almost invariably served their purpose. He may have changed the particular objects of his invective from time to time, but they were always objects abhorred and detested by the farmers and the less-educated classes of the Middle West and of the South, and whatever they were, from gold currency to modernism, he assailed them with the vehemence of a crusader. Unquestionably, he attacked some real abuses, but he attacked them in the wrong way, and probably he delayed by the intemperance of his advocacy reforms which he was seeking to promote.—London Times.

Thomas had his doubts. He was not at Church one night when Jesus came and manifested Himself to His disciples. And so Thomas still had his doubts.

A REMARKABLE AGE.

The present is a unique, a remarkable age. Unsettled conditions, a general state of unrest, seem to prevail in all countries. It may be that the same conditions, upon a smaller scale and in different ages and nations, have existed before; but so stupendous an unrest, tending toward revolutionary upheaval, seems to be a peculiar distinction of the present time. "Many are running to and fro"; old foundations are crumbling; the fetters and chains of the past are being broken; and, certainly, "knowledge is on the increase." While such a condition is painful, who can say that it is harmful? Feudalism, landed proprietorship, "the divine right of kings," were swept away by a general unrest of the masses, culminating in a general upheaval. Under the oppressive yoke of tyrants, the volcano simmered for centuries, and then came the eruption.—James A. Allen.

HUMPHREY.

George Humphrey was born in Cambridge, England, February 15, 1844. He came to the United States when a boy and spent most of his life on the farm in Niagara County, N. Y. In 1862 he enlisted in the nineteenth battery of the U. S. Army for three years' service. He was killed in an automobile accident in California August 5, 1925.

Just four years before his death he was united in marriage to his third wife by the writer. She was killed with him in the accident. His remains were returned to New York and buried in the Orangeport cemetery. Funeral services by the writer. R. H. PEEL.

COFFMAN.

Miss Barbara Frances Coffman, whose home was near Luray, Va., died August 14, 1925. She was 71 years, 11 months, and 2 days old. Sister Coffman had been a consistent member of Leaksville Christian Church almost twenty years. She was loved and held in high esteem by all who knew her. She is survived by two sisters and by many other relatives. The funeral services were held in the Coffman home, where one of her sisters still resides, at 3 P. M. on Sunday, August 16, 1925, and the remains were laid to rest in the Coffman cemetery nearby. The writer, a former pastor of Miss Coffman, officiated at the services.

R. P. CRUMPLER.

NICEWANDER.

Nelson Lynwood Nicewander, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Moody Nicewander, of Harrisonburg, Va., died August 12, 1925, at the age of 1 month and 3 days. The funeral was conducted at Antioch Christian Church August 13th, by the writer, pastor of the child's parents.

R. P. CRUMPLER.

HOLMES.

Miss Eliza Holmes, daughter of William and Nancy Holmes, was born April 28, 1847; died August 15, 1925; a devout member of the Christian Church at Pope's Chapel, Franklin County, N. C., where the burial services took place at 3 P. M. August 16th.

Her sister, Miss Lou Holmes, died June 10, 1925, and was buried in the same cemetery. These maiden sisters lived together on their farm near Pope's Chapel for many years. Many friends followed their remains to the cemetery.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

By Rev. S. M. Lynam.

Five-Hundred-Dollar Scholarships.—

President T. F. Marshall, of Glendale College, says that he has so far been unable to find daughters of ministers to whom a five-hundred-dollar scholarship appeals. Glendale is a fully accredited junior college situated in the suburbs of Cincinnati, and if there are any daughters of ministers to whom such a five-hundred-dollar scholarship would appeal he would like very much to hear from them. Advertisements have been placed in eight Church papers, and more than three hundred letters written without securing a candidate. This, it seems to us, is an excellent opportunity for some minister's daughter, and one well worth looking into.

Many Forest Fires.—

The extreme dry weather is responsible, it is believed, for the large number of forest fires in the various parts of the country recently. The flames have given Grandfather Mountain, in North Carolina, a close shave, and the fire fighters of several great lumber companies have been busy fighting a great scorching monster along a four-mile front in the Dismal Swamp of the same State. In the big woods of Michigan, more than a dozen forest fires have done inestimable damage. From all parts of the nation come reports of great losses due to forest fires. It seems, too, that colleges are coming in for their share of the trouble. Emory University and Agnes Scott College, both of Georgia, have suffered.

Bill Nye Honored.—

At Fletcher, N. C., the friends and former neighbors of Bill Nye, the celebrated humorist, held a memorial celebration and unveiled a granite shaft in his memory, and a boulder with a bronze tablet on it which marks the last resting-place of the humorist. The Calvary Episcopal Church was packed to overflowing on August 23d for this service, and the rector, Dr. Clarence S. McClellan, delivered a sermon based on the text engraved on Nye's tombstone (Jer. 31:13). The oldest son of the humorist, Frank Wilson Nye, was present, and spoke in behalf of the Nye family. An excursion was made to Buck Shoals, the old Nye home. It was a fitting tribute to a very great man whose lifework was that of making the world more pleasantly liveable.

Peruvian Methodists Build Church.—

The Methodist congregation of Lima, Peru, have just dedicated the first Church of that denomination in that country. There are in Peru two or three other Churches for Europeans, but for the most part the Protestant denominations meet in rented halls. Few of us ever thought how little South America is yet touched by the ideals which have aided in shaping the Northern continent. There is much said these days about the business possibilities of South America, and they are great, but the possibilities for genuine sacrificial labor in the erection of ideals is just as great, and we need, too, to touch, as Christians, the business methods of our fellow-citizens and ourselves, and purify them by causing them to accord with the great ethical principles taught by Jesus. In this way we can win South America. It is not a land for exploitation; it is a land to be developed and given the ideals of Christ, and our business men could, if they would, be powerful missionaries for good.

North Carolina's Contribution to Crime.—

North Carolina contributed somewhat to the nation's crime wave. During 1924 there were 299 homicides, of which 94 were white persons, 201 negroes, and four Indians. According to the State prison report, thirteen persons were committed for murder in 1924, seventy-nine for second-degree murder, forty-five for manslaughter, and one for infanticide, of which eight murderers were electrocuted. This record, while not so bad as some States, is one of which the Christian people of the State should be thoroughly ashamed. Every possible effort should be made to eliminate the vast amount of crime being committed in this country constantly. Were the people of the Churches to support squarely the laws of the land, so much crime as now exists would be made impossible. Efforts should be made to get at the trouble at its source. The people must cease to create criminals, and whether we admit it or not, this is exactly what society is constantly doing when it allows its children to grow up under crime-producing conditions and in ignorance of the better things of life. We make them criminals often times and then electrocute them for what they cannot help being.

United Church Can Use Ministers.—

According to the New Outlook, the publication of the United Church of Canada, the often-expressed fear that the new organization could not use the available ministers is groundless. Within one year all the ministers of the Church will be employed, and the Church will be calling for more. The publication points out that in so large a Church as the United Church of Canada, about 125 ministers either are called by death or retire every year, and that the colleges of the Church can do no more than supply these naturally caused vacancies. It goes on to say, too, that the work of expansion has been materially held up by the negotiations looking toward union, and that work will now go on apace, absorbing in it many ministers. Many of the younger men can be sent to the West, too, where the work has been curtailed since before the war. The New Outlook believes that the ministers of the Church will easily be supplied with charges by the new organizatoon, although much duplication of effort will be eliminated in the merger of the three denominations into the United Church. The Methodist, Congregationalist, and the greater portion of the Presbyterian Churches entered the United Church of Canada. This move was one of the great outstanding movements in Church history, and marks an epoch in Church life.

Atlanta Prison Full.—

More rigorous enforcement of the dry laws has about filled up the Atlanta Federal prison with notables. More than three thousand are now enjoying the hospitality which Uncle Sam so lavishly metes out to them. The dining-hall is working hard to feed its host of boarders, and dinner is served in three shifts. Uncle Sam has been troubled some of late, however, to know what to do with some of his fashionable boarders when they check out of his hotel at Atlanta. For 141 of them the problem has been solved, now that their deportation papers have arrived. Among the notables who are to be handed a free ocean voyage when their term expires are George Remus and Marcus Garvey. George Remus is the well-known millionaire bootlegger of Cincinnati. He is to be set at liberty on September 2d. Remus intends to fight the deportation decision, arguing that his father became a naturalized citizen of this country, and so made him a citizen. He came from Germany here. Marcus Garvey is the famous West Indian negro who is serving a term for using the mails to defraud his fellow-negroes. Garvey is the self-styled "President-General of the Republic of Africa." He has no grounds on which to fight deportation, but his supporters in New York and elsewhere are making an effort to have his criminal record wiped out and so make it possible for him to return. Let us hope that the West Indies have to keep their negroes to themselves. We don't need such additions as Marcus Garvey. The other 139 to be deported are, for the most part, bootleggers and counterfeiters. A count of the prisoners in the Atlanta prison reveals the very interesting fact that 52 per cent of the counterfeiters now enjoying the prison's hospitality are foreigners, and while bootleggers are some more American, the foreign element in their ranks is a large one. There is a boarder at the prison which we must keep when he comes to liberty, and that is Warren T. McCray, the former Governor of Indiana, sent to Atlanta for attempting to sell pardons. He is the outstanding man in the prison. He edits the prison paper, teaches a great Sunday School class, and is the spokesman for the men. Booth Tarkington has made him the hero of a story, "The Man Who Found Himself." This story has been screened and will appear at the prison soon. The friends of Mr. McCray are agitating for a pardon in his behalf.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Are you ready for Conference? Have you done all you purposed since last Conference?

THE CHRISTIAN SUN is the best and most powerful home missionary in the field. Give it your support.

Don't wait till conference to renew your subscription to THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Let this year be noted for handing in new subscriptions.

A conference of the members of First Christian Church, Richmond, Va., is called to meet Friday evening at 8:30 o'clock to consider some important business.

We understand that several ministerial students are planning to enter Elon College this fall, two of them coming from our youngest Church, at Lynchburg, Va.

Mr. C. D. Harton, of Henderson, N. C., father of Mr. W. R. Harton, our Church collector and Sunday School secretary, called at THE SUN office the first of this week.

Rev. C. C. Ryan, D. D., preached fine sermons at the First Christian Church, Richmond, Va., last Sunday morning and evening. The congregation was much pleased.

Mr. W. A. Newman and representatives of his family, of Henderson, N. C., were in the city this week on a visit to his brother, J. H. Newman, of 1419 West Main Street. Mr. Newman also made a visit to THE SUN office.

We were in error in the "Notes and Personals" column last week in stating that Rev. A. F. Iseley's funeral was conducted by his pastor, Rev. J. F. Apple. Rev. J. F. Apple assisted in the funeral, but his pastor was Rev. P. H. Fleming, who was in charge.

Rev. V. T. Crawford has accepted the call recently extended him by the First Christian Church of Winchester, Va. Bro. Crawford has done a splendid work at Elm Avenue, Portsmouth. He hopes the climate of the Virginia Valley will agree with Mrs. Crawford's health.

Rev. L. E. Smith, D. D., pastor of Christian Temple, Norfolk, and president of the Southern Christian Convention, recuperated during the month of August at Natural Bridge, Va., and returned to Norfolk September 1st feeling much improved in strength for the many tasks confronting him.

The many friends of Dr. J. W. Wellons, who is serving as chaplain in the Masonic and Eastern Star Home of Greensboro at this time, will be sorry to learn that he had a fall recently which bruised him up quite considerably. He is doing nicely, however, and will soon be himself again. Bro. Wellons will be 100 years old January 1st.

How to get the news from the Churches: First, give the news and things of interest from your own Church; if you do this, some other interested Church worker will compensate by giving the news from his Church. Second, already you are receiving many items; will you repay the debt you owe these faithful ones who have been contributing items of news?

Men prepared for service are in demand. And now is the time to make the decision. Seek the best opportunities with the design to qualify yourself better to serve. Many persons who have been in the lead are being side-tracked because they have not kept apace. They have sought preferment rather than preparation. You seek preparation and the Church will seek you!

In the death of Rev. C. A. McDaniel, of New Jersey, recently, many SUN readers lose a dear acquaintance and a good friend. He served our Winchester, Va., Church as a beloved pastor and made many friends in the Virginia Valley Conference. Many of our Burlington people remember him as the efficient leader of song while assisting the pastor, Dr. Lankford, in a series of meetings some years ago.

Mrs. Bertha S. Sternberger, widow of the late Emanuel Sternberger, of Greensboro, has established a loan fund of $100,000.00, the income of which is to be used to aid deserving young men and women to secure an education in colleges. No interest is to be charged on the loans, but they are to be paid in a reasonable time. For the first twenty-five years, this benefaction is limited to the citizens of Guilford County, N. C. Any who are interested in this fund should apply to Julius W. Cone, Greensboro, N. C.

THE SUN'S editor feels that he sustains the loss of a dear friend in the death of Rev. A. F. Iseley, of Alamance County. While a growing deafness and feeble health had kept Bro. Iseley from active work in the pastorate the past few years, there was no minister amongst us who loved his Church better and rejoiced more in its spiritual power and activities than did dear Bro. Iseley. There are scores and hundreds in the circle of SUN readers who held him in reverential esteem and who found in him a true friend and father in Israel.

The committee of the Southern Christian Convention prepared, and has had printed, comprehensive blanks for the use of Churches and Conference secretaries. If these should be used by the Church secretaries and pastors, a mind of information not heretofore given would be made available. These blanks should be made out in duplicate, one to be sent to Conference, the other filed by the Church for future reference and for history. For blanks, send to THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

Rev. V. T. Crawford, of our Elm Avenue Church, Portsmouth, has been tendered the call, and has accepted, to the pastorate of Winchester, Va., Church, becoming successor there to Rev. J. F. Morgan, who, on October 1st, goes to the pastorate of Rosemont and Berea Churches. Bro. Crawford has served with great acceptance our Elm Avenue Church, and we are sure the people there give him up with great reluctance. Rosemont and Berea rejoice that they are to have soon the enthusiastic and consecrated services of Bro. Morgan.

We quote the following from the Burlington News: "Dr. W. T. Walters, pastor of the First Christian Church at Richmond, Va., has been elected as field secretary for Elon College and will enter upon his duties on the 1st of October. He has moved his family to Burlington, and will make this place his home. He will live at 604 East Davis Street, and is moving in today. Dr. Walters is a brother of Dr. C. M. Walters, of Burlington. He is one of the leaders in the Christian Church, and was elected as field representative of Elon College because of his wide field of acquaintance and because of his executive and business ability. He has resigned his pastorate in Richmond. We welcome him to our city."

Why? It used to be said that THE CHRISTIAN SUN did not have any contributors. That was assigned as a reason for not subscribing and the consequent lack of support. No sane person will allow himself to even think of such an excuse at the present time. In last week's issue, there were more than a dozen different persons, with articles from a half-column to three columns, to say nothing of selections offered by them to emphasize their views. Take your pencil and run through the issue and count for yourself. What is said of last week's issue will be confirmed by any regular issue. On this imaginary basis, some have said they did not subscribe, nor ask their parishoners to subscribe. Is it not time to face about?

"I would like THE SUN even better than I do, and it would be far more interesting to many of us, if it carried more Church news and had more contributions from the pastors," quoth a good friend recently, voicing a sentiment expressed by many and quite often. Now, if that friend or any other brother or sister or father or mother will tell THE SUN'S editor how to induce the pastors to write more often from their fields or about the work of the Church, then a liberal reward, or even a fat stipend will be awarded to that benefactor. Many of our pastors and wide-awake laymen have high, holy, thrilling themes and thoughts of power and progress for the Church that the Church paper ought to have, but it seems powerless to secure them.

The following from the Norfolk Virginian-Pilot, Sunday, August 30th, comes as a shock and brings deep grief to the heart of the editor, who held in highest esteem the deceased—a noble Christian woman, most loyal, faithful and true to Church, husband and loved ones: "Mrs. Edna Pierce Truitt, aged thirty-five, wife of the Rev. John G. Truitt, pastor of the First Christian Church, died yesterday afternoon at 1:06 o'clock at a local hospital after a brief illness. Mr. and Mrs. Truitt were married June 18th of last year, and perhaps no death in years has cast a greater gloom over the community and aroused as much sympathy for husband, parents and sisters. Mrs. Truitt, though young, had led a very active life and enjoyed the best of health. Mrs. Truitt was director of the junior choir, superintendent of the Christian Endeavor Society, superintendent of the Young People's Missionary Society, a teacher of one of the Sunday School classes and a member of the Young People's Auxiliary of the First Christian Church, and prior to her marriage had been a teacher in the city public schools. She had a large circle of friends in addition to the members of her Church. Born in Norfolk, a daughter of S. W. and Mrs. Fannie Pitt Pierce, of Nansemond County, she was a life-long resident of this city. Besides her husband and parents, Mrs. Truitt is survived by a young daughter, Frances Elizabeth Truitt, and six sisters, Mrs. Robert B. Wood, Mrs. M. L. Bryant, Miss Lula L. Pierce, Miss Fannie May Pierce, Mrs. Edward T. Jones, and Mrs. S. K. Beaser, all of this city. The body will be taken from the home of her parents, 201 Poplar Avenue, to the First Christian Church Monday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock for funeral services. Burial will be in the family lot in Riverside Cemetery."

Be sure to reserve the date and attend your Conference this year.

CHURCH SECRETARIES AND OTHERS.

Two weeks ago, there appeared in THE SUN an editorial about Conference secretaries. Our attention is now directed to Church secretaries. These are of little less import to Church life and expansion than Conference secretaries.

The real history of a community or of a people is written in terms of the Church and Church life. Some one has convincingly pointed out that when the true history of our civilization is written it will simply be His story. And no institution extant tells His story as does the Church.

How very important, then, it is that the record of each local Church be kept accurately and securely. There is no officer in the local Church who should be chosen with more care and wisdom than the recording secretary. For in his records are to be found the events and incidents of most salient worth and weight in the community. The chief purpose, however, in calling attention to the matter here and now is to offer a suggestion.

The Christians, as designated by and included in the Southern Christian Convention, now have a perfectly safe place for the deposit and keep of their valuable records and documents. In the Carlton Library, of Elon College, we have a fireproof, safely guarded, and in every way secure place for our Church books, records and denominational documents. Why should not our Church avail themselves of this haven of safety and security for their records, and when a record book is filled, or supplanted with another, deposit the same in the fire-proof vault of this library? All our valuable Church documents and records should be placed in this vault. Here they will be safe. And with them there placed, the future historian of the Christian Church would find rich and abundant material for the history that will one day be written.

In this way, the Carlton Library will become, as it should, a very valuable asset, not to Elon College only, but to the whole Christian Church. Let all Christians who have valuable records, chronicles and documents pertaining to our Church life, send them for safe-keeping and future reference to the Carlton Library, Elon College, N. C.

REV. ASA FRANKLIN ISELEY.

Rev. Asa Franklin Iseley was born November 8, 1846, and died August 21, 1925; aged 78 years, 9 months, and 13 days. He was the son of Rev. Alfred Iseley, a minister of the Christian Church.

On April 13, 1876, he was united in marriage to Miss Sallie Foster, and to them were born seven children. His wife and five children survive him.

Towards the close of the War Between the States, he entered the service of the Confederate Army and was a member of Company B, Eighth Regiment, Junior Reserves, North Carolina troops.

In the early seventies he attended the Graham Collegiate Institute, then under the management of Drs. W. S. and D. A. Long. He was licensed to the gospel ministry in 1874, and was ordained an elder in the Christian Church at New Elam, November 18, 1887. For more than fifty years he served as a Christian minister.

At the death of his father, in 1876, he took charge of his father's pastorate for the remainder of that Conference year, serving Union, Bethlehem and Pleasant Hill Churches. He afterwards served as co-pastor of these Churches, with Rev. D. F. Jones, who later was sent as a missionary to Japan.

In addition to the above-named Churches, he served as pastor other Churches during his ministry, among which were New Light, Clover Orchard, Apple's Chapel, Hines' Chapel, Mt. Zion, Concord, Shallow Ford, Kellam's Grove, Big Falls, Happy Home, and several mission points. He was often called upon to officiate at marriage and to conduct funerals. Perhaps no minister of the Christian Church married more people or buried more dead than did he during his more than half a century of service as a minister.

In addition to his services as a minister, he taught school for some years in Alamance and adjoining counties. As a minister, teacher, and citizen, he was unassuming, painstaking, and careful. He loved his home, his community, his Church, and was faithful to duty as he saw it in all the walks of life. When very feeble, and, doubtless, knowing the end of his earthly pilgrimage was near, he desired to preach one more sermon, and thus tell again the wondrous story of Christ and His love. And when he fell asleep in the early morning hours of August 21st, we felt that he had entered upon a well-earned rest and had gone to be with God.

The funeral services were conducted by the writer from Bethlehem Christian Church. Rev. J. F. Apple, Dr. W. A. Harper, and Dr. Alexander took part in the services. The interment was in the Bethlehem Church Cemetery.

The large attendance at the funeral and the many and beautiful floral tributes spoke in unuttered language the great esteem in which he was held.

A Christian soldier, fighting the good fight of faith, has answered the last roll-call of time and entered upon a well-earned rest. Sweet be his sleep till Jesus bids him arise on the resurrection morn. P. H. FLEMING.

According to figures compiled by A. L. McCaskill, collector of customs, $14,516,762 worth of goods were exported from that port. North Carolina should make an effort to develop what facilities she has as a seaport State.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

BEGINNING RIGHT.

God's beginnings of vital issues and world movements are never grandiose or spectacular. They are small, insignificant at the time, scarcely noticeable. A particular instance of this was the beginning of the gospel in Europe, where it was destined to transform civilization and rewrite the history of mankind. Two men are deflected from their purposed program and plans by a vision in the night to one of them. It was the call of a great need coming to a heart ready and anxious to obey the voice and will of God.

In the new world to him, Paul preaches on the Sabbath, as his custom was. There was not a house full of converts—just one woman; but a beginning in the right direction had geen made. Out of that beginning, small and unostentatious as it was, have grown the Churches and Church enterprises of Europe and America which are doing so much today to Christianize the whole world. Our Church ancestor, of the European world was not a man, but a woman, Lydia, a seller of purple.

We need not fear small beginnings. What we need to fear is, first, that one will not begin in God's way; and, second, that we will remain content with beginning. There is a nightly urge of the gospel, and that urge is ever upward and onward. "Let us press toward the mark of the prize of the high call of God in Christ Jesus our Lord." We should be anxious to begin in God's way, and then press on. Achievement and victory are then assured. J. O. A.

WHAT COLLEGE OFFERS.

The late President Wm. DeWitt Hyde, of Bowdoin College, was one of the ablest college presidents of our day. He will be remembered as the author of a really worthwhile book entitled "Five Great Philosophies of Life." He also made a speech once entitled "The New England Conscience," which brought him considerable notoriety and misunderstanding. However, his estimate of what a college should do for a young man is one of the most satisfying that has yet been written, and we quote it in full:

"To be at home in all lands and all ages; to count nature a familiar acquaintance, and art an intimate friend; to gain a standard for the appreciation of other men's work and the criticism of your own; to carry the keys of the world's library in your pocket, and feel its resources behind you in whatever task you undertake; to make hosts of friends among the men of your own age who are to be leaders in all walks of life; to lose yourself in generous enthusiasm and co-operate with others for common ends; to learn manners from students who are gentlemen, and form character under professors who are cultured—this is the offer of the college for the best four years of your life."

This objective of higher education is certainly subscribed to by THE CHRISTIAN SUN and by the educational institutions of the Christian Church. It costs money to maintain institutions of higher learning. The colleges themselves are expensive to the constituencies that maintain them; and those who become patrons of these colleges find that the cost is quite considerable, in spite of the fact that the student only pays about one-third the cost of his actual education. In view of these facts, it is worthwhile to know the high ideals that actuate the colleges in their work, and, as I have said, the objectives, as outlined by the late President Hyde, are more satisfactory than any we are acquainted with. W. A. H.

POWER IN PRAYER.

Helen Barrett Montgomery has written another great book—her very greatest book thus far, the writer thinks. This year the central committee of the United Study of Foreign Missions celebrates its 25th anniversary by presenting to the public and to mission study groups in particular a small volume entitled "Prayer and Missions." Miss Montgomery has the distinction of having written five of the twenty-five study books presented in the quarter of a century, and certainly none thus far presented equal the present volume.

So far as the book is concerned, it might as well be the study book for home missions or for the Ladies' Aid Society, or for orphanages, or for daily meditation. For it is specifically a book on the power of prayer. While the volume contains some over 200 pages, one feels that it is all too brief, of such deep and thrilling interest in every page.

The book is unanswerable in its argument and proof of the real, vital, power of prayer, not only in missions, but in every phase of Christian activity. One cannot read the volume without realizing what a real asset prayer is in every undertaking for kingdom service. "The science of prayer," the author defines, "is simply to let go of self, and let God do for us what we are powerless to do for ourselves."

But to know this science, and to practice it, is by no means as easy as definition. In fact, "the very hardest lesson for human nature to learn is to commit its all into the hands of a faithful Creator and to look up in simple faith and dependence unto a God who will work in, what we are to work out."

But, however difficult the science of prayer may be, it is worth all the effort, devotion and consecration one may put forth to acquire it.

To realize the worth, one must consider the possibilities of prayer. And these possibilities are nothing less than the possibilities of faith. "Prayer and faith are Siamese twins. One heart animates them both. Faith is always praying. Faith must have a tongue by which it can speak. Prayer is the tongue of faith. Faith must receive. Prayer is the hand of faith stretched out to receive. Prayer must rise and soar. Faith must give prayer the wings to rise and soar. Prayer must have audience with God. Faith opens the door, and access and audience are given. Prayer asks. Faith lays its hand on the thing asked for."

But the author is not content with definition. She recites instance after instance of unmistakable answer to prayer as the vitalizing energy of some of the world's greatest movements, interests and enterprises. One cannot read the book without receiving a fresh impulse, and a new meaning to prayer. J. O. A.

SACRIFICIAL GIVING.

One of the most beautiful literary gems of the Bible is the story of the poor widow who, going into the temple for worship, cast her all into the treasury chest. It mattered nothing at all to Jesus that her gift only amounted to two mites. He unhesitatingly declared that she had given more than all the others, who, out of their abundance, had given much larger gifts. Jesus measures our gifts not by the amount of money actually given, but by the amount of sacrifice entailed in the gift. The reason for this is not hard to find. Jesus evaluated everything in terms of love. And only love prompts to sacrificial giving.

One wonders sometimes how much of real sacrificial giving is being done in our Churches. To bring the matter closer home, how many gifts are we making that are occasioning us real sacrifice? Are we measuring our giving in terms of the amount of money involved, or in the amount of actual sacrifice represented? I expect that most of us would have to admit that we have been counting dollars, rather than the sacrifices that we have made. Only sacrificial giving brings spiritual blessings and spiritual power. I have never found but one class of Christians who realized the truth of the Scriptures—that it is more blessed to give than to receive. To the average professing Christian, these are strange words. He accepts them because they are in the Bible, but for the life of him he cannot see just how they can be true. But wherever you find those who are giving out of real sacrifice, the blessedness of giving has become such a vital and integral part of his giving that he cannot understand the difficulty the man who gives out of his abundance has in understanding this statement of Jesus.

It makes all the difference in the world whether we are stressing large gifts, or loving gifts. There have been men during recent years who have made such large gifts to various causes that their gifts were chronicled and commented upon by every news sheet in the land. Many of us have, doubtless, read the accounts of these large gifts, and wished that we might taste the joy of such munificent giving. If it is the joy of giving we desire, and not the publicity, there is not a Christian in the land who cannot get just as much joy out of giving as the richest millionaire. When you have matched the millionaire in the amount of sacrifice you are willing to make, you will match him in the amount of joy and blessing you will receive.

Most of us think that the need in our Churches is for larger giving. Church boards may need money. Perhaps we should have said Church boards do need money. But what the average Church member needs is the spirit of loving, sacrificial giving. Impoverished Church boards are as nothing compared with the impoverished spiritual lives of so many Church members. There must be a new and larger emphasis placed upon this phase of giving. It must be done not for the sake of the enterprises of the Church, but for the sakes of the individual members of the Church. You may have some wealthy members, or some willing members who will make up the deficit in the Church budget when the end of the year approaches; but they are totally unable to make up the deficit in the spiritual lives of the members who have impoverished themselves through their failure to render loyal, loving, sacrificial service to their Lord. S. C. H.

THE BIBLE AND THE SCHOOL.

Education is a potent factor in civilization. The kind of education is important in Christian civilization. What is taught and who teaches is all-important. Teaching is more than instruction in books. It is the formation of character, and character is what an individual person really is. There are many types of character, for there are many standards of character. The highest type of character is Christian character. That is the only type that will endure. There is national character, but nowhere can we find enduring character without the moral element. Intellectual knowledge of itself can never build up permanent national strength. Greece failed here. Military power defeats itself, as Roman history proves. The only hope of permanent nations is moral character built on biblical principles. Christian civilization is the hope of the world, and that cannot be built without the teachings of Jesus Christ. It is all-important that schools shall be made Christian in their teachers, their discipline and their studies.

The matter of education is all the more important since it deals with immature and susceptible minds. The future public sentiment is in the school-room, and the character of the teacher will reappear in the new generation of thought and conduct. The State is more or less indifferent to the religious character of the teachers in the public schools. Knowledge of literary subjects and methods of instruction are the chief requirements. Church schools are too limited in numbers and funds to counteract the growing influence of the public school over young life. The exclusion of the Bible from the public school has the appearance of toadying to a small class of citizens who are not thoroughly American. The United States says on its gold and silver coins, "In God we trust," and it ought to say as much in its public schools. Business should not recognize God more than education, and the government cannot recognize God without recognizing the Bible. They stand or fall together. The Bible should be read daily in all the public schools of this nation, and opposers should yield or leave the nation. The same standard should be maintained for the American Sabbath. No sect, no religion, should violate the American legal Sabbath. Those who are unwilling to comply with our laws should leave the country. The government is supreme, or it is nothing. It is the bounden duty of the public school to teach obedience to law, and our law is founded upon the teachings of God's Word, and that Word should be read in all schools.

One of the fundamentals in Mohammedanism is their education of the Koran, which is their religious book. Graduation in the Cairo University means a thorough knowledge of the Koran. That is the reason that it is so difficult to change a Mohammedan. They are rooted and grounded in their Bible. All other books take second place in their education and their real life. This nation can do no one thing more fatal to the future than to exclude the Bible from its education. If Christianity leaves its Book out of the school, this Christian civilization is doomed, for it means to leave God out of the public mind. No sectarian interpretation of the Bible should be taught in the public school, but it should be read, and then leave the personal interpretation and application of the Bible to the students as individuals in this great republic. The Word of God, without human explanation, makes its own appeal, and the Holy Spirit applies it to the individual conscience, "for the word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart" (Heb. 4:12). THE NEED OF A UNITED PROTESTANTISM.

This sermonette, by H. W. Gair, in the Christian Evangelist, will be pleasing to a number of readers; hence, it is given complete, as follows:

Jesus Christ was the first great Protestant. He protested against the workings of the ecclesiastical trust that existed when He was upon earth incarnate in the flesh and with the false interpretations of the law of God which had bound uncalled-for burdens upon the people. The doctors of the law and the priests of religion were more concerned about pressing these burdens than teaching the truth as God gave it. It became tremendously hard for people to discover the real truth of God; it was covered up by tradition of men. Jesus Christ seemed to be in a constant clash with the self-righteous sects. The Pharisees were like the extreme fundamentalists of our day; the Sadducees the extreme modernists. It was between these two powerful "sects" that our Lord was crucified.

Protestantism, with its divisions and its Christian liberty, is preferable to a religious trust, without Christian liberty, and it must do more than protest, if it is to play its part in the salvation of the world. It must never cease to protest against sin in high or low places. Its message must be clear-cut against sin. To do its best work, a united program of service is necessary. The divided state has been a severe handicap in the work of advancing the kingdom of God. The Church divided into many sects and parties, with its many creeds, is not according to the will of the Christ. He prayed for Christian unity.

How Can the Church Be United?

The Church has been in a divided state for many centuries; some major divisions, some minor divisions; all believing that the principles of religious truth on their side cannot be surrendered. For any one to claim that it has absolute authority by divine right in all spiritual matters is absurd, whether such claim emanates from the Roman Catholic, Greek Catholic, or from the major Protestant or minor Protestant bodies. Jesus Christ established His Church upon the divine principle of Christian liberty. He gave no one party, creed, or sect the divine right to be absolute rulers of His Church. He made it clear, as did the apostles, that He alone is the Head of the Church, all His followers being "brethren in Christ," with no authority other than to obey His word.

His Church was promised the guidance and the power of the Holy Spirit and those who were baptized into the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost were promised the gift of the Holy Spirit. His disciples were told to "tarry in Jerusalem until they be endued with power from on high."

If the Church is ever united, Jesus Christ will have to be the chief corner-stone. Would it not be a glorious day to see all human and party names that divide His Church laid at the Master's feet and His name raised up and placed upon all Church buildings? His name only designates His people. One of the greatest essentials in the uniting of the Church would be for the denominations to sacrifice the sectarian name for the name of Christ.

Bible the Guide, Christ the Creed.

Of the various creeds, many are born out of controversy. They should be discarded and the divine creed of the Bible accepted, with its emphasis upon the supreme fact of the Christian religion. "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the Living God—not revealed by flesh and blood, "flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." This creed with one supreme article, the fact that Christ is the Son of God.

The whole Church, even in its divided state, agrees that the Bible is the Word of God. It ought to be a sufficient guide for the united Church, without addition or subtraction, and without binding things which are of purely human origin upon the minds and consciences of Christians.

Unity in Essentials.

The Church will need to agree as to what the essentials of the Christian religion are, and accept them as stated in the Bible, allowing the fullest measure of liberty on non-essentials. "In faith, unity; in opinion, liberty; in all things, charity."

There are two essentials in the New Testament; that is, two essential ordinances, baptism and the Lord's Supper, and they should be accepted without change. No council of men has any authority to discard these divine ordinances vouchsafed to the Church by the blessed Master Himself. The Church is commanded to observe them until His return.

What a fine thing if all the Christians, regardless of creed, could meet together at a united Communion service in loving memory of the sacrifice of the Christ on the cross. Have all the ministers take part, assisted by consecrated laymen of the Churches. If unity is ever to take place, it will come at the Lord's table; not at the human debating table. A union consummated by law or force is not unity, not Christian unity for which Christ prayed.

PREPARE FOR THE LARGER WORK.

In our dreams we beheld a preacher who had reached the age of thirty-five and became furiously busy, running hither and thither to various social and civic meetings. And he was turning the cranks and walking in the treadmill of many organizations with great dexterity and endurance. But his library remained unopened, and industrious and knowing spiders wove beautiful films of delicately wrought lace over door and window. His books turned yellow, became worm-eaten and fell out of date. We watched him climbing the mountain of the years. And lo, when he had come to the fiftieth peak he came upon a line which he could not cross. The people who lived there called it the preacher's dead-line. Seeing this line, the minister was vexed and he feared. Then he began to shrink.

Becoming frightened at this, he called to his friends to help him. And they brought him new, fresh, wonderful books full of thoughts, and fine language, and great facts, and colorful imaginations. And we saw that the preacher delved into these books with abandon and enthusiasm. He sat still and read and looked up and looked about him and reflected. And behold! a new life entered his mind and heart, and in the enthusiasm and joy of it he went forth to see whether he could not somehow pass the dead-line. But when he reached the place where he expected to find it, lo! it was gone, and as far as he could see there were green fields and beautiful Churches with open doors, and many eager people were beckoning him to come on. And he went forth in a fresh consecration and entered upon a larger work than he had ever done.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Deacon David McClenny, of Bethlehem Christian Church, was born January 29, 1852, and passed away at his home near Myrtle, Va., at 8:15 P. M. on August 10, 1925, aged 73 years, 6 months, and 12 days. He was the son of David McClenny and Median D. Wright, his wife, both natives of the Myrtle community. He was born, lived, and died in the same house.

The family owned land and lived in Nansemond County, Va., as early as 1704. His ancestors were members of the Baptist Church, one of the families giving the land in which Western Branch Baptist Church now stands. His great-great-uncle, John Gilliam was a lieutenant in the Revolutionary War, and died in the service. His grandfather, John McClenny, was a soldier in the War of 1812; and his father, David McClenny, was one of the seventy mounted men sent from Nansemond County in 1851 to put down the Southampton insurrection, and his oldest son, Edward D., served in the Spanish-American War of 1898.

In 1785, while the question of complete separation of Church and State was before Virginia, the complete separation was championed by Thomas Jefferson, and the people of Nansemond County sent up a petition numerously signed, asking for religious freedom, the county having always been peopled by dissenters—first, Quakers, then Baptists— and among these signers appeared James, Zachariah, Elijah, and William McClenny. James McClenny was a Baptist minister, working in Virginia and Eastern North Carolina, helping to constitute the Baptist Church in Portsmouth, Va. He was the great-grandfather of the subject of this sketch.

David McClenny was born an orphan, and made his way in the world following the God-given occupation of farming, his farm being in the family for more than a hundred years.

While a youth he made a profession of religion, aud, although his family were Baptists, he did not unite with any Church until he had made a study of his Bible for himself; and when he had done this he was convinced that the Christian Church was the one that followed the Bible, and united with Holy Neck Christian Church, that being the nearest one to the place of his residence at that time. After he became a man and returned to his farm, he united with Bethlehem Christian Church near Suffolk while Rev. E. W. Beale was pastor, in 1879. The same year he was elected as collector and treasurer of that Church, holding the office till his death. In 1885 he was elected deacon of this Church in place of Col. William Eley, who had died. He was very active in the building of two houses of worship at Bethlehem, and was anxious to see the present building all paid for before his decease. One of the last things he said was words of instruction about the obligations of the Church.

For more than forty-five years he was a familiar figure at the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference, and very often represented his Church in that body. He was a member of the Southern Christian Convention in Graham, N. C., in 1888, when plans were matured for building Elon College, and he sent all of his sons to Elon to be educated. He had been a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN SUN for over fifty years.

On November 12, 1873, he was married to Miss Ann Mariah Holland, daughter of Dixon and Mary Eliza (Sumner) Holland. His wife preceded him to their heavenly home by four years and twenty-nine days. He leaves four sons —W. E. and J. D., of Suffolk, Va.; Sydney L., of Myrtle, Va.; and Edward D., of Marion, S. C.; also two little granddaughters, Nelle Miles McClenny, of Marion, S. C., and Miss Ann McClenny, of Suffolk, Va.; one sister, Miss Mary C. McClenny, past 81 years; one half-brother, Mr. Jesse W. Copeland, Lammis, Va.; and one half-sister, Mrs. J. C. Byrd, Holland, Va.; and several nieces and nephews.

In widdle life he was an active Master Mason in Purdie Lodge, Windsor, Va., for many years.

Hie funeral service was held in Bethlehem Church on August 12th, conducted by his pastor, Rev. Dr. W. D. Harward, who was assisted by Drs. N. G. Newman and W. W. Staley. The large auditorium was crowded by his relatives and friends. Favorite hymns were sung by the choir, the altar was banked with flowers, and, after the services in the Church, the remains were conveyed to Suffolk and laid to rest by the side of his wife in Cedar Hill Cemetery, and everybody felt and many said, "'a good man is gone."

ELON LETTER.

The Elon Christian Church has been enjoying a special thrill, respecting its finances for next year. For many years, the Church has operated under a budget and has employed the every-member canvass. This year it was decided to go on with the budget as in former years, but to introduce what is popularly known as "Church Honor Day" for the underwriting of the budget.

The plan that was employed looking to this day was a simple one. The Church, in business session, formally voted to institute "Church Honor Day" for this year, and fixed Sunday, August 16th, as "Church Honor Day." The Finance Committee was authorized to take such steps as they might deem best suited to prepare the membership for the occasion.

Accordingly, five letters discussing the plan of "Church Honor Day" and the scriptural basis for giving, were sent out to each member. One of these letters also formally presented a budget by items.

On Sunday preceding "Church Honor Day," the pastor, Dr. W. S. Alexander, preached on "Christian Stewardship," and the budget, as submitted by the finance committee, was duly adopted by the Church.

On "Church Honor Day," August 16th, the pastor again preached on "Christian Stewardship," basing his message for this discourse on the biblical methods of stewardship, having on the preceding Sunday discussed stewardship from the standpoint of Christian principles. At 2 o'clock of that day, the pastor and the finance committee, together with the treasurer of the Church, met in the pastor's office, and the membership came and voluntarily made their subscriptions. It was a new experience for our community, and the expressions of satisfaction with it were gratifying indeed. Evidently, the members enjoyed the privilege of voluntarily enlisting in the financial program of the Church.

The Church had previously voted that any who, for any reason, could not be present and make their subscriptions in person should be waited on privately by members of the finance committee and given the opportunity, as in former years, to contribute.

It is safe to say that the Church here has never been able to reach its budget so easily as this year, nor in as fine a spirit of co-operation and satisfaction.

The every-member canvass has certain fine features, in that it necessitates that the group of workers shall visit the other members. It has produced excellent results, but I do not hesitate to say that the feeling of satisfaction and voluntary co-operation which inevitably are inherent in the "Church Honor Day" method are also very desirable qualities and assets of lasting spiritual value.

BETHLEHEM LETTER.

The second annual session of the Bethlehem Chautauqua and School of Methods, which was held Angust 10th to 16th, was very good, considering the extremely hot weather and no rain to settle the dust.

While the registration was not as high as we anticipated, due largely to the very limited amount of publicity work done, yet it was larger than last year, being one hundred and twenty-two. Of course, this did not represent the number that availed themselves of the benefits of the school, as many more attended the classes and the evening lectures.

The morning worship was conducted by various persons and was very helpful indeed.

Mr. Hermon Eldredge talked to the young people each day on the subject: "What Shall I Do With My Life?" At another hour, his work was on the organization and administration of the Church school. On Wednesday and Friday nights he lectured on the "Origin and History of the Church." As on other occasions, Bro. Eldredge put life and vitality as well as instruction in all of his work, to the very great delight of all who heard him.

Dr. W. H. Denison, of Dayton, Ohio, was another welcome guest to this section of the country. He came with the message of "Stewardship," which supplied a long-felt need in this Southern work of the Christian Church, and we hope that enough folks heard it gladly to carry it to the extreme borders of our work, that it may bring forth fruit not many days hence. His presentation of the subject of "Church and Pastoral Problems" was unique, opening up to the pastors and laity alike the cause for non-efficiency and the business and spiritual affairs of the Church. His lecture on Tuesday night was very fine and seemed to be appreciated by all, but his consecration service Sunday morning was the climax of all his work. If you will not tell him, I will whisper a secret in your ear: We want him here in our next Summer School of Christian Education.

Bro. F. C. Lester, of Franklin, Va., came all the way down here alone, in order to teach us things both new and old from the Bible, and he certainly did his work well; but this was not all he did, for he taught a class in young people's work in the Church and preached an excellent sermon Thursday night to the delight of all. Its substance was great and its length short, which made it the more appreciated.

Miss Pattie Coghill, field secretary, had general supervision of the work and taught a class in children's work. She is one of our wide-awake workers, and always feels she has not done her duty unless she can put her proposition across in a large way—and she usually does it.

Miss Gertrude Browne, field secretary of the Woman's Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention, had charge of the department of missions. Her heart is in the work, and all who were in her classes felt the largeness of the work and got a vision of the needs and importance of the work. She remained here on the field ten days after the other workers had gone home, in order to do some educational and inspirational work, which is very much needed.

Miss Susie Elder had charge of the daily vacation Bible school. She brought sunshine and gladness into the lives of the little folks through her smiling face and manner of training the children. The results of her work were seen in the commencement exercises, which were pleasing to all.

Mr. Jack Dalton, Jr., of Holland, Va., had charge of recreation, and Rev. J. H. Dollar of the happy hour. Rev. E. M. Carter, Wadley, Ala., was elected president, and a committee of five were appointed to boost the school next year. The name was changed from Chautauqua to the "Bethlehem Summer School of Christian Education." The work of each faculty member was certainly appreciated and enjoyed, also very helpful; and there is a standing invitation from this end for them all to come back next year.

Wadley, Ala. S. L. BEOUGHER.

THE SERMON THEME.

The making of a sermon is an exer-recurring problem with the minister. He may not slavishly follow a schedule laid down in the books, nor yet can he always wisely follow his own schedule without interruption, no matter how carefully he has prepared it. While visualizing the spiritual needs of his people and co-ordinating them with the interests that the onward sweep of the kingdom, as represented in the appointed agencies of his communion, is expected to register, he must be ready to interpret to his people at least some of the great current events, in the light of revealed truth.

This wisdom of selection will not be present always, any more than will wisdom in preparation and wisdom in delivery. It is like other forms of wisdom, both as to its presence with the preacher in preparation and delivery and in the subject matter as well as the illustrative material and the application that is made of the message, it must be asked for and should be longed for with its full measure of good fruit.

On a recent Sunday evening, a visiting preacher spoke in one of our leading pulpits on the words of the psalmist: "The gentleness of God hath made me great." The announcement of the text gave the impression that wisdom had been exercised in its selection. The congregation was made up of earnest souls who had come from many walks in life; indeed, the greater number were not communicants of that Church. All were there not to hear the music, excellent as it was; they were not there to exchange greetings with one another, commendable as that might have been; nor were they there to hear a notable preacher, for only a small number had ever heard of the man who was to give the message. They were there in the hope of hearing some great truth expounded that would meet the needs of their souls in the midst of a great city where they were beset on every hand with appeals from the carnal and the material sides of life. They were not disappointed. They were edified. They went away with new strength. The preacher had been wise in selecting his theme and in presenting it in phrase and by illustration and application. The message met the deepest needs of the heart and the soul. There was no doubt left in the mind of any hearer that "the heart of the Eternal is wonderfully kind," and that the compassion of God encompasses mankind and screens from danger, while it creates conditions conducive to the highest possible spiritual development, and the greatest measure of human happiness.

In the case mentioned, the preacher knew little or nothing of the congregation he was to face. He had simply employed good judgment seasoned with spiritual discernment. He was not mistaken in the belief that the announcement of his subject would be like the opening of the vast containing ointment of a sweet smell. On another occasion, with equal wisdom, he would have chosen a militant theme or some other far removed from the gentle and unobtrusive, confident word of the psalmist.

But on this calm Sunday evening at the close of a day that had been glorious with sunshine and free from local or national distractions, with no great event calling for thought or action, his mind co-acting with his heart, he chose a subject that comported with the high day in the galaxy of days, with the interim in the tide of affairs, and with the hour of all hours suited to perfection of praise—the very hour of which Mary A. Lathbury sang—

"Day is dying in the West,
Heav'n is touching earth with rest;
Wait and worship while the night
Sets her evening lamps alight through all the sky."

The pastor will frequently find, upon visualizing his congregation in advance, and by taking into account conditions that he knows may obtain in the world about him, that his task, at this point, will not be so difficult as at first supposed. He will not be wise, however, to stop short of this close-up analysis of the situation. A chance theme is like shooting a bow at a venture. This does not necessarily imply that the choice of a great subject, one that goes to the heart of our Christianity, is not appropriate under nearly all circumstances. So true is this that practically all of the great preachers make it a rule to preach, at least once a year, on the cardinal doctrines of the Church, and to be ready, at all times, to present a profound subject on the shortest notice. All of which signifies that another element essential to the selection of a theme is what Dr. James Black, in The Mystery of Preaching, characterizes as "the cultivation of the homiletic mind."—Evangelist.

THE MOTHER'S POINT OF VIEW.

Among the many letters that have reached us in response to an invitation to the mothers of America to give expression to their observations on the question of the "Children and the Church," few deal with the problem in so practical a way as the following, from a Christian mother in Cochrane, Wis., to which we give space below:

"As the mother of three children, one of whom is now married and the other two in college, and a Church-worker whose privilege it has been to work in several different Churches, I have had opportunity to observe young people. We are all creatures of habit, and habits are formed much earlier in life than many people suppose. The young child is a trouble-maker in Church. He will wriggle and make a disturbance. Parents try taking them a few times, but to the cynosure of all eyes is not an agreeable experience. Children, even very young ones, are perfectly aware that in Church they are the masters, and no child likes to sit still for a long time. They understand very little of the sermon, but some of the best Christians I know were converted when from seven to twelve years of age. Unquestionably, the child, while still young enough to be disciplined, should be taken to Church every Sunday, should be taught that Sunday is the Lord's Day, not his. As Solomon said, 'Train up a child in the way he should go; and when he is old, he will not depart from it.' That is just as true today as when it was written; but the parents have departed from the old ways of living. Sunday School in our Church meets at 10 o'clock (two hours after business hours on week days), yet the universal reason given for non-attendance is late rising. Selfishness, love of ease, lack of early training show all too plainly in this generation. Physical and mental giants, but moral pygmies are the result of much of our boasted education machinery. If America is to be a God-fearing nation tomorrow, something must be done today.

"There is only one way to do it. Awaken people to the fact that the doors of our Churches are fast closing because there is no one who cares to go; and in each small corner where we stand, let us fight for the future. I was told by a pastor of an Evangelical Church in Western Wisconsin that the denomination is trying the plan of merging Sunday School and Church services, in an effort to hold their young people, who in many cases have been lost to the Churches through the preaching of the German language, which they but partly understand. No wonder these young people say, 'Church is only for the old folks.' "

There is a great deal of common sense in what this candid mother writes. It should not be forgotten that there are thousands of other mothers who may have had a like experience and who have not hesitated to apply the remedy. Still, it occurs to us that a little quiet talk with the child or children at home, on behaviour in Church, would simplify matters and pave the way to good results.—Christian Herald.

FOR GRACE TO GO BACK.

When I flee to the mountain, the sea and the glen
To breathe the charmed air of free nature again,
It is not to escape from the bondage and lash
Evermore—from the tension, the toil and the clash;
But here to pray God for the strength that I lack
And the grace to go back! Give me grace to go back!

Where the cool breezes kiss me and comfort my soul;
Where the sun's healing touch makes the wounded flesh whole;
Where the deep eyes of nature compassionate gaze
In my own longing eyes with love's solace and praise;
There I know duty lies in the long-trodden track,
And the soul's highest joy is the grace to go back.

To go back with the strength and the smile of the seas,
With the heart of the mountain, the life of the breeze,
With the cheer of the flowers, the peace of the sod,
And the light of Thy face. Grant me this, our God:
To go back to the souls that have such need of Thee,
And who need human cheer as my soul needs the sea.

U. S. WEALTH AND MISSION BOARD DEBTS.

According to the latest computation, the total wealth of the United States stands at the staggering figure of $320,000,000,000. This makes America incomparably he richest country in the world. American Protestant Church members, numbering quite one-fourth of the total population, are said to hold their full proportionate share of this wealth. And yet many of the leading mission boards are at this moment heavily in debt—the Methodist Episcopal, North, to the extent of $3,000,000; the Methodist Episcopal, South, $1,000,000; the Northern Baptist, $1,000,000; the Protestant Episcopal, $900,000, etc.

While individual gifts for altruistic causes of a non-religious nature amount to no less than $2,500,000,000 annually, the total contributions of all American Protestant Christians for foreign missions last year—the largest ever—reached only $40,000,000! If "figures don't lie," what is the truth which such figures as these tell?—Selected.

STEWARDSHIP AND PROMOTION.

WARREN H. DENISON, D. D., Secretary.

Getting Ready.

The success of most enterprises depends upon the time taken and the thoroughness made for preparation. If November and December are to find your Church really studying the whole subject of Christian stewardship, it will take thorough preparation. This time has been set aside by your denomination for the carrying out of that part of your denomination program. We shall be glad to co-operate with pastors, local Church stewardship secretaries, and Conference stewardship secretaries in any way to help have a successful stewardship educational campaign in the Churches.

September 30th.

This is a familiar date to all who know about our Christian Church work. On that date, our denominational year ends. All who have reports to make or funds to send should have them in the mails in time to reach headquarters then.

On that date we shall need the reports from our five Conventions' stewardship secretaries—

New England Convention: Rev. N. H. Heikes, Freedom, N. H.

Metropolitan Convention: Rev. A. W. Sparks, Everett, Pa.

Southern Convention: Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., Elon College, N. C.

Central Convention: Rev. E. A. Watkins, D. D., Urbana, Ill.

Western Convention: Mr. C. E. Ross, McPherson, Kans.

It will, therefore, be necessary for each Conference stewardship secretary to have a full report of the stewardship work of the Conference in the hands of the proper Convention stewardship secretary by the 15th of September. That is close at hand. We hope no secretary will fail us.

Conference Organization.

It has been very gratifying to see the way the various Conferences are revising their constitutions and organizing themselves according to the program of the Christian Church. Such procedure means that, as a Church, we shall get some where in reasonable time. If every Conference will show that spirit of co-operation, how splendid it will be!

Devotion, evangelism and life service, Christian education, missions, stewardship and finance, publications. This is the Conference season, and increasing loyalty is being shown to the denominational program.

Local Church Organization.

Each Church should plan for its organization around five departments, same as the Conferences, except that local Churches do not need the department of publications. The five departments cover and provide for all the work of the local Church. All work may be planned for simplified, be in harmony with the denominational program under the five departments. It fits every type of a Church, makes definite responsibility, simplifies and makes for efficiency. We recommend it to all our Churches.

A Weight of Testimony.

If you are open to conviction, the testimony is convincing. For months our own brethren have been testifying to the blessings of tithing. This column has set forth almost weekly strong testimony and actual experience in their own lives of our people who tithe. Here is one from Rev. Simon A. Bennett, professor in Elon College, one of our ministers known throughout the brotherhood. He says:

"Some systematic method of financing the work of the kingdom is a necessity. Most of us have so many wants that the work of the Church would get little money if we supplied our own wants first. As a student in college, the writer found tithing to be the satisfactory method for the recognition of the stewardship of money. In view of the needs of the Church and the benefits derived from tithing, I believe all Christians would find it a most satisfactory basis for proportionate giving for kingdom work."

FROM PORTO RICO.

The Christian Church of Ponce, Porto Rico, is in the closing week of its daily vacation Bible school. This is the second year, and it is safe to say that we are all enjoying it, teachers as well as pupils. There are seventy-three children enrolled besides the kindergarteners, who are also having a summer session.

The order of the day is as follows: Bell rings at 8:30 A. M., and all form line in the Churchyard and march in to music. Opening exercises consist of Scripture reading, Sunday School hymns, and prayer. Then the pastor tells a Bible story, after which a short song period is enjoyed. Children learn a verse by memory each day. Then all rise and salute the Christian banner. After which they march to their classes.

The larger boys go first to a long table, where paper and pencil are furnished, and they write, from memory, the story the pastor told. The pastor has charge of the Bible seat-work. The girls go to their sewing classes; the younger girls and boys to their manual classes.

When the larger boys finish their work, they go to the home of the pastor, where temporary carpenters' benches, tools, wood, etc., have been furnished, and they thoroughly enjoy an hour's work with the two high school boys, who have had training in carpenter work in school and who have charge of this class.

At 10:30 a play period is enjoyed by all. Then the pastor takes the remaining classes for Bible seat-work. The boys and girls too small to write the story, learn verses and print in colored letters what they learn.

On Friday morning, each pupil recites the portion of Scripture which is required to be learned at home. Record is kept of all Bible seat-and-memory work, and premiums will be given at the time of our closing exercises and exhibit.

I, for one, am glad that the daily vacation Bible school has come into existence. It is proving a help to over one hundred little Ponce children of the Christian Church.

Next week we are to have lectures on Sunday School work. The lecturer is Prof. M. C. Morton, of the Evangelical Seminary of Rio Piedras. We are looking forward with pleasure to these meetings in which the Baptists, Methodists, United Brethren and Christians of Ponce will co-operate.

On the 11th, 12th and 13th of September, our annual Conference will be held. It would be such a pleasure if some of our workers from the homeland could visit the work at that time.

Yours for the Master's cause,

MRS. D. P. BARRETT.

REPORT OF HOME DEP'T SECRETARY.

One cannot fail to be impressed with the wonderful opportunity given to a live, working home department in the Sunday School; still, with our forty-one Sunday Schools of the Convention, only eleven reported last year, with an enrollment of 175. What the home department means to the "shut-ins and shut-outs" who cannot attend the Sunday School sessions can scarcely be estimated. It is the long arm of the Sunday School, an outreach into the surrounding community, giving a sympathetic touch to those faithful members who, in days of health and strength, were active workers, an open door to present workers through which they may pass to unlimited fields of real service.

There is no phase of Sunday School work which operates in a more needy and usually more unoccupied field. What of the opportunities given a home department near our county homes for the aged and infirm? Surely these lives would be brightened by the home department visitors! Many of our firemen, street car employees, members of the police force, and other enforced Sunday workers would be happy to keep in touch with the Sunday School.

Our records prove that not more than 50 per cent of the Church membership is in the Sunday School. Some of the accomplishments of a working home department are the building up of Sunday School and Church service, developing the worker, bringing cheer to darkened homes and lonely lives, increasing Bible study, instituting family altars, assisting parents who help children with Sunday School lessons, opening homes which have been closed to religious influence, and the placing of missionary literature in every home. It has Christ's idea of going after them, and results in turning many nonservice Church members into active Christians. Why not have a home department in your Sunday School?

MRS. R. B. WOOD, Sec'y.

MORE REVERENCE.

When the foundations of a building are destroyed, the roof comes rattling down. When the roots of a tree are starved, the tree withers at the top. Reverence is the foundation of life, and one of the roots of character growth is reverence. Reverence shows itself in a fine respect and esteem for exalted things, places, persons. It is the invisible barrier that keeps the best we know from the debasing hands of commonness. Reverence has ever been the guide of those who have a heart to conserve the highest values and develop the highest ideals through obedience to the very best they know.

Most assuredly we stand in need of the sense of reverence, the recognition of an excellence beyond and above ourselves which claims our homage and devotion. At least, certain signs of irreverence are not far to seek. We see them everywhere—the impatience of people at the restraints of society, the dislike of all assertions of authority, the vanishing of old and beautiful customs of deference in manner and speech, the notion that every man's opinion is as good as another's, the assumed right of every person to make himself the measure of all that he surveys. It is a matter of thanksgiving that we have had so much of reverence in our past life. It has given cohesion and coherence to our communities, and through it we have made our advances in civilization. Through reverence the home has been built and the laws of the land upheld. Take reverence away and a condition of confluent destruction accrues, the home being destroyed, the laws of the land rendered useless. No nation can ever be great in the best sense if it is lacking in reverence. No man can ever attain true greatness without the virtue of reverence. Both nation and individual rise in character as, at some point, they stoop in reverence. Said an Englishman to his son who was leaving home to make his living in London, "My boy, if you wish to stand on your own legs in life, you must first of all learn to go down on your knees." Likewise, nations and individuals must learn to reverence great principles, great ideals, great visions. For both the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom.

We have much need for "more of reverence." How shall it be secured for national life? Every person must begin with himself—reverence in the citizens comprising the nation. In ancient times, the custom in Greek and Roman temples was to have the steps leading up thereto of an uneven number, so that beginning to mount with the left foot, the worshiper, having achieved the top, entered the temple with his right foot foremost. Hence, the ancient command, "Keep thy foot when thou goest to the house of the Lord." Count your steps! Prepare the mind for the devotional exercise! Rush not in where angels fear to tread! We must habituate the mind to receive spiritual impressions. It is a matter of attention, discipline, appreciation. Nothing must be left to chance, nothing to accident, nothing to the impulses of the moment. One must prepare the mind and poise the personality by every legitimate and helpful means, so that the world is seen as the habitation of the Great Presence. Somebody once said to William Blake, "When you see the sun rising, do you not see a disc of fire like a guinea gold piece?" Oh, no," said the poet, "'I see a company of the heavenly host crying, 'Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of Hosts, the earth is full of His glory.' " The very first step in the process of preparation will eliminate from us the tendency to levity that is growing in our midst; and the louder practice of laughing at everything and everybody and every event as if the fabric of life were a tapestry of buffoonery!

Discrimination must go into the quality of our life. There is, of course, a time to laugh. The use of laughter is a test of our reverence. We are to worship only the highest. In "The Revolution in Tanner's Lane," Mark Rutherford makes great use of a very ancient command: "Take heed to thyself that thou offer not thy burnt-offerings in every place that thou seest; but in the place which the Lord shall choose . . . there thou shalt offer thy burnt offerings, and there thou shalt do all I command thee." And then follows one of Rutherford's shrewd and incisive comments thus: "Reserve yourself; discriminate in your worship. Keep your worship for the highest. Do not squander yourself, but, on the other hand, before the shrine of the Lord offer all your love and adoration." The ancient command has traveled down the centuries, and it reaches into life today with the same authority as it did in days of old. Its authority lies precisely in its profound wisdom and necessity. To obey it means elevation of life, refinement, achievement of high ends, no matter what secondary successes are missed. To disregard it is for life to end in futility and vanity. Not everywhere is the dedication to be made, not everywhere the sacrifice to be offered. Only at the shrine of the best are we to pour all our lordliest energies.

Let knowledge grow from more to more,
But more of reverence in us dwell;
That mind and soul according well,
May make one music as before—
But vaster.

MAKING LIFE GREAT.

Last week Paul, the great apostle to the Gentiles, was in Philippi with Silas, a prisoner for his testimony to Jesus Christ. And as he and his companion thrust into the vile inner prison and made as uncomfortable as they could be made by having their feet put in the stocks, were making the old jail ring with that strange new song of Jesus and His love and power to save, a marvelous thing happened. The prison rocked with an earthquake shock and the shackles fell from the prisoners and they were free. And then followed the beautiful scene of the conversion of the jailer to faith in Christ.

But today Paul is in prison again. The Book of Philippians is one of the epistles of the imprisonment. It used to be thought to have been written quite early in Paul's imprisonment in Rome, but now the consensus of opinion seems to place it toward the end and very nearly at the close of the last chapter of the story of the great prisoner's life. He is an old man now and he suffers not only from actual imprisonment, but the years of toil and suffering and hardship have added their burden to life. He is suffering from cold and close confinement and loneliness, and his case is pitiable indeed.

But why doesn't the God whom he has served so well and so faithfully and at such a great cost to himself look after him better! Why isn't there an earthquake now, and why aren't shackles shaken off and the loyal and courageous old man given to understand that God has him still in mind and is still able to protect him! Surely something needed to happen now quite as much as it needed to happen those many years ago when life was fresh and vigorous with him and he could stand up under nearly any physical hardship or suffering. But nothing of that marvelous sort does happen, and the slow days creep their weary length along week after week until one tragic day the old hero is led out to his death.

Well, but what profit is there in serving God if one isn't better cared for than that? Let Paul's great letter to the Philippian Christians answer that question. A man who insists on feeling as Paul does in the midst of such conditions; whose joy and courage and faith and hope are so abounding as his manifestly are, is not in great need of our sympathy. Surely there is nothing much better that God could do for him as a reward for all those years of service and enduring faithfulness than to put such heart into him and make it possible for him to feel and write the things that he here gives expression to. What odds does it make that he has to spend a few short months in that Mamertime prison, and that it is a little cold, and at times lonesome, when in his soul are such great thoughts and feelings and aspirations and counselings as he sets down on paper to send off to his loved Christian followers in far-away Philippi?

Isn't it true that there are some things that God can do for men that are really better for them and much more enjoyable than to make things easy and comfortable for them all their lives through? To face life with courage and high hope, no matter what it is holding out to you, is to live greatly and finely and with overcoming joy and happiness. Can you think of any finer results flowing from the living of the Christian life than to see life from its close as Paul saw it in these matchless chapters?

The meaning of this chapter, from the point of view of our class, is to be found when we look at it as furnishing the motive and principle under which Paul lived and worked through all those years. Devotion to great and high ideals will glorify any life, no matter how it has to be lived, and if ever there was a man utterly devoted to great ideals, it was Paul. And do not forget to notice what Paul has to say about the power of thought and of idealizing to make life great. "Think on these things!" No life can become great unless there enter into it great thinking.--Ex.

LARGEST STEAMSHIP.

When the Malolo—the largest and fastest high-powered passenger steamship ever built in the United States—sets forth on her first run between San Francisco and Honolulu in the spring of 1927, she will be better equipped with Bibles and hymn books than any vessel ever built in this country.

There will be a Bible in each of the 274 staterooms, and the remainder of the 300 Bibles which the ship will carry will be placed in the public rooms and in the quarters of the officers and crew. There will be 400 hymnals, so that no one will lack an opportunity to join in the religious services on board.

The Malolo is now being constructed at Cramp's Shipyard, on the Delaware River. Her length will be 582 feet, her beam 83 feet, and her displacement 22,000 tons. Her twin-screws, driven by turbines which will develop 25,000-horse power, will hurl the huge vessel over the surface of the ocean at twenty-five miles an hour.

Her speed will enable the Malolo to make the round trip between San Francisco and Honolulu in eight days, cutting four days from the fastest time made by any passenger vessel now on the run. The luxury of the ship's appaintments will be in keeping with her size and speed.

Six hundred first-class passengers will be accommodated in the 274 staterooms. There will be 160 private baths—more than on any other vessel. On "A" deck will be located the ballroom, lounge, library, smoking-room, and veranda, all connected on the port side by spacious foyers and galleries. The main dining-room, extending the full breadth of the ship, will be 108 feet long. At its forward end will be two alcove coffee rooms suitable for use as auxiliary dining-rooms, or for private dinner parties.

A gymnasium, a swimming-pool, and electric baths will be provided. A complete system of mechanical ventilation will be installed for use in the tropical climate which the vessel will encounter on her voyage to the Hawaiian Islands.

The total cost of this newest addition to the American merchant marine will be $6,500,000.

NEW HORRORS IN WAR.

Early in September, the American navy will test a new invention called the "death stroke," guaranteed to spread death and destruction over a radius of twenty miles. Righteous critics say these horrible investions make for peace. They claim that when war becomes terrible enough, men will be afraid to fight. History does not bear them out. In the old days of bow-and-arrow fighting, total casualties in warfare were light. But when gunpowder came along, people said, "This will make war too terrible, and perhaps end it altogether." But it didn't. With gunpowder, there were more wars and more casualties than ever. And then came high explosives, shells, shrapnel, and machine guns. Again it was predicted that war had become too terrible to be waged. The great war was the answer to that.

The truth is that the first business in war is killing. And the better equipped a nation is to kill, the more confident it is about going to war. There was enough downright hell in the last war to scare humanity into perpetual peace if humanity is ever to be scared into it. But humanity was not scared into perpetual peace. And no amount of "death strokes" or "death rays" will ever do it. The one way to end war is to get war-like instincts out of the human system.—Vancouver Sun.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

By H. S. Hardcastle.

MISS PATTIE COGHILL, Field Secretary

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

September 13, 1925.

Subject: "Paul in Thessalonica and Berea."

Golden Text: "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good."—1 Thess. 5:16-24.

Lesson: Acts 17:1-12.

Devotional Reading: 1 Thess. 5:16-24.

Westward the course of empire takes its way. Perhaps it is because the course of missions took its way westward. Those of us who rejoice in the achievements of Western civilization should remember that in the providence of God His servants, no doubt under His divine guidance, went into all the world by way of the West, and thereby laid the foundation for the achievements of modern civilization. Paul was simply laying another foundation-stone when he moved on to Thessalonica from Philippi.

"And Paul, as his custom was, went into the synagogue, and for three Sabbath days reasoned with them from the Scriptures." Paul, like Jesus, had a keen sense of values, and the fact that he went regularly to the synagogue is significant. In this particular case, of course, Paul was concerned with getting a point of contact, and the synagogue was the logical place to do that. But beyond any practical purpose, there was the habit of frequenting the house of God, the house of prayer, where, in worship in common with others, the inner man was renewed and life was enriched. What a tragedy for men and women to remain away habitually from the Church!

Paul was undoubtedly a powerful and persuasive speaker. But back of all of his persuasiveness there was compelling reason. "He reasoned with them from the Scriptures." There has always been a great deal of coercion on the part of men who would set up arbitrary standards as tests of Church fellowship. In this day of dissatisfaction, with such tests, one needs only to appeal to the reasonableness of the Christian religion. God demands blind obedience from no man. "Come now, let us reason together, saith the Lord." Man can do no less. The Scriptures are a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

Christ was central in Paul's preaching and in his life. The passion or suffering of Christ and the resurrection were central in Paul's preaching. He lifted Christ up and the promise of Christ that if He be lifted up He would draw all men unto Him was fulfilled in a striking way, for many of the devout Greeks and a number of the women believed on Christ and joined the missionaries in Jesus' way of living. "But the Jews, being moved with jealousy, took unto themselves certain vile fellows of the rabble, and gathering a crowd, set the city in an uproar." No matter how good a man is or what he is trying to do, he will always find opposition, and in many cases that opposition is born of jealousy. One of the most, subtle and prevalent temptations to which many a Christian worker is subjected is jealousy over a fellow-worker's success. It is difficult for many, and impossible for some, to say with John the Baptist, "He must increase, but I must decrease," when speaking of another's work.

The mob assaulted the house of Jason, where Paul and Silas were stopping, and it might have been very unpleasant for them if they had been at home that day. It happened that they were not there, however, and the crowd vented its spleen on Jason and certain of the brethren. They were dragged before the rulers and made to give bond to keep the peace. Here, as usual, the charge was false as to fact, but true as to spirit. The missionaries were not directly trying to set up a king in opposition to Caesar, but they were trying to win allegiance to the King, whose kingdom eventually would include all the kingdoms of this world.

Paul and Silas were sent away by night, and came to Berea. There is a significant statement made in connection with their work in Berea. Luke says: "Now, these were more noble than those in Thessalonica, in that they received the word with readiness of mind, examining the Scriptures daily, whether these things were so." Would that we had more of their type. One of the tragedies of life is the closed mind, and it is nowhere more tragic than in things religious. One of the biggest issues between the two large groups of Christians in our day is just on this point. The one group thinks that the faith has been once and for all delivered through the saints, that there is nothing new in religion, and that the attempt to interpret God in contemporary terms is heresy. The other group, with equal sincerity, believes that God is still speaking to His people, that there are new factors entering into life now, and that truth is to be welcomed wherever found. It does not matter to which Church a man belongs, but it does matter whether he has a closed mind. God pity the man who has closed his mind against any new truth. This applies both to fundamentalist and modernist.

God pity the man, too, who is not searching the Scriptures in all readiness of mind, seeking always to appropriate more and more of their message. One of the most alarming factors in the present religious situation is the fact that so few Christians are reading and studying their Bibles. There are many who are afraid of the modern use of the Bible. They had better be afraid of their own disuse of the Bible. "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me," said Jesus.

Teaching Points.

1. There is real value in regular attendance at services of worship.
2. Christianity is reasonable.
3. Christ had a crown because he had a cross.
4. The truth that finds a response in one man will be rejected by another.
5. Idle hands are the devil's workshop.
6. One of the easiest ways to go to the devil is to do nothing.
7. Christianity really turns the world upside down.
8. Jesus Christ is the King of kings.
9. The closed mind is a tragedy.
10. Refusal to face new truth is a twin to the refusal to obey the truth.
11. Reading God's Word is a privilege and a duty.
12. The Church of Jesus Christ owes much to women, as women owe much to the Church.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

September 13, 1925.

Topic: "The Harvest of Our Lives: What Shall it Be?"—Gal. 6:7-10; Prov. 11:17-20; 2 Cor. 5:10.

Some Bible Hints.

There is no way to dodge the law of God; it closes in upon us like a circle. (V. 7.)

Punishment lies in the very nature of the evil things we do. If we sow to the flesh, the flesh itself will punish us by its very corruption. (V. 8.)

To sow to the Spirit means that we do things that the Spirit approves, kind deeds, and so on. (V. 9.)

We do not need to wait for the beginnings of harvest. Kindness makes joy in the heart and is its own reward. (V. 17.)

Suggestive Thoughts.

The Christian is judged according to his works. But remember that reward comes from within, according to God's laws.

Thoughts as well as deeds are seeds that produce harvest according to their kind; good thoughts produce good, evil thoughts, increasing evil.

Our harvest is but the seed of another harvest. Our earth life determines our life in heaven, which will grow into yet more glorious things.

Life moves in a circle. Jacob must meet Esau, whom he wronged, sometime or other. We do not really move away from our words and deeds, but toward them.

A Few Illustrations.

Harvests are always greater than sowings. We reap what we sow, and also more than we sow. Tendencies deepen within us, and the roots of our words and acts strike deep.

No farmer sows just whatever kind of seed happens to his hand. He plans his harvest and chooses his seed. So must we choose the kind of life that we will live, with an eye to what the issue of it shall be.

Springtime is opportunity. If sowing is neglected, that spring never comes again. The chance to do good often slips past us while we dream of what we should like to be.

The miserable dope fiend is a sample of a harvest reaped. So is a sweet-faced saint. But what a difference there is between the two!

To Think About.

What kind of deeds is it worth while to sow?

Why should we watch thoughts sown in our hearts?

How can we sow Christ in our lives?

A Cluster of Quotations.

"We know how a man may sow health or sickness in his life, and we know the harvests they yield. The law of growth is sure."—Anon.

"If you would get real harvests out of your lives, sow purpose in them, sow unselfishness, sow self-control, sow courtesy, sow forgiveness, and you will be sowing for eternity."—James Spalding.

"In this world it is far more certain that vice will be punished than that virtue will be rewarded."—Longfellow.

"God judges by a light
Which baffles mortal sight,
And the useless-seeming man the crown has won;
In His vast world above,
A world of broader love,
God has some grand employment for His son."

PLEASANT HILL CHURCH.

Pleasant Hill has made wonderful progress in the last year. The first thing of importance in the year's program was the building of two nice Sunday School rooms. This gives us a plant of four well-equipped Sunday School rooms, besides the main auditorium. After the building was finished, the entire house was given a double coat of paint, which, with the cleaning and beautifying of the ground, adds much to the outside appearance and makes us proud of our place of worship.

On May 17th a centennial celebration was held in memory of the founding of the Church in January, 1825. We look back to this as the greatest and most inspirational service ever held at our place.

The Sunday School is in a very progressive state. There are about 200 on roll, many of these being heads of families. This is encouraging to us, for we believe when parents come and bring their children, good results are going to be accomplished.

July 19th "Children's Day" was observed. The primary teachers, with chosen assistants, had charge of the training of the children, and a splendid program was rendered. To see sixty children, all under sixteen years of age, singing, reciting and glorifying God in their simple manner ought to be an inspiration to any Christian worker. The congregation was very attentive, which was also very encouraging.

August 8th the young people of the Sunday School went picnicing to Pastime Park. The day was a most enjoyable one to those present. The time was spent in playing games, riding the merry-go-'round, ocean wave, swinging, and other things of pleasure.

August 13th the children were carried on a pleasure trip to the Orphanage. They enjoyed the day very much playing with the orphans' playthings, and the life of the orphan children made an impression on the minds of our rural children that will not soon be forgotten. At noon, dinner was spread, and after a few remarks by Chas. D. Johnston, superintendent, all ate to the extent of their own satisfaction.

September 6th, our annual revival begins. This is the climax of our whole year's work, and we feel that a revival is needed as never before. We pray that our Church and community will not be the same following this meeting. We trust that impressions for good will be made, and we may look forward not only for a strengthening of the Church as an immediate result of the meeting, but to the continued evidence of spiritual progress in every-day life.

We are very sorry to note that our dear pastor, Bro. McCauley, cannot be with us next year. Seldom does there come into our midst a man who can so win the hearts of the people as has Bro. McCauley. He has endeared himself to our people and enthroned himself in the hearts of the scores who have been thrilled and encouraged by the wonderful messages that he has given us. We pray that God's richest blessings may continue to follow him wherever he may go.

Liberty, N. C. EUGENE H. THOMPSON.

WEBSTER, MD.

The Webster Community Christian Church celebrated its first anniversary on Sunday, August 23d. We were looking forward to a large audience and a pleasant day, which we had. The day was perfect, and there were about 700 persons present. The Church was beautifully decorated, and at 10:30 A. M., when the bell rang for morning service, every pew was filled, and chairs were placed around and many on the outside. The choir rendered several fine selections. The morning sermon was preached by our minister, the Rev. Melton W. Sutcliffe, which was a powerful one on "Labor and Patience." It was just what we all have to do if we want to keep God's work going on.

At 12:30 o'clock, the ladies served a lunch in the basement of the Church to those coming from a distance. At 3 o'clock our associate minister, the Rev. Richard Sutcliffe, preached; and at 8 o'clock P. M. Rev. Milton W. Sutcliffe gave another fine sermon. The collection was a very good one, and altogether it was a splendid anniversary.

We hope and pray our Church may do as much, and more, in the coming year, and we ask the prayers of all the Christian Church for this special Church.

Our minister, Rev. Milton W. Sutcliffe, was to have given a lecture at the Christian Convention at Rays Hill, Pa., on August 21st, but due to a cold he was very sorry to have to cancel this engagement. HARRIETT E. CORLEY.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

THE CHRISTIAN'S HOPE.

Lesson: Psalms 128.

Hope is the common feature of all religions, and a very special feature of the Christian religion. It is the mecca of this life in which the expectation of prosperity, the success of enterprise, victory over enemies, the harvest of the fields, the happiness of the family, the health of all is exhausted. It is the natural lot of the righteous man, and it is celebrated in many of the psalms with lyric beauty unsurpassed in its appeal in all literature.

And it is hope that is the expectation of our hereafter. We look forward with pious confidence to the perfect happy life and to be like our Redeemer. It is the peace of our souls which prays for that happy end where and when we shall be taught His ways and we will walk in His paths, and our lives shall be as a watered garden. Read Isa. 2:2-3.

Prayer.—Our Father, hold Thou before our mental and spiritual vision today the hope of eternal glory. Forgive us of our sins and make us pure, that we may obtain it. In His name we ask it. Amen.

TUESDAY.

VICTORY OVER SIN.

Lesson: Rom. 8:1-11.

There is a ceaseless conflict between good and evil, seated in the heart of man. Deliverance and victory in this conflict is obtained by complete conformity to and harmony with God through Jesus Christ the Saviour. When Paul was weary of his long struggle for legal righteousness which he despaired of obtaining, he exclaimed, "Who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" and he finds his answer in the new law of the spirit of life in Jesus Christ, and it made him free from the law of sin and of death. That is the heart of Christianity.

Prayer.—Our Father, give unto us to feel the heart of true Christianity constantly. Forgive us of our sins and make us one with Thy Spirit through Jesus our Lord, that we may live the Christ-like life now and forever. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

THE LIFE WORTH WHILE.

Lesson: Matt. 21:12-17.

There is a life worth living, and that is the honest, useful and unselfish life, cleansed and motivated by devotion to an ideal.

There are battles worth fighting, and they are for justice, for God-born liberty, for cleansing of corruption, and for honor. These are worthy the finest manhood and womanhood.

Prayer.—Dear Lord, give unto us as our first thoughts of today and each day the true values of life and what makes life worth while. So endow our minds and hearts that we may dedicate our lives to these worth-while things. In Christ's name we ask it. Amen.

THURSDAY.

"Though I have faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not love, I am nothing."—1 Cor. 13.

Christianity is the greatest asset in the world. It beats money and power and influence. It convinces, sweetens and gives peace of soul and controls to highest joys where wealth scarcely raises a tremor of interest. It tramples over prejudice and opposition and fights on to victory.

Enthusiasm in Christianity is the force that carries it on. It spurns inaction, storms the citadel of its object, and engulfs obstacles. This is faith in action, which removes mountains and achieves the miraculous.

Add to your religion enthusiasm in all your work, attitude and manner, and it will spread like a contagion. To all you come in contact with it means more joy, pleasure and satisfaction, more real and virile and more spontaneous Christianity with this than can be achieved any where else.

Prayer.—Our Father, we praise Thy holy name because Thou art good and supreme. Give unto us to know the fountain of life, the true joys of living, and to accomplish something each day for Thee. Amen.

FRIDAY.

GOD, THE UNIVERSE, AND US.

Lesson: Psa. 8.

"When I consider Thy heavens, the work of Thy fingers, the moon and the stars which Thou hast ordained, what is man that Thou art mindful of him? . . . Thou hast made him but a little lower than God."—Vs. 3, 4, Psa.

Man is arrogant in proportion to his ignorance. Man's natural tendency is toward egotism. Man, in his infancy of knowledge, thinks that all creation was formed for him. For several ages he saw, in the countless worlds that sparkle through space like the bubbles of a shoreless ocean, only the petty candles, the household torches, that Providence had been pleased to light for no other purpose but to make the night more agreeable to man.

Astronomy has corrected this delusion of human vanity, and man now reluctantly confesses that the stars are worlds, larger and more glorious than his own; that the earth on which he crawls is a scarcely visible speck on the vast chart of creation.

But in the small, as well as the vast, God is equally profuse of life. The traveler looks upon the tree, and fancies its boughs were formed for his shelter in the summer sun, or his fuel in the winter frosts. But in each leaf of these boughs the Creator has made a world—it swarms with innumerable races. Each drop of water in a moat is an orb more populous than a kingdom is of men.

Everywhere, then, in this immense design, science brings new life to light. Life is the one pervading principle, and even the thing that seems to die and putrefy, but engenders new life, and changes to fresh forms of matter."

Prayer.—Dear Heavenly Father, reveal to us Thyself in every dew-drop as well as every fragrant flower. In all our ways help and inspire us to acknowledge Thee, and live for Thee. Forgive us, we pray Thee, of all our sins. In His name we ask it. Amen.

SATURDAY.

CHRISTIANITY IN BUSINESS.

Lesson: Rom. 12:9-21.

Text: "Not slothful in business."

"Get the confidence of the public and you will have no difficulty in getting their patronage. Inspire your whole force with the right spirit of service; encourage every sign of the true spirit. So display and advertise wares that customers shall buy with understanding. Treat them as guests when they come and when they go, whether or not they buy.

"Give them all that can be given fairly, on the principle that to him that giveth shall be given. Remember always that the recollection of quality remains long after the price is forgotten. Then your business will prosper by a natural process."—H. Gordon Selfridge.

Prayer.—We come into Thy presence, Heavenly Father, humbly beseeching Thee to forgive us of all our sins. We dedicate our lives to Thee and ask Thee to establish us in our business and impel us to make it Thine own. In it show us how, and help us to apply the Christ principles for God and humanity. Amen.

SUNDAY.

FAITH IN OTHERS.

"Having your behaviour seemly . . . that wherein they speak against you as evildoers, they may by your good works, which they behold, glorify God in the day of visitation."—1 Peter 2:12.

"The man who lacks faith in other men loses his best chances to work, and he gradually undermines his own powers and finally character. We do not realize to what extent others judge us by our beliefs. But we are, in fact, judged that way; and it is right that we should be judged in that way. The man who is cynical, whether about women, or business, or politics, is apt to be immoral in his relations to women, or business, or politics. The man who has faith in the integrity of others, in the face of irresponsible accusations, is assumed to have the confidence in other's goodness because he is a good man himself."—President Hadley.

Prayer.—Our Father, we thank Thee for all blessings of life, for salvation by grace, and for a life of victory by faith. Make us worthy of the faith of others and strengthen our faith in the others. We pray for this until Thy will shall be done on earth as it is in heaven. In His name we ask it. Amen.

THE SMALL COLLEGE.

It should never be forgotten that the small college, rather than the great university, is the backbone of higher education in the United States. The work done in the two types of institutions overlaps broadly, but neither entirely covers the field of the other. In graduate, professional and highly specialized studies, the little fresh-water college cannot compete with the great university; but in laying the foundations of a liberal education, in forming character by benign human contacts, in fitting the student for life itself rather than for the job that is but part of life, the small college still stands without a rival.

The very limitations of the small institution preserve it from the danger of becoming unwieldly, topheavy or overextended. What it lacks in plant, it makes up for in personnel. Its very smallness encourages individuality rather than standardization. The human contacts are closer. Men play a larger and freer part. They are not overwhelmed by rules, buildings, overwide choice of courses, complex social life and overelaborate administration. There is as much to be said for the simple life in education as in the world at large. In all essentials, a college is merely a group of teachers and learners. A dozen young men gathered in a quiet, shady place might be the kernel of an institution of the soundest learning, if only a Plato sat in their midst.

Associated with the large universities are great and learned men by the score; but as students multiply, their work must become more and more executive in its nature. They must distribute their courses among more subordinates and suffer their own personalities to be diluted by their assistants. Whether they will or no, they must face the problems of mass production.—Saturday Evening Post.

Kiddies' Korner

MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT, Editor.

Kiddies:

Well! well! just eight names so far! We can't play at all if we have so few. I think it's more fun when we all play, don't you, Kiddies?

Just one thing, though: I'll promise that these may play in the game, so you eight dear Kiddies please look out for next week's page. It's coming next week!

What do you think! I saw a beautiful little girl on the street pushing a lovely doll carriage—but there was no dolly! Oh, no indeed! What do you s'pose? A teeny-tiny baby doggie, all dressed up in red ribbons and tied in the doll-buggie same as if he was a dolly. Yes, sir-ee, Kiddies, and all at once down the street came another little doggie, almost like doggie with the ribbons, and 'fore the dear little girl could say "Boo!" why, Kiddies, that dressed-up doggie jumped right out of that doll buggie, and down the street he ran as fast as he could—red ribbons, doll carriage, little girl, 'n' all, right behind him! Oh-ee! and, say, listen to this: a great big ol' policeman was standing over in the very corner where the doggies wanted to go, and big ol' policeman wasn't looking at the doggies at all; and oh, my! they all mixed themselves up together, and the little girl cried, and the big policeman laughed—oh, my! yes, he laughed loud at the little girl and her beautiful doggie.

But the other little doggie ran away—naughty little fellow! What would you have done?

Your editor,
MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT.

FAME.

By Pringle Barret.

Little Jenny Miller
Has freckles on her face,
And her clothes are just as plain as they can be.
There is nothing very frilly,
There is not a speck of lace,
Anywhere on Jenny Miller, you can see.

But little Jenny Miller
Is the wonder of the town.
You can witness her performance any day.
With admirers all around her,
She parades about the town
On a pair of stilts—the most amazing way!

THE REAL PRINCESS.

By Irene S. Woodcock.

Rolf and Gretta were visiting their uncle in the cottage by the woods.

"Sometimes the Princess passes here," he told them. "Perhaps if you watch you will see her."

They were at once much excited. They had never seen a Princess.

"She will be beautiful," said Gretta.

"She will ride a pony and will be kind to every one," said Rolf.

The very next day their uncle had to ride away on business.

"But we shall not be lonely," they told him; "we shall watch for the Princess."

Gretta decided to knit a cape for the Princess' doll, and Rolf said he would weave a basket in which to carry it. All the morning their fingers flew and by noontime both cape and basket were finished. But the Princess did not come. They watched and watched, and at last were ready to give up. Then suddenly Gretta cried, "Here she comes!"

Riding on a pony, came a girl about her age. She was very pretty, though the corners of her mouth turned down instead of up; and to Rolf's surprise she struck the pony a sharp blow before she reached them. They stepped forward into the road as she came nearer and began curtsying. She reined in her pony, and Gretta handed her the fine basket on which Rolf had spent so much time; in it was the doll's cape. The Princess reached down for the basket and opened it quickly.

"Oh!" she exclaimed with a glance at the wooden doll in Gretta's arms, "My doll wears silk, and I do not care for baskets." She struck the pony again and rode away.

Gretta looked at Rolf, and the hot tears rushed to her eyes.

"Never mind," he said; "she is not a real Princess or she would not act in that way. Let us walk in the woods and gather flowers. We can take your doll along, and you may have the basket for her cape."

Gretta dried her tears, and the two children entered the woods. There were many flowers, and soon they had their hands full. They were about to return when Gretta seized her brother's arm.

"Some one is crying," she said.

Rolf listened. He followed the direction of the sound until he came to a little girl who had caught her foot between the roots of a tree and could not move it.

"Don't cry," he said kindly; "I will help you." With his sharp knife he cut one of the roots away until she could free herself. But she looked so tired that tender-hearted Gretta invited her to the cottage to rest. The little girl was glad to go with them. When they reached the cottage, Gretta poured milk and cut bread for her, and then she felt better. Gretta showed her the basket and the doll's cape that she and Rolf had made.

"My doll is made only of wood,'" she said; "but I love her dearly, and you may hold her if you wish."

The little girl did wish; and she tried the cape on the doll several times and admired the basket until Rolf felt very proud of his work.

"If you would like the basket, you may have it," he said, "and I will make my sister another."

"You may have the cape, too," said Gretta

The little girl was delighted, and hugged Gretta and thanked Rolf over and over again. But at last she said she must go, and before they could think of a way to keep her longer she was gone.

"She is much more like a Princess than the other one," said Gretta.

"It isn't being called Princess that makes you one," said Rolf.

They talked for a long time after that about their new friend and were sorry they had forgotten to ask her name.

"Perhaps we shall see her tomorrow," said Rolf.

But the next morning a horseman reined in at the door. "The Princess wishes you to take luncheon with her today," he said.

How disappointed they were! But, since an invitation from a Princess is a command, they hastened to get ready. On reaching the palace, what was their astonishment to see the little girl of the woods come forward to greet them!

"Why," exclaimed Gretta, "I thought— Why how can you be—"

"I am the Princess," she smiled. "Perhaps you saw another girl on a pony yesterday. She is the daughter of the head keeper at the palace lodge. When I left you in a hurry," she went on, "I saw some one coming for me, and I wanted to surprise you both. Are you glad to be here?"

Gretta's eyes shone. "I have my knitting; I am making another doll's cape," she said.

"My doll seems to be proud of hers," said the Princess with a happy laugh. "She has worn it all day. Come, I shall show her to you. And," she added, turning to Rolf, "if ever you weave a basket large enough to hold them, you may have a pair of my rabbits. You might run down to the hutch now and choose them."

On the way home that afternoon, Gretta and Rolf agreed that they had never spent a happier day.

"She wasn't like a Princess at all," said Gretta; "she was just like any other girl and very sweet and kind."

"That is what makes her a real Princess," said Rolf. And Rolf was right.

Dear Friends:

Our Burlington Church is always doing something nice for our work here. After subscribing more than five thousand dollars on our new building, they sent to us last week a real baby house. A real house cut up in rooms with stairway, windows, doors, floor and a real roof with rafters—a house that is big enough for the babies to get in with their little dolls and have a great time.

We placed this house on the end of the porch at the baby home, and it has been fully occupied since we received it. Our Burlington Church certainly knows how to make our children happy, and they enjoy making them happy. We want to express our thanks for this contribution.

School commences in a few weeks, and then it will be books, pencils and tablets. It is real interesting to know how many they can use.

MY MOTHER'S GOD.

At a fashionable party, a young physician present spoke of one of his patients whose case he considered a very critical one. He said that he was very sorry to lose him, for he was a noble young man, but very unnecessarily concerned about his soul, and that the Christians increased his agitation by talking with him and praying with him. He wished Christians would let his patients alone. Death was but an endless sleep, the religion of Christ a delusion, and its followers were not persons of the highest culture and intelligence.

A young lady sitting near, and one of the gayest of the company, said: "Pardon me, doctor, but I cannot hear you talk thus, and remain silent. I am not a professor of religion; I never knew anything about it experimentally; but my mother was a Christian. Times without number she has taken me to her room, and with her hand upon my head she has prayed that God would give her grace to train me for the skies. Two years ago my precious mother died, and the religion she so loved during life sustained her in her dying hour. She called us to the bedside and, with her face shining with glory, asked us to meet her in heaven, and I promised to do so. And now," said the young lady, displaying deep emotion, "can I believe that this is all a delusion? that my mother sleeps an eternal sleep? that she will never waken again in the morning of the resurrection, and that I shall see her no more? No, I cannot, I will not, believe it." Her brother tried to quiet her, for by this time she had the attention of all present. "No," said she; brother, let me alone; I must defend my mother's God, my mother's religion!"

The physician made no reply, and soon left the room. He was found shortly afterwards pacing the floor of an adjoining room, in great agitation and distress of spirits. "What is the matter?" a friend inquired. "Oh," said he, "that young lady is right. Her words have pierced my soul." And the result of the conviction thus awakened was that both the young lady and physician were converted to Christ, and are useful and influential members of the Church of God.

Readers, stand up for Jesus at all times and in all places wherever you hear His name reviled, or His counsel set at naught. Rather, let the language of your heart be, "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."—Selected.

SIN HINDERS THE WORK OF GOD.

It is too well known to need repeating, that sin harbored in the heart and life of God's professed children can do more to defeat and hinder the progress of the work of God than can any outwardly opposing force.

We need not to go back to the history of ancient Israel where Achan brought defeat to the army and caused the death of many by his sin of covetousness and the theft of forbidden wealth. There are examples all about us of a languishing and defeated Zion because of unfaithfulness on the part of one or more of the members.

When Dr. Wilbur Chapman, the great Presbyterian evangelist, was once holding a meeting in the State of Indiana, the people thronged the place of meeting night after night, but the unsaved were unmoved and unresponsive. After laboring five or six days, Mr. Chapman could see no signs of either blessing or victory, and so he called together the pastors of the co-operating Churches to request his release from the engagement. At that meeting, one of the ministers said: "I know where the difficulty is, and I will try to correct it." One of the chief ushers in the meeting, a member of the Church in which this minister was the pastor, a judge of high standing, was living a double life. His conduct was a reproach to the cause of Christ. Whenever he walked down the aisle a spiritual chill seemed to sweep over the audience. His pastor left the meeting to go to the judge's office, and when alone with him he said, "Judge, it is reported on the street that your life is not right, and that you are a hindrance in the prosecution of this work. If this is true, I want to help you; and if it is untrue, I want to befriend you." The old man's face became pale and his eyes filled with tears, as he said, "It is all true, and more, and I am the most miserable man in the world." They fell upon their knees, the arm of the minister upon the judge, and when the prayer was ended, he had the consciousness of God's forgiveness. At the next public service he was present. The sermon was ended and the hands of the evangelist were raised to pronounce the benediction, when the judge rose and said, "My friends, you have long known me as a professing Christian. I rise to say that I have dishonored my Lord and injured His cause. I ask your forgiveness, as I have asked and received His." The confession was ended with a sob. There was no benediction, but a baptism of tears instead. That was the beginning of a mighty victory. The first invitation to the unsaved brought at least fifty to Christ, and ten days meant the salvation of hundreds.

Let us be faithful in dealing with the sin question. "Be not deceived; God is not mocked. Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."—Wesleyan Methodist.

GETHSEMANE.

Dark, dark the night, the world at rest;
Bitter the anguish in the Saviour's breast.
The Father's eye alone in pity there
Sees His dear Son bowed to the earth in prayer.
Behold the Saviour in His hour of grief,
As loud He cries for succor and relief—
"Let this cup pass if possible it be!"
'Tis midnight now in dark Gethsemane.

The silent stars above, their watches keeping,
The faithful three outside the garden sleeping,
When suddenly, in saddened tones, yet clear,
The Saviour's gentle rebuke they hear:
"Could ye not watch with me one little hour?"
Tho' needing naught of earthly love or power,
His stricken spirit longed for sympathy
That midnight hour in dark Gethsemane.

Gethsemane! O Gethsemane! the years
Have lessened not thy holy power to calm;
Gethsemane! O Gethsemane! thy tears
Have brought to many a heavy spirit balm.
No grief too great to say: "Thy will be done!"
Thus spake of old, God's best-beloved Son.
Oh, comfort sweet to all humanity,
That Christ for us endured Gethsemane.

FAIRY BUBBLES.

By Russell Gordon Carter.

Bubbles, bubbles in the air,
Bubbles, bubbles everywhere!
From my pipe they rise on high—
Fairy bubbles in the sky.

Oh, if I could launch one free
Big enough to carry me—
A bubble beautiful and grand,
To take me up to Fairyland.

THE PROGRESS OF PROHIBITION.

It was but natural that the prohibition chart should show action and reaction—like that of a sick person at a hospital. A nation is like an individual: getting over a bad habit is a strenuous experience. It is very easy to point to gross violation of any law—no matter how reasonable nor how beneficial. For the very idea of the application of law means running against an opposing. If wrong were not being done, there would be no need of law to correct it. And those who have been doing an evil thing for a long time come to feel that it is right. Both conscience and understanding are perverted by it, so that the victims can neither think clearly nor feel properly. The prohibition law of our country has had to run against that kind of thing, and that made it seem that failure stared it in the face. But not so; according to a careful survey of 129 American cities, prohibition is going forward.

OBSERVANCE AS A TEACHER.

One of our American humorists who had the ear of the people some twenty-five years ago said that he never had time, when traveling on a railroad train, to do any reading. He was too seriously, or comically, as the case might be, engaged with the things that were going on among the passengers. To him, current happenings in a miscellaneous group of fellow-passengers were far more interesting than the sayings and doings of people whose voices he had never heard and whose motions and utterances were but faintly recorded on the printed page. This philosopher-humorist preferred to take his station on the wood box in the front of the car—remember that was in the old days—and study human nature at first hand. The habit of observing those about us may be thus acquired, and with great profit.

RASCOE.

Edgar Ray Rascoe was born July 8, 1856, and departed this life August 20, 1925, at his home on Lawsonville Avenue, Reidsville, age 69 years, 1 month and 12 days.

Early in life, Bro. Rascoe gave his heart to Christ, uniting with the Christian Church, and remaining a faithful and loyal member until death. He was one of the charter members of the Reidsville Church, and it was from this Church that his burial service was conducted by the pastor, assisted by the Rev. M. F. Moores, pastor of the M. E. Church, on the afternoon of August 21st, after which his body was deposited in its final resting-place in Greenview Cemetery, beside that of his wife, who preceded him to the grave only a few months.

Bro. Rascoe was married to Miss Rachel Elizabeth Rascoe March 8, 1883, and the home was blessed with seven children, six of whom survive their parents—Mrs. J. M. Lambeth, Rudy, William, Samuel, Monroe, and Robert; also Brother Rascoe has three brothers living—Mr. Weldon Rascoe, Dr. John Rascoe, of Reidsville, and Mr. Haywood Rascoe, of Burlington.

Besides the sorrowing loved ones, his going is mourned by all those who knew him. He was a gentle Christian, a quiet citizen, a loving father, a devoted husband, and a faithful friend; and may those who mourn take comfort in the thought that he has been called from his labors here and has entered into his rest.

R. A. WHITTEN.

COPELAND.

When the gentle spirit of Mrs. W. J. Copeland took its flight to that land of endless day, the angels must have sung a sweet refrain as they pushed the gates ajar and stood just outside as she entered in to be with her Christ.

Words are inadequate when we try to write of this dear friend gone on before. Her hearty handshake and pleasant smile won your heart and made you think that, after all, life was worth living.

She loved her Christ, her Church, and was willing and ready to do her part wherever her lot was cast. It can well be said she did what she could.

McCLENNY.

David McClenny, a faithful member of Bethlehem Christian Church, departed this life August 10, 1925, aged 73 years. He first held his membership in Holy Neck Christian Church, but transferred to Bethlehem forty-six years ago. He was soon thereafter elected collector and treasurer of the Church, which position he held at the time of his death. He had been a deacon of the Church for forty years.

His family has lived in the same county since 1704, and the farm on which he lived has been in the same family for over a century. His grandfather, a soldier in the War of 1812, lived there.

He married, on November 13, 1873, to Miss Ann Marie Holland, who preceded him to the grave by four years and twenty-eight days. He leaves four sons—Wilbur E., and Jesse D. McClenny, of Suffolk; Sydney L. McClenny, of Myrtle, and Edward D. McClenny, of Marion, S. C.; two granddaughters, Miss Nelle Miles McClenny, of Marion, S. C., and Miss Ann McClenny, of Suffolk, Va.

He is also survived by one half-brother, Jesse W. Copeland, of Lummis, Va.; one sister, Miss Mary C. McClenny, now past eighty years of age, who has made her home with him for some years; one half-sister, Mrs. J. C. Byrd, Holland, Va., and several nieces and nephews.

He loved his Church and was faithful to all its enterprises. He often represented his Church in the annual Conference and was a delegate to the Southern Christian Convention, which met in Graham, N. C., in 1888, when plans were matured for the building of Elon College, where he afterwards sent each one of his sons to be educated.

The burial service was conducted in Bethlehem Christian Church in the presence of a large gathering of people. The pastor was assisted in the service by Drs. W. W. Staley and N. G. Newman. Interment was in Cedar Hill Cemetery, Suffolk, Va. W. D. HARWARD.

PIERCE.

Hersey Gay Pierce, young son of Mr. and Mrs. Cary G. Pierce, of near Windsor, Va., was born December 12, 1923, and died July 22, 1925. He was the youngest of nine children and much beloved, but the first to be called from the home. The service was conducted at Antioch Christian Church, where the little body was laid away. We left with the bereaved ones the words of a bereaved father, "But now he is dead, wherefore should I fast? Can I bring him back again? I shall go to him, but he shall not return to me."

W. D. HARWARD.

The Bible is the greatest and best Book in the world; the hymnal comes next. We are strongly inclined to give the third place to the dictionary.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

By Rev. S. M. Lynam.

Caillaux Goes to London.—

Joseph Caillaux, France's Minister of Finance, has been in London discussing with Winston Churchill the funding of France's War Debt to Great Britain.

Something New in the South.—

The MacMillan Company, publishers, have just opened a trade division for the South in Atlanta, Ga. This book concern as well as a number of other similar concerns has long maintained an office for the distribution of educational books in the South, but the MacMillan Company is the first to open a trade division for all its publications. The company feels that this step will prove profitable to them, and it certainly ought to mean much to the cultural life of the South. Since the War between the States the South has lost to a large extent its literary preeminence, and the fully developed cultural life has been stunted. This move by one of the largest publishers in America will probably induce other publishers to do likewise, and will add to the possibilities of the South in literature. The increased operations at 17 Houston Street, Atlanta, will involve a substantial increase in the force employed there. Twenty-five have been enough so far to handle the company's business.

A Charge We Must Face.—

Prof. J. J. Cornelius of Lucknow, India, stirred one of the round tables of politics of the Williamstown Institute of Politics, when he preferred charges against the Western powers for their position in the orient. "What does western prestige mean?" said Prof. Cornelius, "When I point a revolver at your head and take your goods, I am a criminal; on the other hand, when you plant yourself solidly on other people with the aid of guns, we speak of it as carrying civilization to the backward state." Writing from the seat of the institute, a press correspondent said, "At the time of going to press, no representative of a Christian nation had made a convincing reply to that indictment."

Prof. Cornelius has preferred a grave charge, and one about which it appears many Christians have thought of late. We are approaching that glad day, slowly it is true, when a nation cannot do what we have long forbidden the individual to do. We cannot compel a nation to accept civilization, but we can teach them to accept it. This criminal business method of the Western powers which Prof. Cornelius charges has impeded seriously the mission work in the Orient.

Heresy Trial in Islam.—

The Moslem world has been profoundly stirred by the trial of the Sheik Ali Abdel Razek for heresy. The Sheik has been convicted by the religious council of Cairo, Egypt, and sentenced to lose his position as almi, or professor, of religious jurisprudence of El Azhar University at Cairo. So much support has been aroused for the positions taken in Sheik Razek's book, "Islam as a Basis of Government," that it is believed a great reformation threatens within the Moslem world. We Christians may derive some comfort from the fact that we are not the only religionists participating in heresy trials. It seems to be an ailment which affects all peoples. What a pity it is that brethren cannot dwell together in peace and harmony as becometh children of a common Father!

Coal Miners' Strike.—

At midnight of August 31st the last of one hundred and fifty-eight thousand anthracite coal miners laid down their tools. The suspension of operations comes as a climax of the dispute between the miners and the mine operators. John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers, declares that the operators are to blame for the holdup, and the operators place the blame on the leaders of the men, saying that they would not allow the men to continue work while peaceful negotiations went forward for a new contract which should replace the one expiring August 31st. In the statement by the mine operators it was pointed out that the men lost $1,200,000 on September 1st in wages. That amount is paid in wages every day.

The places of amusement are getting ready for a large crowd during the strike, but many of the men are planning to spend the time at home making needed repairs long held up for lack of time. The strike is to be peaceful, and will last until a new contract can be arranged under which the miners are willing to work.

It is a most unfortunate situation in the economic system of our country when men and their employers cannot agree on terms of employment. It reflects upon the moral qualities of both parties of contestants, and always it is the public which must suffer and pay the bills. This situation in the economic system which permits such contests of brute strength and endurance presents a problem to the churches of America. We know that could we induce men to accept the ethical code of Christ such things would be made impossible. It is easy to recommend Jesus as a panacea for the ills of the world, but the problem which actually confronts the church is not what will heal, but how to apply and make effective the healing qualities of the panacea now in our possession. Careful thought in this direction is the imperative Christian duty of every minister. It will take more than exhortation, more than the church has yet done, but what that more is, is yet to be revealed by the Spirit which shall lead us into all truth. Let us beseech the Father that He shall make known his ways unto us.

Americans a Century Hence.—

It is a familiar fact that in the tests of drafted men back in 1917 and 1918, the native born whites showed up much better than the foreign born men. Out of every one thousand, forty-one white men were class A men, while only eleven of the foreign born rated so high. Eighty out of the thousand white men classed as B men, while only twenty-nine foreigners classed so. One hundred fifty-one classed as C-plus or high average men of the white thousand, while less than half as many or seventy-three foreigners so rated. Nearly half of the white thousand or 491 rated below average, and 621 of the foreigners so rated. According to Dr. H. H. Laughlin of the Eugenics Record Office, the native born whites now number about 77 per cent of the population of this country, and the foreign element about 13 per cent. However, the foreign element is reproducing itself at the rate of two to one above the native white population. This means that a hundred years hence the native whites will number about two-fifths of the population and the foreign born something more than half. These figures constitute something worth considering when viewed in the light of the revelations of the army draft tests. It is well known that the college men and women of this country are not bringing up large families. The average varies from one-half a child per graduate for some of the women's colleges to two per graduate for some of the men's colleges. This means that the best ten per cent of the population is decreasing fifty per cent every generation, while the next best thirty per cent is barely maintaining itself. In the meantime the less desirable elements are increasing rapidly, which facts cause Dr. Laughlin to figure that in the year 2057 the descendents of our present ablest tenth would number only one out of every sixteen hundred, while the descendents of the lower sthata of society would number ninety-seven persons out of every one hundred. Suppose, however, that the tables are turned, and the ablest tenth should double itself every thirty-three years, as the poorer three-fifths do now, and the next thirty per cent just maintain themselves as they do now, and the poorer three-fifths should limit their families so as to decrease fifty per cent each generation, in the year 2057, 827 out of every thousand of the population would trace their descendents back to the ablest tenth of today, and only twenty out of the thousand would draw their heritage from the poorer three-fifths of today. To turn the tables so, there must needs be about six children for every two adults of the ablest tenth. Could this state of things prevail, what a different America this would be a century hence from that which menaces us. These facts merit a more than passing thought from our patriotic and Christian citizens.

NOTES-PERSONALS

How many subscriptions will you carry up to Conference this year for THE CHRISTIAN SUN?

Rev. F. C. Lester is this week in a series of meetings at Holy Neck; Dr. N. G. Newman, pasto.r

Dr. I. W. Johnson has just closed a series of meetings at Liberty Springs; Rev. O. D. Poythress helping him.

Have the Churches of the Southern Christian Convention collected their apportionments asked for by the several Conferences?

At the conference held last Friday night by the First Christian Church of Richmond, Va., for the purpose of electing a pastor, a call was extended to Rev. C. C. Ryan, D. D., of Busyris, Ohio.

On Saturday of last week Liberty Springs Christian Church voted to remodel their Church building and provide Sunday School equipment—six or seven rooms at an approximate cost of $6,500.00.

Our Church is becoming more and more interested in missions. To give permenancy to this interest, THE CHRISTIAN SUN should be taken into copartnership. Give it your support by personal invitation.

Rev. A. R. Flowers of Dyke, Va. was a pleasant visitor to the office of the editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN last week. He will spend two months visiting the churches in North Carolina before he returns home.

We acknowledge with gratitude the following: "Mr. and Mrs. James Luther Tourtellot announce the marriage of their daughter, Virginia Lee, to Mr. Jack William Nurney on Saturday, August 29th, 1925, Bennett Creek, Va." We extend to this newly married pair, our good friends, the very best of wishes for a long and happy married life.

Rev. H. E. Rountree, chaplain in the United States Navy; Rev. L. F Johnson, D. D., of Carversville, Pa., and Dr. C. H. Rowland, of Greensboro, N. C., were visitors at the College on the day of the great opening, Wednesday, September 2d; Brother Rountree coming to enter his son, and Dr. Rowland, two daughters, as students in college.

Rev. R. L. Williamson writes: "I have been in meetings for several weeks now. I have held meetings at Shallow Well, beginning the second Sunday in August; at Turner's Chapel, beginning the third Sunday, and at Grace's Chapel, beginning the fourth Sunday. Rev. J. A. Ledbetter, of Gibsonville, assisted us in the first two meetings, and Rev. T. J. Green, of Elon College, at Grace's Chapel. Each rendered splendid service of which I will try to give a fuller account soon."

Children of seven of our ministers have entered the Freshman Class at Elon this year. These young people come from the homes of Rev. W. S. Alexander, Rev. T. J. Green, Rev. L. F. Johnson, Rev. J. M. Roberts, Rev. H. E. Rountree, Rev. C. H. Rowland, and Rev. Herbert Scholz. We cannot understand how any minister in our Church can afford to patronize any other college, nor layman either for that matter. For the life of us, we cannot understand how people can conscientiously turn their backs on our own.

It was just a "babygram," arriving by the "Baby Telegraph and Cable Co." from Father Stork, president, dated August 14, 1925, to friends and relatives every where: "Arrived safely. Dad and mother very happy. Glad to say my name will be signed Phyllis Winters Hook." Whereupon we are sending, as we know many of THE CHRISTIAN SUN readers will wish to do, the heartiest congratulations from THE SUN family to Rev. and Mrs. A. H. Hook, Henderson, N. C., the happy dad and mother aforesaid.

THE SUN rejoices that our College has had its finest opening in these thirty-six years. Fifty-three more students enrolled on the opening day this year than on the same day a year ago. The enrollment on Friday stood at 373, the total for the entire year 1924-25. Elon cannot care for more than four hundrerod students, and the classes in some departments are overcrowded even now. We are anxious that Elon shall always remain a small College, and (this "and" is very important) that our own boys and girls should for the most part constitute the student body.

Rev. F. D. Ballard, one of our promising ministerial students, Walters, Va., who re-enters Elon College, has had a pleasant summer and has assisted in ministerial services where opportunity afforded. He supplied one Sunday for Bro. O. D. Poythress, at South Norfolk, and one for Bro. V. T. Crawford, at Elm Avenue, Portsmouth, Va. He also gave a course of lectures at Mt. Carmel, his home Church, on "Religious Education in the Church," and assisted in one revival. He writes, "This summer has been one of many happy religious experiences and certainly a rich opportunity in witnessing for God." Bro. Ballard is a senior this year in Elon College and is available for preaching services at points available to the college.

In scanning the papers that come to our table, the following appeared in the Herald of Gospel Liberty: "I want to express to you my appreciation of the greatest religious paper which I read, and I read many others. I think our paper equals, if not surpasses, them all."—Sion M. Lynam. Mr. Lynam writes the "Observatory Notes" for THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and he has awakened an interest commendatory of which he has not yet heard. He is growing in interest. To these most excellent magazines should be planted at least one paper in the other regional Conventions of the Christian Church, not yet supplied, which would be a forerunner to our chief journal. A single stalk of corn in the open garden does not fully fruit.

Rev. H. C. Caviness, Cary, N. C., on the date of August 17th, writes: "Just closed greatest meeting at Big Oak Christian Church we ever witnessed. All glory to Him from whom cometh all blessings!" Bro. Caviness wishes to express, through THE SUN, his appreciation of the prayers of the brotherhood that went up for the success of the meeting. Because the Church did not hold the people, a large bush arbor was erected and hundreds attended the three services each day. There were over three hundred confessions, and more than seventy additions to Big Oak Church, with the other converts, practically all of them uniting with some Church. Bro. Caviness is at present in a revival near Richmond, Va. He goes to our Christian Church at Bennett, N. C., to begin a meeting September 13th. Bro. Caviness is one of our devout and successful evangelists, and the Lord seems to use him abundantly in the work of winning souls. He has been called to our Liberty Church, Vance County, N. C., and thinks of accepting this one Church and spending a week in each month in that congregation, giving the rest of his time to evangelistic services this coming year. He craves the prayers of our people the coming year in his efforts to do his part in building up the kingdom of our Lord.

THE CROSS IN HUMAN EXPERIENCE.

The Founder of Christianity was put to death by the most degrading, excruciating, and terrifying method known in His day—or, perhaps, in any day of the world.

The cross was the shame of shame, the horror of horrors, into which it was intended by those who inflicted it, that every ingredient of paid that was known, or that could be imagined, should be made active. The pain of the cross was physical, the sorrow of the cross was altruistic, the agony of the cross was psychic and spiritual.

The meaning of it is deeper than we can fathom, the cost of it greater than we have figures to symbolize.

We do not think upon the cross often or gratefully enough today. Possibly we have convinced ourselves, or think we have, that the physical aspects of it are merely incidental. Maybe we do not like to gaze upon it—it seems morbid, or men yielding to dramatic instincts have vulgarized it by making it mere melodramatic heroism. No wonder people revolt against that.

But waiving that, are we sure there is nothing psychic, spiritual, eternal in the physical aspects of the cross? How does the physical touch the spiritual, and by what divine chemistry does it sublimate into the eternal and become the conscious power and refinement of the whole race? That it does this, history and personal experience prove. There are infinite implications even in the cry of a hurt child.

As we said, these questions are too hard for us, though irresistibly insistent. To escape the mystery, which dazzles by its brightness, theology has often taken refuge in philosophy. But those who live by love and who, with simple luminous belieg, face facts as they are, still sing with fervent prayer:

"Near the cross! O Lamb of God,
Bring its scenes before me;
Help me walk from day to day
With its shadows o'er me."

"Crass literalism," says the theologian whose religion partakes only of the rarefied idealistic view of Christianity. But to the cryptic faith of the man and woman whose theology is in deeds, not words, in suffering and not ease—and who sees and feels the tremendous issues of the struggle of the Christians now going on in the world, there is grace even in a thorn in the flesh. What must the millions of crosses daily borne mean to the faith and the life of mankind?

It was St. Paul's profound, but pre-eminently practical teaching that the Church is the body of Christ and that it must, therefore, fill up the sufferings of Jesus Christ left behind. The best illumination of that deep and searching word is the history of humanity, especially that part of it which identified itself with Jesus Christ since the crucifixion of the Divine Man of Galilee. Every broken heart and every sacrificed life are experiences through which Jesus Christ somehow works toward the redemption of the world.—Christian Evangelist.

BETHLEHEM AND ANTIOCH.

These two Churches, having been without a regular pastor the past year, it was greatly desired that a series of meetings be held at each during the summer. Our good friend and dear brother, Rev. B. J. Earp, Newport News, very generously consented to spend the better part of his vacation with these two Churches. Rev. J. D. Wicker, a dear friend of the people of both Churches, and many years ago their faithful and devoted pastor, consented to join Bro. Earp and assist in every way he could. Bro. Earp has kindly reported in a personal way to the Mission Secretary the results of his two weeks' work, and the report is so interesting and suggestive that we feel disposed to give it to SUN readers, with the hope that it will not only encourage these Churches, but lead to the securing of a pastor and a continuation of the work so well done by Bro. Earp and Bro. Wicker.—Editor.

"I was requested to come to Macon, N. C., and to go out to Bethlehem Church, which for two or three years has been pastorless, and give a week's service; then to cross the Roanoke River and give a week to Antioch. In keeping with this request, and the will of God, I began Sunday, August 9th, at Bethlehem, preaching two sermons daily, and continued through Friday. I found the Church nearly dead, but not quite. (The Disciples had been crowding their preacher upon our people, the door had been locked, and a split had been caused as a result.) My Rev. Bro. J. D. Wicker, of Sanford, came Monday. He organized this Church years ago, and though now eighty-five years of age, rendered valuable service in prayer and exhortation. It appeared we had no deed to this Church property. I got busy and, with the assistance of Bro. Wicker, a justice of the peace and others concerned, secured a deed, made to the Eastern N. C. C. Conference, properly signed and recorded at Warrenton. After that was accomplished, it appeared that God had not forgotten His people, for His love began to bind them back together again. Some came that had not been to Bethlehem for seven years. The Church was revived. Eleven joined the Church. Thirteen were baptized. The Church is in good shape now, and respectively begs your department for a pastor, if such can be arranged or supplied.

"At the conclusion of the services at Bethlehem, after all candidates had been baptized, and such others as desired baptism, I crossed the Roanoke River, with Uncle Wicker, and, on Sunday, August 16th, began a meeting at Antioch, Warren County, N. C. I understand that Bro. Elisha Bradshaw had for a few months been coming over and preaching to these people. We started facing many discouragements and some opposition. Antioch was once a strong Church. Many have moved away. Some are dead. All appeared discouraged. I have had one of the battles of a lifetime. I knew God was alive, but these dear people were discouraged—the remnant that remained. Uncle Wicker prayed earnestly, I prayed, the people prayed, and Bro. Wicker preached once for us. But still the battle was not won for Jesus. Wednesday, the enemy began to retreat. Victory began to come to the people of God. Co-operation at last was given. The devil retreated and Jesus had His way. Sixteen members were added to the Church. Fourteen were baptized. Over $100 were pledged on painting the Church, and a committee appointed to continue until the work was completed. B. J. EARP."

PLAYING WITH MEN'S LIVES.

As the long, long toll of deaths by airplane accidents is increased by the disaster which apparently has befallen the gallant men who officered and manned the navy's seaplane PN-9, No. 1, it becomes more and more difficult to understand why both the services not only permit, but encourage, these ventures so highly charged with danger. This latest flight, for instance, might quite as well have been tried out over the land. Why send brave men to almost certain death in order to complete a mere spectacular test? Why try the fuel capacity of a heavier-than-air machine under conditions which necessitated flirting with death? If it was considered of so much importance to establish the speed and safety and stability of the two seaplanes—one of which, incidentally, was forced down after having traveled only about 300 miles—why was it judged wise to make the attempt in a straightaway to the westward over the Pacific? Before a single attempt was made to land on the Langley, scores of successful landings had been made on a lot of land precisely the size and shape of the Langley's landing-deck. Until the airplane is made more stable, these wild flights over the clutching seas will be little better than playing with the lives of men.—Selected.

SPRING THINGS.

By Elsie Parrish.

I like the things
That springtime brings—
A crocus on the lawn,
And pussywillows in the woods
As soon as snow is gone.

I like the things
That springtime brings,
They are so very new—
A star of Bethlehem for me,
A violet for you!

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

WEALTH CANNOT SAVE A NATION.

Just now, as our national government is giving to the public the amount of income tax each State has paid into the national treasury the past year, we are indulging a pardonable pride in the exhibit of our abundance. And then in many instances the amount of taxes from incomes of wealthy neighbors is printed, and we feel more keenly a growing pride in ours "as the wealthiest nation and richest people on earth."

It is well to make, to have, and to hold. Wealth is to be coveted and riches are worth striving after. Wealth and riches, however, are not an end within themselves and never make a nation mighty nor a people great. They give, riches do, opportunity, privilege and power. Only when the privileges conferred by wealth are used and not abused, is wealth a blessing or a benefit. Only when the power conferred by riches is used for human benefit, is power safe and not dangerous and deadly.

Now, through the ages, men have not been able, seemingly, to use the power of riches for the uplift of men, but have in all ages used their power for their and others' undoing.

The hope of our nation today is not in our resources or our riches; but in our ability to use those resources and devote those riches, in ever increasing volume, to the intellectual, moral and spiritual uplift and benefit of mankind.

If riches could have saved a nation and made a civilization permanent, surely Rome would still be standing, and her civilization with its legions of trained soldiers would be exercising dominion and power in all the earth. Rome was rich. Her citizens had incomes that make our income-tax lists look poor and beggarly in comparison.

Read just a brief description from Gibbon's "Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," page 18 of Vol. iii.: "Many of these stately mansions [of Roman citizens] might almost excuse the exagerration of the poet: that Rome contained a multitude of palaces, and that each was equal to a city, since it included within its own precincts everything which could be subservient to either use or luxury: markets, hippodromes, temples, fountains, baths, porticos, shady groves, and artificial avaries. The historian, Olympiodorus, who represents the state of Rome when it was besieged by the Goths (408 A. D.) observes that several of the richest senators received from their estates an annual income of four thousand pounds of gold, above one hundred and sixty thousand pounds sterling [equal in our money to over $500,000.00]."

If palaces and riches and luxuries and festivals and opulence could make a state or a people great and abiding, then Rome had not perished. It was the riches of Rome that proved her ruin. No nation in fact has ever perished from poverty. No civilization has ever crumbled because of its want or need. All have gone down, so far, crushed beneath their own ruins by the weight of their wealth, and the wanton waste, extravagence and wickedness engendered by wealth.

Our country and our civilization are safe only as we bear in mind and keep in practice the immortal proverb of inspiration, "Righteousness exalteth a nation; but sin is a reproach to any people.—Proverbs 14: 34. J. O. A.

AFTER CHURCH MEMBERSHIP, WHAT?

Several hundred persons have been received into our Christian churches within the past few weeks. One who has read the columns of THE SUN is compelled to be impressed, even from the few pastors who have thus far reported, with the large number of conversions and accessions to the Church.

Now that these new members are in the Church, what are they to do, what are they going to be given or requested to do, that will make their daily life, their thoughts, and their habits, different from what they were before they made a confession and joined the Church?

Are they to be neglected? Are they to be left now to drift along in any sort of hit and miss method of doing things right or wrong, as they did before they were converted? If so, then there has been little gained by the evangelistic effort to gather them in.

What is to be done now for these new converts and these new accessions to let them know what their changed, new life is to be and to lead to?

Have these new members been told what the Christian Church is, what it stands for, what it is trying to do in the world? Have they been told so that they fully understand, that we as a Church have certain well fixed and cardinal principles upon which we as a Church stand, and which they are expected to live up to and advocate in the world.

One wonders also how many of them, on joining the Church, have been told that THE CHRISTIAN SUN is our Church paper and that every Christian should take it and read it. What has been done for the new members, now that they have joined. J. O. A.

WHO IS THE SINNER?

"Who did sin, this man or his parents, that he was born blind?" Jesus was asked by His disciples when He cured a man blind from his birth. It is a live question today. Who did sin, the youth who held up a bank, or his parents, or others?

A pitiful case has come to light in California. A Texas mother, a hard-working scrubwoman, went all the way to that State to see if she could not save her youngest son from the gallows for murder committed while robbing a bank. She found her other two sons also in the same penitentiary, one in for life for bank robbery, and one for five years for some other crime.

Ignorant, but honest, and left a widow while these boys were small, she undertook to support them by common labor. They went to school but little, played on the streets, became members of the gang, and early went to the bad, all because of lack of wholesome home influence and training. It would be easy to say that this parent sinned because she failed to give her boys moral home training, but she was both unfitted to do so and unable to provide a good home for them. They "just growed." There are thousands of others who are growing up equally without moral home training, where the parents are far greater sinners than this ignorant mother in their neglect of proper training of their children. In their cases it is not difficult to answer the question of who did sin.

But perhaps we can discover another sinner. Said Albert N. Denham, famous police administrator, lately, "Two magnetic forces greet our children as they enter community life. On one side, pulling them towards its maw, is the poolroom, the suburban dance hall, the automobile and the rapidly developing sophistication characteristic of the modern juvenile. Over the other way are the Boy Scouts, the Girl Scouts, the newsboys' clubs, Church societies and similar organizations. The first attracts by mystery of darkness and rhythm of music, the lure of sensuality, the risk of danger and the privacy of seclusion. The alternative has fewer charms and proves no thrilling transition from parental control and the natural direction of the school-room."

There is much more, but this shows that organized society provides a multitude of allurements for the youth to be bad, and by far less attractions to be good, even when they are provided at all, as they are not for a majority of boys. Since society produces the conditions which lead boys and girls into crime and evil lives, it is the duty of society to create and maintain other influences at least as strong for the shaping of honorable character.

Besides, society must do it or perish. In this sense we have the answer to the question, who is the sinner?—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

NEW DISCOVERIES IN EGYPT.

The astonishing discovery of a succession of civilizations in Egypt, running back some 14,000 years, is said to have been made recently by British archeologists. The story of this wonderful find, which is known as the "Baderian civilizations," is related by the celebrated archeologist, Flinders Petrie, in the London Times. His statements are confirmed by two other archeologists who witnessed the excavations. Pottery of a fine quality, ivory work in combs and spoons, palettes, and a number of statuettes showing rare workmanship, were among the finds. Experts express the conviction that "we have now a continuous view of successive Egyptian civilizations, carried back some 14,000 years."

Truly, nature is a book and the succession of layers of discovery turned over by the learned investigators are its leaves. The old earth tells its own story. Experts hold that the searchers have not yet reached the real sources of the earliest languages and arts, and that they will ultimately be traced to the caucasus, whence they came to the Nile region.—Christian Herald.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND SERVICE.

"Christ Jesus, who being in the form of God, . . . took upon Himself the form of a servant." —Phil. 2:5-7.

"What shall I do, Lord?"—Acts 10:22.

[Address of President W. A. Harper to the students of Elon College Sunday, Sept. 6, 1925.]

Jesus is unique among the founders of the world's religions, in that He died young. He is pre-eminently the friend of young people. Those whom He called to His personal fellowship for special training in propagating the principles of His kingdom were young men. When a certain rich young ruler came to Him, it is recorded expressly that Jesus loved the young man. He understood youth and He loved youth. The young in every generation since have loved Him with a passionate devotion whenever they have properly understood Him.

Jesus has been called the world's supreme idealist, and there is abundant evidence to substantiate this view. His idealism, however, was not that of the impractical dreamer, but of the constructive statesman. His idealism has transformed the attitudes of men with respect to every element of our life, as well as with respect to the institutions which serve our life. In His lifetime when Herod heard of Him and His teachings, it is related that Herod feared. The unprincipled monarch recognized in Christ not a mere idealist, but a disturber of injustice and oppression and unrighteousness in every form. He is to this day the proclaimer of a disturbing idealism.

Every generation of Christian history has had its own peculiar disturbances based on the teachings and ideals of Jesus. One age has had to struggle with the problem of the home as this idealist would solve it, while another generation would find itself dealing particularly with the application of His teachings to the problem of industry. In our own day, the teachings of Jesus, with reference to human brotherhood, appear to be the characteristically disquieting feature of His gospel.

In order to comprehend fully the necessity for this continued and protracted disquietude, it will be helpful to recall that the truth in Christ Jesus is of twofold character. He came as the Word of God, and declared Himself to be the Truth. Truth in this sense comprehends the eternal element of His revelation. The other truth which He came to reveal and inculcate is properly described as growing truth. In His last hours with His disciples, He declared that He would send the Comforter, the spirit of truth, who should lead them into all truth. Our Lord, therefore, summated in Himself truth in its eternal and also in its growing revelation. He thoroughly understood that the disciples whom He gathered around Himself could not comprehend the complete fruition of His teachings. In this twentieth century since He came, we do not even yet comprehend His teachings in their fullness. Each succeeding generation is privileged under the guidance of the Holy Spirit to comprehend anew and with an enlarged application the growing truth of God. The Holy Spirit as the guide of men, leading them into ever-enlarging conceptions of God and His truth, is the most distinguishing characteristic of the Christian religion. Given the revelation of God in Jesus Christ and the Holy Spirit as the interpreter and guide into a completer understanding of the divine will and purpose, and you have the essence of a universally satisfying spiritual religion. No other religion thus provides for growth and development in its fundamental conceptions as does the Christian faith. It is this feature of our faith which makes us absolutely sure that all men will accept it as satisfying, when once they comprehend it.

Jesus was unique also in His conception of the spiritual life. The spiritual life, according to this Teacher, is the most normal thing in the world. It is the natural life lived in a new way. The natural life is selfish, but Jesus taught unselfishness. His gospel transformed the life of men by substituting altruistic for individualistic motives. The natural life is bent on securing its rights, but Jesus taught that men should be exercised only to perform their own duties. The Christian man has one supreme right—to see that every other man in the world gets his rights. Here again Jesus transformed the life of men by substituting a new motive, the motive of unselfishness in the place of the motive of selfishness. The natural man is inclined to exercise authority over others, but the spiritual man aspires to serve others. Jesus declared that He came not to be ministered unto, but to minister. He also taught the disciples that the one of them who most served his brother-men should be the greatest of all. Here again, Jesus transformed the life of men by a change of motive. The natural man is inclined to believe that his own advantage is surest to be served by overcoming his fellows in the competition of life, but Jesus taught a different principle, that life is best served by fellowship in co-operation. Real satisfaction of life comes, according to this spiritual Seer, not when we rise in triumph over the crushed and bleeding forms of our competitors, but when we look in love upon a weak and discouraged brother who has been made strong and vigorous and hopeful in life by the assistance we, in our strength and through our willing co-operation, have been enabled to extend him. Here again Jesus transforms the life of men by substituting a new and a more uplifting motive—the motive of sacrificial service, lovingly enlisted in the cause of humanity.

Jesus referred to His disciples as salt with saving power; as light with purifying power; and as leaven with the capacity of rapid and unlimited power of increase and expansion. It is difficult to understand how it is possible to deduce from these teachings the doctrine that Jesus is interested primarily in the individual soul. It is true that He declared the soul of an individual man to be of more worth than all the wealth of the material universe, but He was thinking undoubtedly of the individual soul ripened in all its manifold powers. According to His conception, no soul could be considered ripened apart from the obligations it owed to other souls. The social gospel is, therefore, inextricably involved in the individual gospel. Jesus would save the individual that he may be the means of bringing salvation to others. To be satisfied, therefore, with one's own salvation alone is, according to Jesus, to be lost. The salt that has lost its savor is to be cast out and trodden under the foot of man. The light that is individual and not social is hidden under a bushel and is of no use to any one. The leaven that does not multiply is devoid of life. The obligation to serve, therefore, is primary in the Christian program. Christian service is the real and the true fundamentalism, for which all the followers of Christ should wholeheartedly contend.

Jesus had an enthusiasm for humanity. He regarded man as a vast reservoir of spiritual force, a force that unless it were developed and used would waste away. He believed that this spiritual force could be liberated, and when it should be liberated it would clothe man with splendid virtues and expand his being until he should approach the very dimensions of the Divine. He did not believe this capacity was limited to any special section or segment of society. He was a true spiritual democrat, and believed that every man is capable of immeasurable spiritual enlargement. He, therefore, believed that the world is not only worth saving, but that it is capable of being saved. He was, therefore, the supreme optimist of human history.

The New Testament brings us into an atmosphere characteristically its own. How different it is from the atmosphere of the psalms! "The Lord is my Shepherd," declares the best-known and best-loved psalm of them all. It is the atmosphere of personal religion. But when we come into the New Testament and say "Our Father," we have entered the realm of social religion. In the Lord's Prayer, no singular pronouns signifying human persons are used. All the pronouns referring to persons are plural and social. It is "Our Father." We are to pray that God will give "us our daily bread"; that He will "forgive us our trespasses"; that He will "lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil." What delightful spiritual climate this social atmosphere of the Christian gospel brings to us!

Jesus was no ascetic. He loved life and He loved it in its social manifestations. The human body, according to His view, was not something to be escaped from nor held under, but to be used in the service of God and brother-men. He dignified the human body by declaring it to be the temple of God. And while He did not expressly say it, His teachings warrant us in thinking of the world as the temple in which human beings dwell. It is certainly our privilege to transform the world into a temple, ministering to the spiritual necessities of our human life. We may erect houses of worship, but God made the whole universe to be His dwelling-place. The world is, therefore, a true temple. Jesus said this in effect to the woman at the well.

Christ could not think of goodness other than in its social implications. We have sometimes been prone to pronounce a man good if he lives a respectable private life. Christ would classify no man as good because he practiced the code of technical pieties and met the requirements of what we may call ecclesiastical proprieties. The good man, according to Jesus, must not only practice the pieties and proprieties adjudged to be desirable, but must exemplify benevolence and brotherliness in all the relations of his life. It has been said that all the people in the world, of whom there are one billion seven hundred million, could live in the State of Texas, provided they should exemplify toward each other in every way active good will. The growth of the world's population will ultimately depend on the practice of Christian principles. Brotherhood is not an incident in the Christian way of life, but the essence and the glory of it. The earth, in the present state of the arts and sciences, can support a hundred billion population if men would truly and whole-heartedly practice Christian brotherhood toward each other. We do not believe this. We are, therefore, apostate, and so our life is filled with sorrow and bitterness, and even the Church of God, which should be the most brotherly and unified organization in the world, is divided into hundreds of competing sects. We have the conflict, bitter, passionate, unspiritual, in our day between the fundamentalists and the modernists, between the traditionalists and the liberalists. Both of them are right and both of them are wrong. One is standing for truth in its eternal aspect, and the other for truth in its growing aspect. The real Christian strives for truth in both aspects. It would appear that the traditionalists are in need of a bomb. They need to be shaken up and started to growing. The liberalists are in the need of a foundation and a heritage. They forget the debt we owe the past and depreciate the value of the Christian centuries.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

September 30, 1925, will long be remembered at Cypress Chapel Christian Church, in Nansemond County, Va., as the day on which Suffolk Lodge, No. 30, A. F. & A. M., laid the corner-stone of the new $25,000 Church. This is the fourth house of worship erected at this place. The first house was erected as an English Church about 1743. After the Revolution, this Chapel was used by the Episcopal Church in America. This use ended about 1791, and the Chapel was first occupied by the Christian Church about 1795. From that day until the present time, Cypress Chapel has been a stanch adherent of the Christian denomination.

About 1820, the old Chapel which had stood for seventy-seven years was repaired and enlarged to accommodate increased members and growing interest. Twenty-six years after this, in 1846, a new Church was erected. This building was occupied until 1870, when the old Church was razed and a new house of worship was erected. Rev. Dr. W. B. Wellons was the pastor of the Church at this time. The present building, nearing completion, with Rev. J. M. Roberts as pastor, is the fourth house of worship erected on the same site. As a place of Church and religious worship, its history covers a period of 182 years. Such a history makes the place sacred—one might say "holy ground"; and such a sacred history is a part of the life and character of the people who dwell in "old Cypress district."

The religious life of this nation is older than the civil government under which we live! and the civil government rests on the religious faith and service of those who follow Christ. Some of the pastors who have servid "old Cypress" are as follows: W. B. Wellons, E. W. Beale, John T. Kitchen, M. L. Williams, H. H. Butler, B. F. Black, and J. M. Roberts, who rejoices in the erection of this new house of worship.

In addition to the Church, a brick high school and a teacherage adjoin the grounds, and in addition to the laying of the corner-stone and the big dinner, an educational rally was held in the school auditorium in the afternoon, when Sam Davis presided at the piano, Division Superintendent Moore Williams introduced Lieutenant-Governor J. E. West, who introduced Hon. Harris Hart, State Superintendent of public Instruction, who made an address in harmony with the co-operative spirit between Church and school which works so well at Cypress. They are essential to each other. The Church would die without education, and the school would die without the Church. The laying of the corner-stone and the educational rally at the same time and place furnished a concrete example of Church and school co-operation.

The new Church will put new spirit into "old Cypress," the school will put new aspirations in the minds of the young, and the memory of such great men as W. B. Wellons and Isaac N. Walter, who preached in the old Church, will inspire Pastor Roberts and the congregation for future work. W. W. STALEY.

CORNER STONE LAID AT CYPRESS CHAPEL.

We congratulate the beloved pastor, our good friend, Rev. J. M. Roberts, and his good people of Cypress Chapel, who are engaged in building an ample and costly house of worship. The following from the Norfolk Virginian-Pilot is of interest to SUN readers:

"Hundreds of people today (Sept. 3d) attended the cornerstone laying of the handsome new $25,000.00 Christian Church at Cypress Chapel and the educational rally held in the afternoon. The entire day was one of unusual interest and enjoyment. The ceremony, in charge of Suffolk Lodge No. 30, A. F. & A. M., held at 11 o'clock was most impressive.

"The invocation was pronounced by the Rev. I. W. Johnson, D. D., and the address was made by Col. George Caball, of Ruth Lodge No. 89, A. F. & A. M., of Norfolk, and the building was received by R. S. Holland, chairman of the building committee; T. A. Walker, architect; and C. R. Hotfler, superintendent of construction. Officers of Suffolk Lodge No. 30, in charge of the ceremonies, were John B. Norfleet, marshall; I. B. Powell, master; O. H. Powell, senior warden; Mr. Pope, of Drewryville, junior warden; Hersey Woodward, secretary; W. F. Whitley, treasurer; P. J. Hannah, senior deacon; F. H. Gray, junior deacon.

"The Rev. J. Martin Roberts, pastor, presided and a large delegation of Masons and citizens from Suffolk was present, as well as hundreds from the community.

"Cypress Chapel Christian Church was organized in 1795, and in the corner-stone with other interesting articles were placed old coins, the contents of the old corner-stone, program of the day, list of pastors, and list of deacons and other notables.

"Pastors who have served the Cypress Chapel Christian Church are, W. B. Wellons, D.D., the Rev. E. W. Beale, the Rev. John T. Kitchen, the Rev. M. L. Williams, the Rev. H. H. Butler, the Rev. B. F. Black, and the Rev. J. M. Roberts.

"After the elaborate luncheon served by the ladies of the community, cafeteria style, on the lawn of the church, education community day exercises were held with the principal address by State Superintendent of Schools Harris Hart, who talked of the educational program of the State, its aims and ideals.

"Mr. Hart was presented by Lieutenant Governor J. E. West, who was presented by R. M. Williams. G. C. Mann, principal of the Cypress Chapel school, presided. Singing by the community chorus, piano selections by Sam Davis, the blind pianist, completed the program of the day."

THE MOST IMPORTANT THING IN LIFE.

We should all discover this if possible, and especially should it be the concern of the young. It is so easy to waste life in mere secondary things, or on those that do not matter. Hours are spent in exercise not worth minutes, and whole lives are frittered away in useless pursuits. Those who can tell us what is really worth while are our prophets and our eternal friends.

Among striking utterances on this point, we reproduce one made recently by Prof. Herbert S. Hadley, of Washington University, in an address at Harvard, we believe. He said:

"The really fundamental thing in a man's life is his choice of a religion. Two religions are today struggling for the mastery. There is the religion of mammon, whose dominant purpose is selfishness and whose creed is indifference to moral considerations, except so far as they may be regarded as instruments of individual advancement. There is the religion of God, whose purpose is service and whose creed is loyalty to something larger than yourselves."

President Hadley is a man of very wide experience and has for many years been a leader among his fellow-men. He has had opportunity to test ideals of religion and education, and it means very much to hear him say this. It is not a mere guess about life.

The observation was no doubt first learned from the Master, and then proved by actual life. In the Sermon on the Mount, the Great Teacher said: "Seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you." "These things" are what we usually call the material comforts of life. But making a living is not the supreme issue. We find that in making a life and realize that as "the religion of God."—Ex.

CONVENTION OF S. S. & C. E. SOCIETIES OF EASTERN VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.

REV. J. H. LIGHTBOURNE, Exec. Secy.

At a May meeting of the officers and secretaries of the Convention, the executive secretary was authorized to effect in the Sunday Schools of the Convention the organization provided for in the following resolution:

"Each Sunday School of the Convention be requested to elect a director of Christian education, whose duty it shall be to attend the sessions of the Convention of S. S. & C. E. Societies, and to interpret the program of the Convention to the school and Christian Endeavor Societies; and to endeavor to effect in the school and Endeavor Societies the program of the Convention, and who will be the medium of approach to the school and Endeavor Societies by the officers and secretaries of the Convention."

The executive secretary was also authorized to have printed in THE CHRISTIAN SUN the plan of organization which is before you. He was also authorized to have this plan of organization printed on a chart suitable to be displayed in the Church and Sunday School auditoriums of the Convention. This will be done, and two copies sent to each Church. J. H. L.

OBJECTIVES:

An Organized Sunday School, Graded and using Graded Literature.
The use of "Worship and Song," the book which provides Correlated Worship Programs and highest type of Hymns.
An Expressional Service of some character for every age represented in the Sunday School.
A Church fully awake to the Educational Obligation.

Christ—The Great and Good Teacher.

RELATIVE TO THE CHART.

The chart on organization is the outgrowth of the repeated acknowledgments by Sunday School superintendents and workers to the effect that they are not acquainted with the plan of organization adopted by our Department of Christian Education, and the insistent demand year after year by these superintendents and workers for such a chart. It is our hope to place at the disposal of every Church of our Conference two of these charts, artistically gotten up and legible in even the larger auditoriums.

We wish to thank Miss Lucy Eldredge for her invaluable assistance, Prof. P. J. Kernodle for a suggestion from the floor of the Convention, and the Convention as a whole for its lively discussion of several features of the plan.

We wish also to offer several observations relative to the creation of the chart. It looks simple, simple of creation, but your secretary found it a difficult task. He has been much in prayer about it, and individual words and groupings of words were long on the altar. This was peculiarly so of the term "Church school," of the omitting of the expression "the Sunday session of the Church school," and the manner of stating the fourth objective. Of these, we have to say, of the first, we found no fault in it; of the second, that it is slightly ambiguous, and that the term Sunday School is not only cherished, but is universally understood; and of the last, that the Church is morally obligated to provide expressional services, and if these cannot be provided as Christian Endeavor, then they should somehow be incorporated

We wish also to make several explanations and into the class work of the Sunday School. suggestions. It is a full, if incomplete, program. It is beyond the attainment, provision by provision, of perhaps the majority of our Churches. But there is not a single Church in our Conference but what can put into effect the general provisions of this program. Should the Churches do so? We think they should!

In the first place, it is our denominational plan of organization. It is upon this plan that all of our educational work is based. For the local Church to intelligently co-operate with the denominational objectives, it must have something of this organization in order to even interpret those objectives. In the second place, it is the program adopted by your own Convention of Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies. It is your very own. In the third place, it is to the advantage of the local Church to effect this organization and the provisions of the objectives. It is for efficiency in spiritual things. It is for better teaching and training in Christian morals and life. It is for the building up of the doctrinal life and the creating of Christian thinking and Christian attitudes. It takes cognizance of every phase of age, of capacity and of the profound psychological principles of life. It will put harmony into the educational activities of the Church through its correlated programs and plans.

We would suggest, at least, in every school, the organization by departments, and the organization of the cradle roll and home departments. With this as a beginning, more grading and closer can be taken up and accomplished as it is found advisable. We would suggest the adoption for all ages below the eighteenth year of graded literature. Graded literature is no new thing under the sun. Dr. W. W. Staley informs us they had graded literature of a kind when he was a boy in Sunday School. And in conclusion, we suggest the use of "Worship and Song." "Worship and Song" can be used for Church services, for prayer services, and it is a real Sunday School book. In it are the hymns and the music of the centuries. And in the back, programs of worship, correlated programe for every occasion and every Sunday. "Worship and Song," cloth bound, is expensive as first cost, but after a year of service you still have a serviceable book. Try them.

Oh, yes, I am not quite ready to close, after all. I want just once again to urge every Sunday School of the Eastern Virginia Conference to appoint a director of Christian education. J. H. L.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

STEWARDSHIP AND PROMOTION.

WARREN H. DENISON, D. D., Secretary.

Forward-Movement Subscriptions.

They are now all past due. The funds are sorely needed. They are sacred obligations. They are legal obligations. Work has been begun on the expectation that they were good and would be paid. That work will have to be abandoned at this October meeting, unfinished, in proportion as these pledges are not paid. Our books for this Church year will close September 30th. It is now September 10th. These subscriptions practically assist all departments of our Church activities. We count on your unpaid balance before September 30th.

Stewardship Names and Addresses.

When our Church year closes September 30th, we want in hand the full name and address of every Conference stewardship secretary. We need it for our report to the General Board, and for the "Christian Annual." We need also the name of the stewardship secretary of each local Church. It is important. We count on every Conference stewardship secretary to get us this information.

A Correct Procedure.

The Ohio Eastern Conference took action at its recent session, requiring its Churches to see that all reports to Conference from the Church, Sunday School, Christian Endeavor, missionary and other organizations should be prepared by the secretary and approved by the organization reporting before the report is sent to Conference. In case no meeting can actually be held when the report has been prepared by the secretary, then the report must be approved by the executive board of that department. This is the only correct procedure, and is worthy to be followed by all Churches. No secretary should be allowed to fill out and send any report to Conference until it is adopted by the organization sending it, or its executive if there cannot be a regular meeting held to approve it. Many times a Church is humiliated at Conference by incorrect reports. Then it is the right way to do, and no other way is so well.

Stewardship Study.

We can never saturate the Church with Christian stewardship so that it will bear fruit in high spiritual ideals, spiritual power, truer worship, and in a rational attitude toward our financial obligations, our Church finances, until we make it a subject of deliberate study. There is no short cut or easy road to stewardship conviction.

Cumulative Testimony.

Tithing is taking a new place in our thought. People are studying it who have never given it thought before. It cannot be passed by and laid aside easily. Testimonies keep coming from our thinkers and workers. Large clasess have been studying it at our summer schools of Christian education. A thinker, a college graduate now holding an important college position among us, said: "I find that I am considerably in arrears with my tithe, even though I thought I had been reasonably generous. I mean to begin to pay up arrears."

Here is a testimony from one of our most successful rural pastors, Rev. Rue Burnell, Orient, Iowa: "Tithing to me is an experience very rich in its blessing. It enables me to face my Master with the consciousness that, in this respect, I need not be ashamed. It relieves me from often being in search of an excuse to my fellows for my attitude toward kingdom work which requires money."

SUNDAY SCHOOL MISSIONARY OFFERINGS FOR AUGUST.

Wakefield, Va., $5.75; New Elam, New Hill, N. C., $3.91; New Elam, special "Children's Day" offering, $9.15; Turner's Chapel, Colon, N. C., $3.34; Fuller's Chapel, Henderson, N. C., $4.20; Ocean View, Va., $3.68; Pleasant Hill (A), R. 3, Liberty, N. C., $2.30; Wentworth, McCullers, N. C., $3.25; Durham, N. C., $10.39; Salem Chapel, Walnut Cove, N. C., $1.00; North Highlands, Columbus, Ga., $2.75; Zion, Moncure, N. C., $2.85; Beulah, Wadley, Ala., $1.10; Reidsville, N. C., $7.24; Mt. Auburn, Manson, N. C., $2.14; Clayton, N. C., $1.00; Antioch, Harrisonburg, Va., $4.36; Leaksville, Luray, Va., $2.44; South Norfolk, Va., $5.16; Linville, Harrisonburg, Va., $5.57; Elon Community Church, Elon College, N. C., $35.00; Rose Hill, Columbus, Ga., $4.05; United Christian Church, Lynchburg, Va., $13.70; Franklin, Va., $21.00; Holland, Va., $17.00; Liberty, Vance, $4.06; Wadley, Ala., $2.58; Liberty, N. C., $1.00; Union (South), Franklin, Va., $2.15; Palm St., Greensboro, N. C., $4.60; Randleman, N. C., $2.00; Dry Run, Seven Fountains, Va., $5.72; Auburn, R. 2, Garner, N. C., $3.67; Ramseur, N. C., $3.25; Antioch, Zuni, Va., $3.00; Shallow Ford, R. F. D., Burlington, N. C., $1.84; Winchester, Va., $5.64; Bethlehem, Timberville, Va., $2.89—total for month, $214.63.

While we are profoundly grateful to the schools named for their liberal offering, and to the other schools which contribute monthly to missions, it is noted with regret that there are quite a few schools in the Southern Christian Convention not yet sufficiently interested in enlarging the kingdom and building up schools and Churches elsewhere to make a monthly contribution. For the next few months these contributions, not otherwise designated, will go to the support and extension of our mountain work in Carroll County, Va., and it is devoutly hoped that many of our schools not already doing so will vote for, and send us, one offering a month for this most worthy and needy work of the kingdom.

Fraternally,

INTEREST AT FANCY GAP.

These are busy days at Fancy Gap. The foundation for our Rocky Ford building is completed. It is built of rock and cement. The face is of the flint rock, which makes a durable and attractive foundation. The construction of the frame is already begun. It is under the supervision of Bro. C. N. Johnson, of Fuquay, N. C. He is giving free of charge a month's services. He and Bro. Sorrell leave the parsonage very early each morning and return late in the evening.

Our people here are showing great interest and are working faithfully. Bro. Johnson is well pleased with his force of workmen.

We trust that the work, which is so well begun, will not be retarded by lack of funds. Our faith in God and in the many friends of our Fancy Gap mission will not permit us to think of failure; but we should like so much to have the money in sight while Bro. Johnson is here, so that he will not be handicapped, and will be able to push every part of the work during his stay.

This is the Lord's house that we are building at Rocky Ford, so let us give cheerfully. "God loveth a cheerful giver." All donations may be sent to our Mission Secretary, Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Elon College, who will receipt and acknowledge same in THE SUN, and sent to us for use in paying bills now coming due. Thank you, dear friends. MARGARET H. MOREY.

MT. OLIVET CHURCH.

A member of Mt. Olivet Church reports that one of the largest audiences to assemble in their Church was present on Sunday evening, August 30th, to hear Prof. A. R. Flowers on the subject, "The Bible in Masonry." People from three different counties made up the audience. This was Prof. Flowers' last discourse at Mt. Olivet until November 15th.

There is a spirit of warmest friendship existing between Bro. Flowers and the good people of the Mt. Olivet section. Bro. Flowers made the public statement that he had found no better people in his travels in fifteen different States. This certainly does speak well for the brotherhood at Mt. Olivet. E. C. MORES.

GOOD HOPE.

Good Hope meeting began Sunday, August 9th, at 11 A. M., and closed Friday P. M. following. Services were held at 2:30 and 4:30 in the afternoons. The weather was very hot. There was a thermometer at the back of the pulpit, and nearly every afternoon it registered 96 degrees. The attendance was large and the attention fine; the result was one profession. There will be baptism administered and opportunity for joining the Church the second Sunday in September.

We are enjoying the services at this old Church. Though small in membership, they are loyal, and we have served them for years. We hope before the Conference meets yet to show a good report in growth. JAS. L. FOSTER.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND SERVICE.

Jesus said that He came not to destroy, but to fulfill. His Spirit is anxious to conserve all the good of Christian history and to lead men into larger truth as rapidly as they are able to bear Failure is possible for the Church in our day from two sources only. The first of these possible sources of failure is to be found in the inability to strike the spiritual note clearly; and the second in the unwillingness to define religion and to express the religious life so as to include every legitimate human interest. If we should fail in either of these respects, it would be a lamentable pity. The liberalists are in danger of not striking the spiritual note, and the fundamentalists are in danger of defining religion so narrowly that it excludes many of the legitimate human interests. The heart of Christ yearns, we may safely say, for the synthesis of these two views of the spiritual life.

There can be no doubt that Jesus believed that all life is capable of spiritual use and edification. There can likewise be no doubt that He aspired to have every energy of the human heart and life expand itself in such a way as to promote the spiritual interests of mankind. He delighted to draw the metaphors and similes of His teachings from the ordinary every-day experiences of men. His parables abound in references to normal living. It is clear that the Master Teacher intended us to understand that every experience of life is capable of spiritual utilization. And what He believed with reference to the life of men, He believed with reference to the institutions that serve their life, that they, too, should be permeated with the spirit and ideal of service to humanity. The basic institutions of our social order readily lend themselves to this view. The home certainly exists to promote the life of man. Industry, too, and education as well as government and religion, to say nothing of the institutions that essay to direct and conserve the leisure hours through play and amusement, have the only justification of their existence in that they serve and promote the life of man in an uplifting way.

I may be pardoned for saying that you have the right to expect that your college will be the servant of your life. Colleges do not exist to make money, but to make men and women, men and women of high ideals, of noble altruism. It is estimated that the college student pays about one-third the cost of his education. The other two-thirds are borne by the college itself through its endowment, the money invested in its plant, and the generous donations of large-hearted men and women. Your college is glad to be able in this wholesome and uplifting way to exemplify to you in your youthful years the spirit of service and of sacrifice in service, which the whole life of Christ and every teaching of Christ make obligatory upon the men and institutions that aspire to be Christian to embody in their aims and practices. Were colleges ever to assume the attitude that students should pay fully the cost of their education, they would cease at that time to be Christian institutions. They must give far more than they receive in order to be able to claim for themselves the honor to represent Christ in the realm of education. Remember that every dollar you shall this year pay your college she is matching with two, and gladly doing it.

I always like to speak to young people in regard to service, because they are eager to serve and have their whole life spread out before them. In view of what has been said in regard to the teaching and program of Jesus, I think it is entirely proper at this opening worship service of the college year to be definitely practical in suggesting the bases according to which Christian young men and women should select their life-work. If all life is spiritual and all service should be rendered as unto God, what difference does it make, you may inquire, as to the manner in which the individual soul shall invest itself? Is not one calling as worthy as another? Yes or no! It all depends upon the individual questioner, for before any young life can be fully assured that it is investing itself in such a way as to bear the largest fruitage in the service of humanity, certain heart-searching questions need to be personally faced. Let me enumerate these questions:

Does the calling that is contemplated challenge the worthiest in me?

Is it a calling that is temporary or that will furnish me an avenue of service throughout all my life?

Does it offer me the opportunity of fourfold development—physically, mentally, socially and spiritually?

Am I situated so that I can make the preparation required for best service in this calling?

Are the duties of this calling such as to be congenial to my nature and disposition?

What type of manhood and womanhood does this profession produce in the case of those who pursue it?

Is the service which this calling offers me the opportunity to contribute such as to promote the happiness of humankind?

Is this calling already overcrowded?

Am I being influenced in my desire to enter this calling by the hope of financial reward or by the desire to serve?

Am I satisfied in my heart that God will approve my entering upon this calling?

Your life lies out before you. You are anxious to find an avenue of service worthy of your altruistic desire to serve the best interests of humanity and of the kingdom of God. You should, therefore, face these ten questions, and when your heart is satisfied with reference to them, no matter what the vocation you may choose may be, you may rest assured that in it you will be serving God and pleasing Christ in the life that you shall live and the work that you shall do. We dare not style any calling unclean or unworthy with respect to which these questions have been satisfyingly answered, and in the pursuit of which we shall conscientiously feel we are doing the will and purpose of God. Every service rendered with the motive of helping and uplifting the life of men, we may be sure is service to God, and we may be equally sure that He will bless us in its performance.

This age needs young people of prophetic vision, able to understand the Christian program of life. But this age needs more in its young people than prophetic vision. It must exact at their hands also capacity for generalship, the ability to organize the forces of nature and of life in such a way as to achieve their prophetic visions and make them uplifting realities in the life of men. This age also needs young people who will undertake this generalship of life and its forces in the spirit of joyous service. It is further in need of young people of fertile personality, fertile because they have heard the voice of God speaking unmistakably to them and so enriching their experience and qualifying them for a larger service. And most essential of all, this age needs young people who will co-operate with God, young people who will search the Scriptures and the record of human history and the depths of their own hearts in order to discover the mind and will and purpose of God for them and for the race of men.

At the very beginning of your college year, and for many of you, at the very beginning of your college career, I summon you to a life of Christian service as the highest vocation to which the human heart may dedicate itself. In the spirit in which Christ went about in the day in which He lived, and in the spirit in which He served the life of men and sacrificed Himself for them; in that spirit I call upon you to enter upon your life at this college this year, promising you every encouragement possible in your noble endeavor thus to invest your life. And I guarantee to every one of you who will enter upon the college year in this spirit of service to God and man a most happy and rewarding experience in the things which mankind most needs and your own hearts will abundantly approve.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

September 20, 1925.

Subject: "Paul Writes to the Thessalonians."

Golden Text: "In everything give thanks."—1 Thess. 5:18.

Lesson: 1 Thess. 1:5.

Devotional Reading: 2 Thess. 2:13-17.

Paul wielded a mighty pen. There might have been those in his day who thought the sword was mightier than the pen, but he was not one of them. And when he took up his pen to write, immortal works of power flowed from it. His words have transformed lives and helped to shape the course of nations. The shame of it is that we do not read his words more and apply them to our own lives.

Paul had had a rather "hectic" time in Thessalonica. After preaching to the Jews for three successive Sabbaths, he apparently took up work among the Gentiles. He won converts from three classes—the Jews themselves, the devout Greeks, and not a few of the chief women of the city. It would appear that the Greek element predominated. As usual, the bigoted Jews rose up against him, and arousing the populace and appealing to the ruling class on political grounds, they made things so unpleasant and unsafe for Paul that he was forced to leave the city. He went, first to Beroes, and then to Athens, and eventually reached Corinth. The Jews evidently thought that was the end of the matter, and Paul's converts and friends might have thought the same thing. But they had reckoned without Paul. He was made of sterner stuff. He had something of the shepherd's heart. He had no intention of leaving his people at the mercy of the wolves, both in and out of sheep's clothing. He, therefore, sent Timothy from Athens to Thessalonica to comfort the Christians and to bring back word with regard to their condition.

When Timothy returned, he brought information that, in spite of persecution, the Christians were standing firm; that they were troubled about the status of their dead at the second coming of Christ; that the opponents of the Church were doing their best to malign and blacken the character of Paul; and that there was a tendency on the part of some of the Christians, in view of the expected immediate coming of Christ, to neglect the ordinary duties of life. It was around these four points that Paul wrote his first letter to the Thessalonians. He congratulates them on their steadfastness, assures them that death will not rob their friends of their share in the second coming, defends himself against the charges that had been made against him, and exhorts the Thessalonians to perform their duties as becometh followers of the Master.

The portion of the letter as printed for today's lesson concerns itself with Paul's defense of himself and his gospel. He affirms that his motives were genuine when he entered into their city, and that his gospel had been sound. As an evidence of the former, he mentions the fact that he came to Thessalonica after he had been beaten and imprisoned in Philippi, and that he had carried on his work in Thessalonica in much conflict. It is one thing to hold certain beliefs and ideals; it is quite another thing to suffer for them. The fact that he had suffered for his ideals was evidence, thought Paul, of the genuineness of his motives. Furthermore, lest any one should say that he was looking for a soft spot, he had worked day and night at his trade and thus had supported himself so that he had been free to preach the gospel. It would seem that the man was in earnest. There might be a high rate of mortality among many ministers today if they were subjected to such a severe test.

As for his message, the Thessalonians themselves could bear witness to its character and its power. Paul had used very simple language; he was more concerned about "getting his message across" than in enhancing his reputation as an orator, and his gospel had come not only in word, but also in power, and in the Holy Spirit, and in much assurance. The Thessalonians were witnesses to its power, for they had turned from idols to serve the true and living God. Furthermore, Paul reminds his readers that he had not preached to please men, but to please God. Yet, with it all, there had been a solicitude and a personal interest like unto that of a nurse with children, or as a father with children. Here, as elsewhere, Paul had not sought their's, but them. He had labored to the end that they should walk worthily of God, who had called them unto His kingdom and glory. Best of all, he had walked holily and righteously and unblamebly before them, giving them an example. Here is a passage that every minister should read and reread. No man who professes to be a good minister of Jesus Christ can accept any other ideal than is here given by Paul, and which was embodied to such a high degree in his own life.

A Few Teaching Points.

1. A consecrated pen is mightier than a conquering sword.
2. There are many who would know the power of Christ's resurrection; there are all too few who would know the fellowship of His sufferings.
3. That preaching is best which is understood by the people.
4. The test of a man's sincerity is often to be found in his attitude toward persecution or hostility.
5. The minister of God should be able to say, "Thus saith the Lord."
6. The minister of God should seek the good favor of God, rather than the glory of men.
7. The minister's life should be his most powerful message.
8. The goal of the gospel is transformed lives.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

September 20, 1925.

Topic: "Getting Strength from God."—2 Cor. 12:6-10; Phil. 4:11-13.

Some Bible Hints.

It is more important to get strength to bear burdens than it is to get rid of them. (V. 8.)

Our weaknesses serve the purpose of driving us to God. Without them we might also be without Him. (V. 9.)

All situations in life call for strength to meet them, and it is good to know that God is strongest in us when we feel weakest in ourselves. (V. 10.)

When we take God into our needs it is easy to do and to endure all things, even suffering and death. (V. 13.)

Suggestive Thoughts.

What the world needs is not physical or intellectual giants, but spiritual giants, strong men who dare to do right at all costs.

Strength flows from God to the soul through prayer. The sense of God's being with us imparts power.

The Spirit endues us with power if we yield to His guidance and deny our self-will its control. One source of weakness is that we pull one way and God another.

We should learn that when we do right, in the right spirit, all the powers in the universe are with us pushing us forward to triumph. The really weak person is the one that crosses the will of God.

A Few Illustrations.

When the nerve force can no longer flow to the limbs, the limbs grow weak and shrivel up. So the channel for the life of God must be kept clear in us—by obedience to His will.

To worry is to load all our burdens into our automobile and then push the car, forgetting the power within it. Divine strength is inward power.

We need divine strength to stand the friction that is common to all lives. The weak person grows irritated and bursts into anger; the strong person is master of circumstances.

Weakness gives up, tired, when a little more effort would have brought success. Seek strength to continue your tasks.

To Think About.

At what times do we need strength from God?
What strength do we get from the Bible.
Why should we learn to stand alone?

SEASIDE HAPPINESS.

By Frances Avery Faunce.

The air is full of summer,
The air is full of sea;
Long grasses on the sunny sand
Wave to welcome me.

I love the merry spray,
The swallows in the cliff,
The way the gently swaying tide
Rocks that little skiff.

If I were a sea gull,
With a home so near,
I would never use my wings
To fly away from here.

PRETENDING.

By Robert Palfrey Utter.

Bobby plays he is a horse—
He isn't really one, of course.
He stamps his feet and nods his head
And draws a wagon painted red.

TAKING JESUS AT HIS WORD.

A book of value, new and little known, is "Creed and Chaos," by James Priceman. This is probably a pen-name, but anyone might well be glad to be known as the author of the book. It is an attempt to gather a constructive idea out of the maddening maze of nations that blare at us in trumpet tones from every corner these days. Mr. Priceman gets on very well with this synthetic study. One of his finest observations is the following:

"Dust-grimed and disregarded, Jesus has been tramping the streets of this world for two thousand years, so that today there is no one of us who is not familiar with His figure. So well does every one of us know Him that there is not one of us who does not know exactly what would be Jesus' reply to any question, personal, national, international. There is no problem before any one of us to which we cannot hear Jesus' answer, down to His very phrasing, His intonation, His ironic gaze. There is not one of us who does not know that the sole reason we do not follow Jesus' advice is that we are afraid to."

In one aspect, this reminds us of the saying of St. Paul: "We have the mind of Christ." Yet we fancy there are those who would "give the world" to know exactly "what Jesus would do" under given circumstances.

We are very much inclined to believe, with the author, that we know what the reply of Jesus would be (is) to our questions; but we do not agree that people are afraid to "follow Jesus' advice." Millions are doing this hourly, daily, though there are times when it takes courage of the highest order to do so.

We would add, however, that if all of us would obey the words of Jesus as well as we know, it would make a vastly different and nearly an infinitely better world. It is our opinion also; nay! it is our conviction that if we would eschew high-sounding philosophies and theories and earnestly and sensibly obey the words of Jesus, as nearly literally as we could, we would soon make the world about us greatly better.

"If our love were but more simple,
We should take Him at His word;
And our lives would be all sunshine
In the sweetness of our Lord."

—Evangelist.

TAKE THE PILOT ON BOARD.

I am always impressed by one incident connected with an ocean voyage more than by any other thing that happens.

After you have been sailing the seas for a week or so, some morning the engines of the great vessel will stop their vibration, you will be anxious to know why, you will rush to the deck as all the other passengers are doing. Yonder from a sloop tossing unsteadily in the morning fog a rowboat will put out toward your ship. A few moments later the insignificant little craft will be fastened alongside the great ocean liner, and up the straight perpendicular face of the iron leviathan, by means of a rope ladder, will climb a man, perhaps short and dumpy, perhaps red-faced and slouching. But he is an important personage—he is the pilot. The officer of the deck welcomes him as though he were the owner of the line; the sweet young girl passengers gaze at him breathless as though he were a shining god; he is rushed up past the officers' quarters where no passengers are allowed, and is received by the high and mighty captain as though he were the admiral himself. A few moments later he stands on the bridge, the engines revolve again and the ship moves on into the harbor.

Taking the pilot on board! yes, it is a big moment in a ship's voyage. It is a bigger moment in a life voyage. There is no more significant event in the life of any soul than when Christ is taken on board as pilot of that life. Thenceforth the soul will say it with pride and joy and victory: "It is no longer I that live, but Christ liveth in me."—Boston Transcript.

PROHIBITION AND FOREIGNERS.

"Seventy-five per cent of the prohibition violators brought before me are foreigners, the majority of them unnaturalized. The law governing deportation should be drastic enough to take away the citizenship rights of those who have been naturalized and deport them, too, when found guilty of prohibition violation. If offenders were deported, I think violations would cease."—Judge H. S. Roberts, Kansas City, Kans.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

MARRIAGE PERFECTION.

Lesson: Matt. 19:5-6; Eph. 5:25; 1 Cor. 7:3; Titus 2:4; Matt. 19.

Text: "Let love be without dissimulation."—Rom. 12:9.

"Distinguished beauty, brilliant talents, and the heroic qualities that play a more or less important part in the affairs of life, sink into a comparatively minor place among the elements of married happiness. Marriage brings every faculty and gift into play, but in degrees and proportions very different from public life or casual intercourse and relations. Power to soothe, to sympathize, to counsel, and to endure, are more important than the highest qualities of the hero and the saint. It is by these alone that the married life attains its full measure of perfection."—W. E. H. Lecky.

Prayer.—Our Father, increase in us and in all the people a serious consciousness that marriage is a divine institution created by Thyself for the good of the world and the glory of heaven, and we pray Thee that all may devote their lives more and more, and be willing to greater sacrifices of unselfishness, that Thy will may be done, that there may be fewer divorces, and that homes may be more of heaven. In His name. Amen.

TUESDAY.

GOD IN NATURE.

Lesson: Matt. 17:1-9.

Text: "And he was transfigured before them."

"Society, as we have constituted it, will have no place for me, has none to offer; but nature, whose sweet rains fall on just and unjust alike, will have clefts in the rocks where I may hide, and sweet valleys in whose depths I may weep undisturbed. She will hang the night with stars, so that I may walk abroad in the darkness without stumbling, and send the wind over my footprints so that none may track me to my hurt; she will cleanse me with great waters, and with bitterness make me whole."—Oscar Wilde.

"Therefore, climb the mountains and get their good tidings. Nature's peace will flow into you as sunshine flows into trees. The winds will blow their own freshness into you, and the storms their energy, while cares will drop away from you like the leaves of autumn."—John Muir.

Prayer.—Our Father, so spiritualize our vision that in the every-day things of life we may get the good tidings of our salvation in Christ. We pray for the inpouring of Thy spirit into our souls, renew and refresh us in Thy faith and love. Forgive us of our sins and make us clean. In His name we ask it. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

A GOOD CITIZEN.

Lesson: Rom. 13; Prov. 14:34; Amos 5:14.

Text: "Honor all men. Love the brotherhood. Fear God. Honor the King."—1 Peter 2:17.

"True love of country is not mere blind partisanship. It is regard for the people of one's country and all of them; it is a feeling of fellowship and brotherhood for all of them; it is a desire for the prosperity and happiness of all of them; it is kind and considerate judgment toward all of them. The first duty of popular self-government is individual self-control. The essential condition of true progress is that it shall be based upon grounds of reason, and not on prejudice. Lincoln's noble sentiment of charity for all, and malice toward none, was not a specific for the Civil War, but is a living principle of action."—Elihu Root.

Prayer.—Dear Heavenly Father, help us to forget ourselves and dedicate our lives to Thee. Help us to see the good in others, to have feelings of sympathy and fellowship, to pray for prosperity and happiness, to be kindly and considerate toward all. Strengthen our faith to set before the Christ-way and follow Him. Amen.

THURSDAY.

WHAT IS COMMON?

Lesson: Acts 10:1-20.

Text: "What God hath cleansed, that call thou not common."—V. 15.

"That life should appear commonplace to any man is evidence that he has invested it with the coarse habit of his thinking. Life is beautiful to whomsoever will think beautiful thoughts. There are no common people but they who think commonly and without imagination or beauty. Such are dull enough.—Stanton Davis Kirkham.

Prayer.—Dear Father of our hearts, forgive us of our sins and cleanse our vision, that we may see the glory of the commonplace. Fill our hearts with love and enable us to see the lovable and the divine in all things. In His name we ask it. Amen.

FRIDAY.

GOD SPEAKING IN THE QUIET.

Lesson: Psalm 46.

Text: "Commune with your own heart . . . and be still. Offer the sacrifices of righteousness, and put your trust in the Lord."—Psa. 4:4-5.

"Be still and know that I am God."—Psa. 46:10.

"To act in obedience to the hidden precepts of nature—that is rest; and in this special case, since man is meant to be an intelligent creature, the more intelligent his acts are, the more repose he finds in them. When a child acts only in a disorderly, disconnected manner, his nervous force is under a great strain; while on the other hand, his nervous energy is positively increased and multiplied by intelligent actions."—Maria Montessori.

The people in this day of restlessness and feverish excitement need to be quiet, be still and find out God. There is enough excitement in ordinary routine. As often as we can, let's get away into the quiet and commune with Him. Why shouldn't we spend our vacations in the quiet?

Prayer.—Our Father, help us to act in obedience to the call of nature and to the spirit of our God. Forgive us, oh forgive us and make us better every day. In His name we ask it. Amen.

SATURDAY.

WORTHY OF PRAISE.

Lesson: Matt. 25:14-29.

Text: "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed."—2 Tim. 2:15.

"There is no more valuable subordinate than the man to whom you can give a piece of work and then forget it, in the confident expectation that the next time it is brought to your attention it will come on the form of a report that the work has been done. When this self-reliant quality is joined to executive power, loyalty and common sense, the result is a man whom you can trust.

"On the other hand, there is no greater nuisance to a man heavily burdened with the direction of affairs than the weak-backed assistant who is continually trying to get his chief to do his work for him on the feeble plea that he thought the chief would like to decide this or that himself. The man to whom an executive is most grateful, the man whom he will work hardest and value most, is the man who accepts responsibility willingly."—Gifford Pinchot.

Prayer.—Our Father, we this day give our hearts to honest service and diligence in business. Lord help us. Forgive us of our sins and save us now and forever. Amen.

SUNDAY.

A MORE EXCELLENT WAY.

Text: "Covet earnestly the best gifts; and yet shew I unto you a more excellent way."—1 Cor. 12:31.

"You want a better position than you now have in business, a better and fuller place in life. All right! Think of that better place, and you in it, as already existing. Form the mental image. Keep on thinking of that higher position, keep that image constantly before you, and—no, you will not suddenly be transported into the higher job, but you will find that you are preparing yourself to occupy the better position in life; your body, your energy, your understanding will all grow up to the job; and when you are ready, after hard work, after perhaps years of preparation, you will get the job and the higher position in life."—Joseph H. Appel.

Prayer.—Our Father, Thou art our way. We take Thee with us in our work. May we realize Thy promises true and be saved now and forever. Amen.

SALEM CHAPEL.

By request of the pastor, Rev. T. Fred Wright, I went to Salem Chapel Christian Church August 1st and held the annual protracted meeting. On Sunday, preaching at 11 A. M.; in the afternoon there was held, from 2 to 3:30, a community sing; at 8 P. M. a division of the Billy Sunday Club, fifteen strong, held the services. These services are always interesting, as they carry very striking testimonies. The services were held at night, and on Wednesday and Thursday a 3 o'clock service was added. As results of the meeting, there was one profession, three men joined the Church, and two men and one woman were baptized.

This was my third visit to this old Church in protracted meetings. My first was for the pastor (long years ago), Rev. W. T. Walker, when he was on the campaign for office of Governor of North Carolina on the prohibition ticket.

The congregation has largely changed. There are many young people in this congregation, and they have a Christian Endeavor Society. Bro. Wright had been treated preparatory for an operation, wihch we hear was successful. He is popular with his congregation. We trust pastor and Church may have a great year.

JAS. L. FOSTER.

LYNCHBURG CHURCH.

We have just concluded an eleven-day revival campaign in our Church. There were five additions to the Church during the special services, and two who joined the Sunday prior to the meeting. This brings our membership up to seventy, all having joined since the second Sunday in February of this year.

We feel that God has been good to us, but the fields are still "white unto the harvest." The pastor has a list of ninety persons in our immediate community who are not affiliated with any Church. Many of these belong to our Sunday School, and attend our services occasionally. It is our prayer that as our Church grows in years it may grow in favor with the unchurched about us till we have won them for Christ.

Kiddies' Korner

MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT, Editor.

Kiddies:

Let's Play "Pollyanna."

Listen carefully! Find your name in one of these groups. Find the other name in your group. Then, dears, away we will go! This is the way to play:

Take the Kiddies' name and address in the group you are in; then let's play "Pollyanna" until the 1st of October. What? You never played that game? Well, well! listen carefully, then, dears.

To play the "Pollyanna" game, we have to be just as nice to that person who is your Pollyanna as can; then, you are Pollyanna too, and some one is being nice to you at the same time. Oh, it's loads of fun, but I really think this way of playing is awfully good, since you are going to make friends with some little girl or boy you have never seen; only, of course, you know they all belong to the Kiddies' Korner!

Ways to play "Pollyanna":

Write that person a letter often.
Send that person a box of goodies (any kind).
Send your Pollyanna post-cards of your town.
Exchange photographs.

Anything you think would be interesting to tell a little person you never saw, but love—of course, we love each other! do we not?

Then away we will go! The minute you get this letter, find your Pollyanna, write her at once, so each of you may begin the game this very week.

Hurrah! the game is ready, dears; one, two, three—go!

At the end of the "Pollyanna" game, you are to write your editor a letter and tell her what you have done. The one who has played the best will be given a prize. Here we go, then!

LETTER FROM A "KIDDIE."

Dear Miss Moffitt:

This is my first letter to you. I am a little girl eight years old. I will be in the fourth grade next year.

We take THE CHRISTIAN SUN and I read it.

My mother went to Washington, D. C., and had a fine time.

I enjoyed "Hallowe'en Witch Night," "Alice and the Bird," "The Biggest Orange," "Duty First," and all the rest. I want to hear from some of the Kiddies, and you, too.

With love to all the Kiddies and you.

RAY COON GIVES A PARTY.

By G. H. Smith.

One year toward the end of October Ray Coon decided to give a birthday party for his cousin, Chubby Coon. Chubby was so excited about it that he stood on his head.

"We'll have twenty guests," Ray said, "and all kinds of good things to eat and a cake with candles."

But he had a great deal of trouble with his plan. He found that the good things were hard to get. Worst of all, just before the time for the party, his mother had to go away from home to look after a cousin who was ill, and so there was no one to make the cake.

"O dear, O dear!" he groaned; "all the invitations have been sent. What shall I do?"

He decided that he would call the party off. But as he was passing Chubby Coon's house he caught sight of Chubby Coon standing on his head and whooping about the party.

That was too much for the kind-hearted Ray. He went off into the woods and sat down on a stone and thought and thought. What should he do? It would be dreadful to have a party without anything for the guests to eat; on the other hand, it would be dreadful to break Chubby's heart.

"I know!" Ray cried at last, jumping up and clapping his hands; "I'll have persimmons—nice, juicy persimmons from that lovely tree that I found on the other side of the woods."

For the next few days Ray was busy making trips through the woods with a large covered basket. He went either early in the morning or late in the evening, for he did not want to be seen. His mind was so full of persimmons that he ceased to think about the cake and other things.

"Every one likes persimmons," he said to himself.

The party was to be held in the field next Farmer Bear's place. Ray laid some planks across a group of stumps and made a fine table. His mother had lent him a tablecloth and her second-best china; bright autumn leaves made the decorations.

When the day came, all the Coon children and the Rabbit children were on hand, and the Fox boys and the Possum boys. Even the Misses Goose, who happened to pass through the field, were asked to join the party and accepted the invitation.

Chubby Coon was dressed in his best black-velvet suit, with a broad starched collar. When everything was ready, Ray Coon made a bow and introduced Chubby as the guest of honor.

After the company had sat down, Ray brought the refreshments in—trays and trays heaped with pinky-yellow persimmons.

"Ah, the first course," said Reddy Fox.

"Ah, the first course!" Chubby Coon echoed proudly. He stretched his neck above his starched collar and chuckled with joy.

But his joy did not last long, for in a very little while the most uncomfortable things began to happen.

First, Reddy Fox made a wry face and started in to sneeze hard. Then Rusty Fox choked violently until some one had to beat him on the back.

Across the table, Chubby Coon spluttered and gasped and little Wigglenose Gray was whimpering. The Misses Goose sat up stiffy in their places and looked straight ahead.

All at once Chubby Coon burst into a loud wail. "My tongue is upside down!" he cried; "my tongue is upside down!"

Ray Coon, who had taken his seat, looked much alarmed. "Odear," he said, "what is the matter?"

The Possum boys were the only ones who did not seem to be disturbed.

"Matter enough, Ray," Peter Possum said. "Didn't you know any better than to serve us green persimmons?"

"We haven't tasted them," Pat added, "but we know that frost hasn't fallen yet, and so they must be sour and puckery. They need frost to make them good."

Poor Ray Coon! It had never occurred to him to find out whether or not the persimmons were ripe. They looked so pretty on the tree that he had gathered them without taking the time to taste even one, and here was the result!

"O dear, O dear!" he said dolefully; "what shall I do?"

"O dear, O dear!" Chubby Coon began to wail; "what shall we do?"

Ray looked round the table. Reddy and Rusty Fox were laughing rudely; the Misses Goose looked offended; Wigglenose was sniffling softly; and all the other guests seemed much embarrassed.

"Never mind," said Peter Possum; "the rest of the things to eat will be all right."

Ray looked more disturbed than ever. He hung his head. "But there isn't anything else to eat," he said; "O dear, O dear!"

"O dear, O dear!" echoed Chubby, weeping into his starched collar; "there is nothing else to eat."

"Nothing else to eat!" sniveled Wigglenose Gray.

All at once a loud voice cried, "Yes, there is, too; a good deal more!"

There stood Farmer Bear with a huge basket on each arm.

"Having heard that Ray Coon was giving a party," he said, "I brought something to add to it. And I got here just in time to hear all this fuss."

He set the baskets down and began to take things out. There were big red apples and fluffy, green heads of lettuce, golden corn and many other good things.

"And here," he said, "is something that Mrs. Bear sent."

He unwrapped a round package and took out a great big iced cake with six lovely candles.

Every one said "Oh!" in a delighted voice.

Chubby Coon squealed with delight.

As for Ray Coon, when he saw his party turning out well after all, he was too happy to eat. He had to wrap up his share and carry it home. As he trudged through the woods with his little bundle, he kept repeating to himself, "I must remember that about persimmons. Before frost, they turn people's tongues upside down."—Youth's Companion.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

Our boys are a busy lot this week. The extreme drought this year has ruined our corn crop, and what we have is drying so fast it makes it necessary, to save anything at all, to cut it up and put it in our silo. It will make feed for the cows, and we will save what we have that way.

Filling the silo is one hard job that takes the help of all the boys and some hired help. The corn is to be cut in the field, hauled to the barn, and then it is to be fed in the insilage cutter and blown into the silo, and then a dozen little boys have a great time packing the feed in the silo.

It takes a lot of hard work, but it makes a fine feed for our cows and produces milk and butter—a thing all the children are fond of. We are proud of our boys. When we have a hard job of work they all go at it with a will, and we can do lots of work in a short time.

We are proud of our girls; they, too, are faithful in their work, and when the boys have a hard job of work to do they take a pride in cooking something good to eat and something they will relish. Team-work in an institution of this kind counts much.

AMERICANS RANK HIGH.

The honor list issued as a result of the final Oxford examinations this year shows that the Americans in the university maintained a standard of scholarship far above that of the average English student, and only a little below that of the holders of the college scholarships. For a number of years, Americans have been at the head of the law schools with nearly half of the first classes awarded, and this year they also have taken a high proportion of first classes in the medical examinations.

The special aptitude of Americans for the study of English law is difficult to understand, because it is a legal system differing widely from that in America, and is based on English social and political institutions which have no American counterpart. It is a tribute to the ability of the Rhodes scholars that a number of them who knew no Latin on their arrival at Oxford have mastered the Roman law and obtained first classes.

The Oxford examinations disclose that intellectual ability is confined to no one district or no university in America. The highest honors go as often to the West and South as to New England, and to men from small and little-known colleges as often as to men from the great Eastern universities. Of the outstanding law students of the past few years, one came from Missouri, one from Idaho, one from Michigan, and one from New York State.—Exchange.

THE SOUTHERN SERVES THE SOUTH

A buyer as well as a carrier of Southern products

The industrial resources of the South are so diversified that the Southern Railway System is fortunately able to purchase a large part of its supplies along its own rails.

While we are carrying the products of our shippers to the markets of the country, we are also buying from them for our own use coal, iron, lumber, cross-ties, equipment, rails —the thousand and one things that are needed to operate and maintain a railroad system of the magnitude of the Southern.

The Southern is a buyer as well as a carrier of Southern products.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY SYSTEM

PROCTOR-WICKER.

On August 1st, the writer united in marriage Mr. Truby G. Proctor and Miss Zelma Wicker. Mr. Proctor holds a position with the American Express Company of Sanford, and is a young man of stirling qualities and promise. Mrs. Proctor has taught school at Colon for several years, and was highly efficient and satisfactory to the patrons. For years she has been a member of Turner's Chapel Christian Church and has been one of the most active workers. These young people are held in highest esteem by many friends, who wish for them the best that life can give. R. L. WILLIAMSON.

STALEY—BURGESS.

At the residence of Mr. J. A. Ellis, Ramseur, N. C., Rt. 1, Mr. Otis H. Staley and Miss Annie V. Burgess were happily married in the presence of a few of their friends and relatives August 19th, at 7 o'clock P. M. The groom is a son of Mr. and Mrs. G. T. Staley, of Ramseur, N. C., Route 2, and the bride is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. R. Burgess, of Ramseur, N. C., Route 1. These are splendid young people, and their friends, who are many, wish them bon voyage on the matrimonial sea. Ceremony by the writer.

T. J. GREEN.

There are such things as spontaneous flashes of suggestion that come on the inspiration of the moment, but they come to those who have previously meditated long and earnestly on the questions involved; and even so, those exalted moods in the Christian life in which the soul mounts up on wings like an eagle, come to those who have toiled along the road of faithful daily service.—Bryan Collier.

WARNING

Why you should take organic iron to enrich your blood instead of metallic iron —how to tell the difference.

While iron is absolutely necessary to your life and health always remember that your blood contains organic iron and not metallic iron which people usually take; therefore when you take iron always take organic iron like the iron in your blood and like the iron in spinach, lentils and apples. Metallic iron is iron just as it comes from the action of strong acids on small pieces of iron and is an entirely different thing from organic iron. Organic iron may be had from your druggist under the name of Nuxated Iron.

Millions of people annually are using Nuxated Iron. It will not injure the teeth nor disturb the stomach. A few doses will often commence to enrich your blood, help revitalize your wornout exhausted nerves and give you new strength and energy. It costs about eighteen times as much to make organic iron, like Nuxated Iron, as it does to make metallic iron, though it costs you but little more. Always insist on having genuine organic iron —Nuxated Iron. If you are not feeling quite up to the mark, telephone for a package today. In tablet form only; look for the letters N. I. on every tablet and refuse to take substitutes. Your money will be refunded by the manufacturers if you do not obtain perfectly satisfactory results. At all druggists.

McCLENNY.

In the death of Mr. David McClenny, the Ladies' Aid Society of Bethlehem Christian Church has been bereft of a loyal honorary member, and offer the following sincere expression of our love and our loss:

1. He was a deacon, loyal, devoted, and true, always responsive to every call of duty and every service of love.

2. He was a charter honorary member of the Ladies' Aid Society, and always a willing and liberal helper in every good work undertaken by the society.

3. He possessed, in a marked degree, the virtues of a good Christian, a good member, and a good friend.

4. We offer these resolutions as a token of our high esteem for his life and usefulness, and desire that a copy be sent to his bereaved children, and also The Christian Sun for publication.

MRS. J. W. FOLK,
MRS. ISAAC PILAND,
MRS. O. D. KING,
Committee.

Everybody likes the new. We live on it. The way to find it is to go deeper into the old familiar words, places, books, poem and scenes. And the people we see every day—they are far greater than we have imagined. Look again. Appreciate. There is never-ceasing joy and wonder in the folks we meet daily, and especially those who sit about our tables with us.

Work over what you see every day in the laboratory of your own thoughts and feelings. Adopt it to your own personality. It will prove a kind of inflow of the new and fresh that will revive you as the dying are sometimes brought back to life by the transfusion of blood.

SEASCAPE.

The call of the sea is a sturdy call
That rings from its heart to mine—
There's something strong in the hold of it,
Oh, the wind and the wave and the brine,
Have filled my soul with a sudden fire
To laugh in the face of the sky,
To follow the path of an old desire
And let the world sweep by.

I want to stand where the waves flash in,
When the winds are full and free;
I want to speak to the chilling spray,
And to have it speak with me.
I want to be gallant and brave and true,
As my ancestors were of old,
When they voyg'd to places unique and new
And challenged the sunset's gold.

The gulls that sweep in a steady flight,
The foam that is white and sweet;
The tides that hurry across the world
To rest at my very feet.
Oh, they are eternal—the sea is wide,
With a power all unguessed,
And sometimes I think that its waters hide,
Life's meaning, and living's best.

—M. E. S.

Bandits Free Missionaries.—

Chinese bandits, who for nearly a month held Bishop W. H. K. Mowll and his wife and six other missionaries in captivity, have now released them. The missionaries were taken from a summer resort near Chengtu, China.

The Largest Map.—

The Pope is said to have what is reputed to be the world's largest map. It covers 2,750 square feet of canvas, and has been unveiled in the Pavilion of the Congregation for the Propagation of the Faith of Rome. One peculiarity of the map is that its scale varies according to the pope's personal idea of the geographical importance of the countries.

Heat Wave Breaks Record.—

Much space has been devoted in the daily press to the heat wave which has been sweeping the South. The mercury has broken all records at Birmingham, when it reached 106 degrees, Water in various parts of Georgia and Alabama has become so low that the cities are threatened with thirst. Not in eighty-five years have the records shown it to be so dry as at the present time.

Settlement Changes Hands.—

The Bates Memorial Parish House of the Spring Street Presbyterian Church, New York, has been turned over to the New York University. It will be used as a sociology laboratory in applying among the foreign population living in the vicinity, the principles taught in the class room. It was in this neighborhood that Rosewell Bates did his famous mission work. The University students will have a large opportunity for study.

A Policy for Elsewhere.—

Thousands of people from the Dutch East Indies leave their homes every year to make a pilgrimage to the sacred shrines at Mecca, and return wearing the turban of the Hadji, and frequently feeling unkind toward their infidel rulers as they call the Christians. The Netherland government, instead of showing religious intolerance and restricting the pilgrimages as it might do, encourages them, believing that when the Hadji becomes commonplace he will cease to stir up trouble for the government. They are giving them their head, and it may be a policy which we would do well to follow elsewhere.

Think About This.—

In a sermon recently, Dr. Carl R. Reiland, pastor of the St. George's Episcopal Church, of New York, intimated that indigestion was responsible for the "hell fire" which crept into the old time preaching. Dr. Reiland pointed out that a man's physical conditions had much to do with his outlook on life and with his philosophy. He said that careful investigation showed some disease afflicting all those or nearly so who were impatient of the times in which they lived, and in those preaching we find most of the brimstone. At least Dr. Reiland's position is worth consideration, and we know that our feelings physically do affect our philosophy of life.

Another Union Proposed.—

The North California Conference of the Congregational Church, recently in session at Asilomar, proposed that the National Council of the Church take up the matter of union between Congregationalism and Universalism officially. Acting as moderator of the National Council two years ago, Dr. William E. Barton supported the same proposal, but the Asilomar proposal is the first official action to be taken on the matter in either body. It would seem that there is a widespread desire for union among Christians these latter years. The union of the Churches of Canada was the most progressive step taken by religious bodies since the step of Martin Luther, which led to division, and now many other Churches are making similar proposals. The Christian Church has long stood for union among the believers in Christ, and evidently it has, through the years, been making itself heard.

The Hospital's Chance.—

If you are unable to go about your daily work, you are one of the from two to three per cent of America's population so afflicted every day. In this number ten per cent of them go to the hospitals of the country, making an army of hospital patients of from eight to ten million people. In every city of much size there is a hospital with its rows of white beds. In 1924, there were in this country 770,375 hospital beds in use. This is a fine opportunity for the Christian Church, as Dr. Fritschel pointed out in a speech before the Lutheran Church recently. He wishes that somehow we might reach these millions of patients during their hospital stay, and suggests art windows of Bible or Christian themes, and intimates that a chaplain might be in order. It is a great task, and missionaries have learned what a few churches are beginning to learn, that healing the body opens the way to heal the soul of a man. It opens doors not possible to open in any other way.

Dr. Hough Charged With Heresy.—

Dr. Levi Bird, of the Detroit, Michigan, Conference, has charged Dr. Lynn Harold Hough, pastor of the Central Methodist Episcopal Church, of Detroit with heresy. Dr. William H. Phelps, editor of the Michigan Christian Advocate, is connected with Dr. Hough in the charge. The charge arises out of sermons preached by Dr. Hough, and Dr. Phelps is charged with having published these sermons, and with having admitted to his paper articles by the Rev. Charles E. Jefferson and Alfred E. Luccock. The daily press refused to carry the twenty-seven charges of Dr. Bird, stating that they were unfit for public print. Since the charges have been preferred, they must be heard by a group of men whom the superintendent nominally over the work of Dr. Hough and Dr. Phelps shall select. If they find them guilty, the case will then go before a special judge or the conference as a whole. It is probable, in view of the well known orthodoxy of Dr. Hough, that the case will be thrown out of court. When we read of such charges, we are thoughtful on the words of Gamaliel: "If it be not of God, it will die, but if it be of God, which among us would like to be found in opposition." The Rock of Ages does not need propping. Christ is great enough to stand against his enemies. Truth will win, as it ought to win, no matter which side of the controversy is right.

Dr. Fox Raises a Question.—

Dr. Henry Fox, whose removal from Mercer University's faculty last year excited nation wide attention, has just raised a most important question in the Baptist Church. Dr. Fox is now a government biologist, in service at Riverton, N. J. He recently applied for a letter of transfer from the Tattnall Square Baptist Church, Macon, Ga., to unite with a New Jersey congregation. The Church has refused the letter, and Dr. Fox has raised the question of the individual's right of private interpretation of the Scriptures—long the battle-cry of the Baptists. He says that if the Tattnall Square Church will deny that the individual is the sole judge of the soundness of his doctrinal views, he will withdraw from the Church in peace. Dr. Fox ought to belong to the Christian Church, if he so believes. We believe that liberty of conscience and the right to private judgment is accorded to and ought to be exercised by all. We state it as one of our cardinal principles, and in this time of turmoil, we ought to live our principles and love our Church as never before. If we are loyal to our home Church, support its enterprises, give to missions—home and foreign, support our orphanage, subscribe to The Christian Sun, pray for our Church, our pastor, our missionaries, those in our general work, our colleges, and love God with all our hearts and minds and strength and souls, we will have no time for disputing, and this will be a joyous world in which to live.

NOTES-PERSONALS

A paper that simply chronicles events will die; the things to be done are what the people want to know.

Will the Program Committees for the various Conferences put on something special for THE CHRISTIAN SUN and publications in general?

If every minister of the Church would furnish a number of personal items, as did one recently, our paper would be looked forward to with a relish.

A copy of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, June 3d, 1908, is very much desired. If any reader or friend can supply this copy of THE SUN, it will be very greatly appreciated.

This reader wonders why all the colleges and schools of the Christian Church do not at some time or another have a displayed advertisement in the church papers.

Rev. G. J. Green, Morrisville, N. C., himself an alumnus of Elon, was an agreeable visitor at the College recently, bringing with him his daughter to enter her in school here.

Dr. C. C. Ryan, of Bucyrus, Ohio, has accepted the call to the First Christian Church, of Richmond, Va. He is expected to come to Richmond the last week in September, and will assume his duties on the first Sunday in October.

There are two kinds of people who are not satisfied with their work—those who are afraid they are doing more than they are getting paid for, and those who would like to do it better than they are able to. The latter have steady jobs.

Rev. W. D. Harward, D. D., advises that the program for the Eastern Virginia Conference, to be held at Franklin, Va., beginning October 27th, is about completed. Dr. Harward is President of the Conference and Chairman of the Program Committee, and is seeking to plan an interesting and inspiring program in addition to the regular routine work of the Conference.

One of the items to be stressed at the Eastern Virginia Conference, according to the program committee, is that of Stewardship. Dr. Denison will be given the important place on this part of the program. This is a fine idea for all of our Conferences in our annual sessions this year, and it is greatly to be hoped that the Conferences will duly consider this very vital and all important subject.

A Wendell citizen gives us a splendid account of Prof. A. R. Flowers' visit to Wendell, N. C., and his forceful lecture in the new Marshall Hill Baptist Church. Prof. Flowers was superintendent of Wendell High School for eight years, when first leaving the University of North Carolina; and he has a place in the hearts of the Wendell people that only can be held by the most earnest and pains-taking of teachers.—Mrs R. E. Hatch.

We congratulate our good friends and brethren, Revs. J. E. McCauley and Jesse H. Dollar in their highly commendable ambition to prepare themselves fully for the all-important work of the ministry before settling down to pastoral service for life. They are both graduates of Elon College, have already had some years of successful experience in the pastorate and are now entering Vanderbilt University to work for their Master's degree.

The Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention is to meet in annual session in the Philathea Room of the Suffolk Christian Church, at 9:30 A. M., Wednesday, September 23d. The members of the board are: Lieut-Gov. J. E. West, Chairman, Mr. J. M. Darden, Dr. W. W. Staley, Mr. K. B. Johnson, Rev. H. W. Elder, Dr. C. H. Rowland, Mr. J. A. Williams, Dr. G. O. Lankford, Mrs. W. H. Carroll, Mrs. W. A. Harper, and Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Secretary and Treasurer. Any application to be placed before the board should be sent to the secretary at once.

The members of the Woman's Board of the North Carolina Conference met in Burlington, Thursday, September 10th, and worked out a program for the Woman's Conference, which is to be held with Greensboro First Church, Friday, October 30, 1925, beginning at 10 A. M. Mrs. L. L. Vaughan, Raleigh, is President, and Mrs. W. R. Sellars, Burlington, N. C., is Treasurer. It is greatly desired that all the Societies in the Conference be represented at this meeting and that all churches not having Societies will get one or more of their women to attend this annual Conference in Greensboro.

We have just received the following report of the work at Holy Neck: "The annual protracted meeting was held at Holy Neck Church, July (?) 6th to 13th. Rev F. C. Lester, pastor of the Franklin Christian Church did the preaching and led the services. The congregations were large and attentive, the singing was inspiring, and the preaching was of a high order and delighted the congregation. There were nine professions, and seven united with the church. Baptismal services were performed at the church at the close of the meeting and at Norfleet's pond on Sunday afternoon, of the 13th inst."

Rev. E. M. Carter, of Wadley, Ala., and a graduate of Elon College, has been elected by the Executive Board of Bethlehem College as Financial Secretary of the College. He has been in the pastoral field for several years and has been very successful in the winning of converts and the building of churches. He was one of the leading promoters of the enterprise which terminated in the founding of Bethlehem College and in the carrying on of the work thus far. He has taken an active part in all of the financial drives made for the College and the collecting of funds. He is thoroughly acquainted with the plans and needs of the College and his heart is in the work. The financial problem of the College will be the big problem this year, but we believe he will be equal to the task. He will take up his work at once and press the matter of raising at least five thousand dollars for the running expenses of the school and the funds for the erection of an administration building. Statements will be sent out to all subscribers and a strenuous effort will be made to collect what is due on these subscriptions. New subscriptions will also be taken, as the College is greatly in need of the building and it should be completed just as soon as possible. We shall expect great things from Bro. Carter this year and we know that we will not be disappointed. Our prayers and best wishes shall go with him in his work. May he have the co-operation of every well-wisher of Bethlehem College.

The following is quoted from the Winchester Independent. We compliment our good brother on the work that he has been doing in the Winchester field, and our best wishes go with him:

"Rev. J. F. Morgan preached his last sermon as pastor of the First Christian Church last evening to an audience that filled the main auditorium of the church and overflowed into both of the Sunday School rooms. In addition to the large number of members of the church, and the large attendance from other churches, the Friendship Fire Company, of which Mr. Morgan has been chaplain ever since he came to Winchester, attended the service in a body. This delegation was probably the largest that the company has ever had at a religious service. The company marched in to the music of "Old Friendship," which was played by Miss Anna Amelia Seabright, and then Mr. Morgan led the men in singing the song while the entire audience stood.

"A sealed envelope was laid on the pulpit addressed to the pastor, which he quietly dropped into his pocket, thinking it only a note of good wishes to be read when he got home; but imagine his surprise when he got home and opened it and found it contained $25.00 in gold, a token of appreciation from the Ladies Auxiliary of the Friendship Fire Company, presented to him at the request of the members of the company. For this lovely and valuable token of appreciation, Mr. Morgan wishes to express to the Ladies of the Auxiliary and to the members of the Friendship Fire Company, his sincere and heartfelt thanks and appreciation.

"Mr. Morgan and his family expect to leave Tuesday for their new field of labor near Norfolk, Va. The new minister, Rev. V. T. Crawford, expects to arrive in Winchester and take up the work here about October 1st. In the meantime the deacons of the local church will arrange for services to be held each Sunday."

WINDSOR, VA.

The work in this field has been going quite well this year, and we face the future with hopefulness.

The protracted meeting at Bethlehem was held the week following the fourth Sunday in August. The meetings were largely attended and the interest was fine throughout. The church seemed much revived. There were twelve additions to the church at the close of the meetings.

Rev. V. T. Crawford, pastor of the Elm Avenue Christian Church, Portsmouth, Va., was with us and did the preaching, beginning Monday afternoon. The people were much pleased with the preaching.

We were glad to have had the following ministers with us during the meeting for at least one service: Drs. W. W. Staley and I. W. Johnson, and Revs. Elisha Bradshaw and R. H. Peel. These brethren all took part in the services.

Our meeting at Isle of Wight Court House was held the week following the fifth Sunday in August, the pastor doing the preaching. We had splendid crowds here also and a good meeting. The church seemed to be much revived. There were seven additions to the church.

Our next meeting is at Antioch, following the third Sunday in September.

"I knew an artist once who painted a cobweb on the ceiling so realistically that the maid spent hours trying to get it down."

"Sorry, dear, I just don't believe it."

"Why not? Artists have been known to do such things."

"Yes, but no maids!"—London Punch.

MEMBERS OF THE NORFOLK CONVENTION!

Dear Christian Friend:

As a member of the Norfolk Convention, you will recall that the Convention voted to give the College $400,000 in bonds, bearing six per cent interest, the bonds to be sold and the interest and principal to be paid by the Convention within twenty years.

The bonds were duly issued as of July 1, 1924, and delivered to the Treasurer of the College. It has appeared best not to sell the bonds, but to hold them as an asset of the College and to have the interest paid the College. This saves a brokerage fee of about $20,000 to the Church.

Accordingly Dr. W. T. Walters and Rev. W. T. Scott have been employed to give our people the opportunity to contribute to the interest account of the Convention. They will begin their active work as of October 1st. I am sure you will heartily support them in this effort.

It will be a real help to the cause to have you write me a full endorsement of this plan. I will print your letter as a part of the publicity program. I should say that President Smith has given the effort a most eloquent approval.

Please let me have your endorsement by return mail.

Praying for rich blessings on your work, I am,

Sincerely,

W. A. HARPER,
President.

P. S.—Your College has begun what promises to be under the divine blessing, its best year. Pray for Elon.—W. A. H.

FROM A FORMER MISSIONARY.

Has anyone an old copy of THE CHRISTIAN SUN having an article in it about the Azores Islands? It would probably be an issue of January or February, 1909.

I have a March 10, 1909, copy of the SUN, having an article on "Sinai." I might have written on "Port Said," or some Asiatic port, too, in those January or February issues.

I am trying to get the letters written from Boston to Yokohama, 1909, together to, perhaps, publish them in a booklet.

Recently our C. E. Society had an excursion to the Isles of Shoals, about ten miles off Portsmouth, N. H. We went by trolly and train to Portsmouth and then by the Steamer Sight Seer to the islands.

We are in sight of our Kittery Second Church and almost in sight of our Kittery First Church. We pass Fort Constitution on our right and the Navy Yard on our left in Portsmouth harbor.

Newcastle Village, where we had a Christian Church for a long time, is on our right, and Hotel Wentworth, in the bounds of Newcastle and one of the largest hotels on the New England coast, is very conspicuous as we pass out of the harbor.

It is interesting to get in the bow of the boat and watch the islands seem to come nearer and nearer. Star Island, where we land, has the hotel, and back of it the old church. This has a brick floor and brick steps down to it. The furniture is dark cherry in color. The building is stone. Once a school house and court house were here, also a parsonage was on one of the islands. One minister was here. This was Rev. Tucker, who died on the island. This island is now joined to Star Island by a breakwater which Mr. Samuel Haley, who died in 1811, was instrumental in building. The old houses on Star Island have nearly all been burned. The Unitarian people and the Congregational people at different times hold summer conferences in the spacious hotel on Star.

The War of 1812 depopulated the islands, as the inhabitants could not be defended from the English vessels; so most of the inhabitants went to Rye or Greenland—the near-by coast—and the town of Gasport never regained its population, and so as a town is extinct.

Some of the islands are owned by Maine and some by New Hampshire. Star Island was the home of Celia Thaxter, who wrote "Among the Isles of Shoals," a chronicle of her life there as the light-house keeper's daughter. Duck Island shelters thousands of gulls during the building season. The sandpipers are common, and Celia Thaxter writes of the crying loons and the gannet's long white wings, and the great blue herron. The white butterflies were flying about—nine miles from Straw Point, Rye—the nearest land.

One is impressed with the kindliness of the limitations of Providence as one studies the islands and their history. Was it not Agasziz who had no time to go to Europe when a friend offered to make that possible for him one summer, because he was so busy studying his own door yard?

It is a little like being in the East again, to be away from the noise of machinery and the strain of rushing to save time with which some of us do so little after we have saved it. It was said of Rev. John Brock, who served the islanders for twelve years, "He dwells as near heaven as any man on earth."

The violet, and not the hollyhock, is found on these islands. It is more fragrant and more beloved than many other more ambitious flowers. So it is with many a humble life, restricted like these islanders.

Yours with all good wishes for our churches,

ALICE TRUE.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

RE-READING CHURCH HISTORY.

THE SUN'S editor, because of a recent experience, shamefully but willingly acknowledges his need of re-reading some church history and inquiring into denominational attitudes. He wonders, anyway, as to how much of the real inner life and experience of our denomination or communion the people of another denomination or communion know and fully understand. Do we not form our conclusions, in a large measure, from what we have heard second hand, or read in cold bare type, about other communions than our own? THE SUN'S editor is wondering at this moment what its readers for the most part think of the Adventists—Seventh Day Adventists—if the printed definition is desired? Of course, the reader is acquainted with the Adventists, has possibly seen or been in an Adventist Church, maybe has heard an Adventist preach. But the writer had an experience recently that makes him want to inquire and to know further.

A skilled physician, a fine doctor in our Christian Church, recommended to us for cause, the Washington Sanitarium, Tokoma Park, Washington, D. C. "Yes, it is an Adventist Sanitarium, but believe me, some of the most accurate reports of diagnosis and treatment that I have ever received from any source come from that hospital. They are largely vegetarian in habit and diet and take no chances or, if any, very little, with meats of any kind; and the longer I live the more I am convinced that they are not far wrong in that particular."

On such a recommendation, from such a source, an engagement was made, and a few days later, with a dear sick one, we were housed in that sanitarium. The writer remained there some two or three days trying to discover what it was. But to this good hour he does not know whether to class it as a summer resort for tired and weary folks desiring a rest under the most wholesome conditions; or whether it is a hotel, a hospital, a home or a house of worship. From the time he arrived until the time he left three days later, there was nothing but the kindliest and most cordial attitude on the part of every manager and employee approached. He was awakened at seven o'clock in the morning with the singing not far away of sweet and dear old hymn tunes by more tha a hundred voices. A little later when a trained nurse arrived on duty for the day, it was inquired as to whence that music. "We nurses were singing some hymns and having our worship period just before going on duty for the day." Believe me, that nurse and all the rest of them went about their duty for the day as if it were a continued joy and delight to them. No one seemed to be in a particular hurry and none too busy to render any assistance or favor requested with cheerfulness and a smile. The writer went to breakfast at eight o'clock in the spacious dining room, was met at the door by a most agreeable lady in smiles, "Come this way, I think you will enjoy your breakfast with these nice people over at this table." Then she proceeded to introduce me personally to the two or three other guests at the same table. Agreeable talk was indulged in as the happy meal was negotiated. The linen and silver were spotless, flowers in graceful abundance adorned every table and all the waitresses in their beautiful black and white uniforms smiled with gladness as they saw to it that every guest was generously provided for in all that goes to make a meal wholesome. On the back side of the menu card was printed the program for the day for as many as desired a program. "Worship period for all guests desiring in the parlor of this building at 8:45 A. M." attracted THE SUN'S editor.

It is a grand old parlor, spacious, luxuriously appointed, its entire equipment expressing repose, dignity, quiet and comfort. Some devout man of God read a scripture from Proverbs with most wholesome and inspiring comment. A glorious hymn was sung and then from the leader, "Shall we bow in prayer?" And what a prayer of praise to God for His wonderful goodness to the children of men; and then a petition that the physicians and nurses in that institution shall be divinely guided and sustained this day in their privilege and task of ministering to fellowman; that the Heavenly Father would have compassion upon all the sick, the sorrowful and the suffering ones of the institution and that it might be a good day and helpful to each and to all and that in all things the will of God might be done and the glory of God might be manifest in all activities and the outcome of the day."

The writer met and had occasion to speak with not a few clerks, not a few administrators and some of the one hundred and seventy-five nurses of the institution. But in all that day and the other days that he was there, there was not a request that was not greeted with a smile and most cordially and graciously acceded to. It was fine to tarry in those great old corridors or out on the wide spreading porches, or under the friendly shade of the great old trees that decked and graced the spacious lawn, and to see rows and beds of flowers reveling in their rich red colors. He did not see in the whole of his stay any "dont's" with just one exception. "Please do not smoke in these corridors, on the porches, or near the buildings."

In each room the writer visited there was a Holy Bible with its mute invitation; on a convenient table, in easy reach, were pamphlets, leaflets or booklets. One, the writer recalls, was "What and How to Eat," another "The Worker's Need," "Help in Daily Living," "In Contact with Others," "Development and Service," "A Higher Experience." In no line that the editor read did he discover by what faith or communion the publication was written, and he did not read a line that he could not as a Christian believer most highly approve, for in every instance it was backed up by scriptural reference and clear teaching.

The editor had not intended to write so much as this is in no sense an advertisement and is presented without a suggestion or a solicitation from any source. One thing he realizes and that is that if this institution is conducted by Adventists or any other Christian communion, they have at least learned how to put the spirit of Jesus Christ into the sacrificial service of healing and of helping to heal those who are weary or sick or in distress. They know how to smile while they work and to be most agreeable under the most exacting duties, and how to conduct an institution on a scale of dignity, cleanliness, efficiency, Christian joy, with a happy blending of comfort, luxury and moderation, not heretofore discovered by this writer, at any rate

So the editor will have to get down and reread his church history and learn how it is that these Adventists have discovered the secret of turning a hospital into a hotel, or converting a hotel into a home, and of directing that home, in all of its appointment, in keeping with the spirit and the life of Jesus Christ. And yet this experience of the editor is but one of many. The world is full of interests and institutions prompted by Christian motives, and all around about us are peoples and institutions striving to exemplify the noblest and the best in the life of Him who said, "He who would be greatest among you shall be servant of all." As Dr. Staley pointed out recently in an editorial, "Wickedness is obvious, sin is boisterous, and advertises itself; we have to look for the good, for it is modest, unassuming, gentle."

If we look for good in our fellowmen and seek out in others that which is best, we will have many great surprises coming to us, and will find that the several denominations and communions in the Christian world are making their contributions in some marked and unselfish way to the relief of human suffering and to the advancement of the Kingdom of our Lord in the world.

IS THE MINISTER AN INDIVIDUALIST?

Under the heading, "The Pastor's Most Important Duty," The Literary Digest for August 29th carries a most significant article, one paragraph of which we would like to bring to the attention of our readers:

"What part of the minister's work is the most important? A questionaire circulated by the Department of Religious Education of Northwestern University among ministers of the Middle West, without regard to denomination, brought no unanimity of opinion, but the majority feel that the most important single item in their profession is pastoral calling. Provision for the teaching of children in the Sunday School was only one point below. More than twenty points separated these two functions from preaching, which was third in importance. Next in order came the support for Home and Foreign Missions; fifth, the maintenance of the family altar; sixth, the promotion of civic and moral reform; seventh, securing attendance of children at church worship; eighth, the maintenance of the church prayer meeting; ninth, the necessity for keeping up the benevolences of the congregation; tenth, promoting good fellowship through church socials and similar affairs; eleventh, circulating church papers; and last, conducting special evangelistic campaigns."

In studying the tabulated information collected by the questionaire method there are always many things that one would like to know: How many have been reached for the information? What fields of pastoral labor were reported on? What period of experience do the replies represent? And many other things. But no matter how much one may discount the accuracy of the information, it is bound to be very suggestive.

It may have been that the wording of the questionaire was in some degree responsible, but it is a very significant fact that throughout the entire report the minister is represented as an individual, rather than as a group leader. This fact is an outstanding characteristic of the Church of this generation. The minister's task is tending more and more to become that of an executive, rather than that of an inspirational leader. It is the result of an effort to standardize the minister's work. It has been fostered by the desire of denominations to secure results that can be tabulated in annual reports, and in year books. It has set as a goal for the minister what he can do with the congregation rather than for it. Shall the minister work for what he can accomplish through his membership, or for what he can accomplish in them?

Should pastoral calling be rated twenty points ahead of preaching in importance? Nearly every minister I am acquainted with admits that he is not devoting the time and effort to pastoral calling that it rightfully deserves. But I doubt that one of them would be willing to admit that pastoral calling should be done at the expense of pulpit preparation, which is already suffering greatly from lack of nutrition. It is true that every other phase of the minister's work is strengthened by pastoral calling. There are occasions and needs that arise in the lives of church members which can be met by the minister only through the pastoral call. But the constant and insistent need of the human heart is to have the Bread of Life broken unto it. We admire the efficiently administered church organization. We recognize the absolute necessity of religious instruction for the youth of our church. We love to be on companionable terms with our pastor, that we may unburden our hearts to him without hesitation. But when the Sabbath has come, give us a minister who can lift us above the everyday affairs of life and lead us to think of God, and rightecusness; of joy, and peace; of fellowship, and service to our fellowmen; and of love, and life in Jesus Christ.

The minister needs not only to be acquainted with his members, and their needs; he must be acquainted with God, through fellowship with Jesus Christ, His Son. He must live so constantly in that divine fellowship that he can easily find his way into an holy atmosphere, and into holy places, and be able to lead others with him. It is only on rare occasions that this is done outside the sanctuary, and never can it be done so effectively in any other place as in the sanctuary, in the midst of a worshipping congregation. And it can be done only by him who has an intimate acquaintance and fellowship with the Word. S. C. H.

FRANCIS E. CLARK.

On September 12th, Rev. Francis E. Clark was seventy-four years of age. He has lived to splendid advantage. The world in unanimous chorus acclaims him as a spiritual leader. There is no land where he is not known, honored, and revered.

Dr. Clark was thirty years of age when the idea with which he blessed this generation was given him. Dr. Clark felt that the idea of Christian Endeavor was an inspiration and that he was doing the will of God in standing for the spiritual culture of young people. He was a pioneer in his appreciation of youth. The youth of the world love him with a growing devotion. He is without a doubt the best loved man of this generation. Millions rise up and thank God that Francis E. Clark has lived and believed in youth.

Ripe in years and rich in service, Dr. Clark has retired from the presidency of the United Society of Christian Endeavor. He is elected president emeritus for life and in his honor a fund of $100,000.00 is to be raised as an endowment for the great movement he inaugurated in 1881, and which has blessed the young people of the world with the very opportunity they needed to invest their energy of heart and life for the promotion of the Kingdom of God. His services to Christian Endeavor, in whose interest he has made several trips around the world, have been without cost to the organization. He is a poor man and this has made his services all the more a sacrifice to him. He has supported himself and paid his expenses while promoting Christian Endeavor through his books and writings for periodicals.

Dr. Clark is one of the gentlest men I have ever known. His gentleness is true gentility and not timidity. He is able to stand for what he believes to be right and having done all to stand, but his greatness of soul makes him always and under any circumstances the soul of gentility. A vital Christian experience ought to do this for any character. It has done so for the genial and cultured founder of Christian Endeavor, has done it in supreme degree.

One of the finest evidences of Dr. Clark's greatness is found in the fact that he has developed a great spirit to be his successor, in the person of Dan Poling and has turned his responsibilities over to him with evident satisfaction in his conviction that Dr. Poling will be able to carry the work to a larger success than he has been able to achieve. It takes a great man to rejoice in such a situation, but it is a real evidence of his greatness.

We join the millions of Christian men and women, young men and young women, boys and girls, throughout the world in wishing for this great-hearted man of God many years of useful service and spiritual leadership for the race of men and for the Kingdom of Christ, and in our well wishing we include also Mrs. Clark, as great in spirit and in the magnitude of her sacrifices for the young people of the world as her distinguished husband, a noble helpmeet to him in all his great achievements. God bless them both. W. A. H.

HOLLAND.

The Holland Christian Church weathered the holiday season in good fashion. A service was held each Sunday morning during July and August, Dr. W. M. Jay, a former pastor, preaching during the absence of the pastor at the Elon Summer School. No night services were held during the two months, this plan constituting the pastor's vacation.

During the summer months, the Missionary Societies had two delegates at the Chambersburg School of Missions, Chambersburg, Pa., and one at the Northfield School of Missions.

The Church was represented at the Elon Summer School.

We began our Sunday night services with the first Sunday in September. The attendance was very small.

Twenty-one of the young people attending our Sunday School leave the community this and next week, either to attend college or to teach school. Six others will teach in schools of the town or adjacent community.

The church has adopted for the next year the duplex envelopes. A budget, however, will only be established for current expenses and the Conference assessment. A benevolent goal, however, not to include the sums raised by the missionary and Sunday School departments, of thirteen hundred dollars has been suggested.

A study of the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Handbook indicates our Sunday School ranked third last year in gifts to the orphanage. Burlington and Norfolk surpassed us, with Holy Neck so close behind there was practically no difference.

The Church has sold its Delco lighting system and wired onto the Virginia Light and Power system. This is quite an advantage for the organ motor.

The Sunday School is using the Worship Programs provided by Worship and Song, the song book recommended by the Department of Christian Education.

Dr. W. A. Harper's Elon Letter of last week's SUN interests us. The Holland Church has for the last two years used practically the same plan for securing the subscription of the membership to the budget. The one outstanding difference is, perhaps, that at Holland we have made this the regular morning service, the membership responding with their pledges as the roll of the Church has been called. Envelopes already marked are at the table for the members, and frequently a whole family come forward together to receive their envelopes. Preparatory work is important, but our people apparently appreciate the fact that they make their pledges before God.

PASTOR.

RELATIVE TO EFFECTING ORGANIZATION.

Directors of Christian Education.

Your executive secretary stands appalled before this task, and yet he is willing to undertake it and do his best. I wonder if some school, or if several schools, will cheer him on his way by advising him the directors of Christian education have been elected, and their names and addresses are—I trust so. But at any rate this is our first move toward effecting the organization called for in the resolution printed elsewhere on this page. We will be heard from again.

We would call your attention to this, the director of Christian education in the local Church is an officer called for in the plans and program of the department of Christian education, which have been adopted by our Southern Convention.

This director can become a very vital factor in the educational work of the local Church. He is practically essential to the work of the Convention of S. S. & C. E. Societies, in so far as its work with the local Church is concerned. We need him; you need him. Will you not find him and elect him? J. H. L.

DR. LONG'S FIELD.

I will begin a protracted meeting at Franklinton, N. C., at 11 A. M., the first Sunday in October, 1925. Rev. J. Alston Boyd will be with me from the beginning until the close of the meeting.

The Churches at Pope's Chapel, Mt. Carmel, and Franklinton have called Rev. J. Fuller Johnston to serve them for the next Conference year. The Church at Mt. Auburn called Dr. W. C. Wicker. I have not learned about the acceptance of either Johnston or Wicker.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

"Bein' as it's you" is used as a sort of special favor in petty transactions, and sometimes in larger ones. Much is said in these days about unfaithful church members and hypocrits in the church. No sane member of the church will claim that the charge of the world against the church as to the unfaithful and hypocritical is not true. That charge is so plain that it needs no proof; but there is just as large a percentage of the world outside of the church that is unfaithful and hypocritical. The hypocrites outside of the church are just as numerous as inside of the church. Those people outside of the church who profess to be as good, and sometimes pose as better than church members, are just as much hypocrites as those church members who profess to follow Christ and do not. The question of hypocracy is not confined to the church. The world is full of this class of men and women.

Society has its pretenders who pose as leaders on grounds that have no real foundation, people who lay claim to superiority in the field of education upon the reputation of the school they attended; commercial hypocrites who deceive the uninformed and unwary; manufacturers who advertise their goods as superior to others; lovers whose words belie their hearts. It is time for the world to close its lips in universal criticism of weak members of the church by calling them hypocrites. Many of the so-called hypocrites are striving to live Christian lives. They have at least made an effort to follow the Savior and have failed. But failure is not sin, it is not even dishonesty. A larger percentage of business people fail in business than of Christian people who fail in Christian living. The church is more successful than the world. The wealth of the world has been produced by the success of the church. Christian civilization is the proof of this claim. The leading business men of the world are members of the church. Hypocracy is no reason for remaining outside of the church. It is proof of the purity of the church. Counterfeiters always imitate good money: hypocrites always imitate true Christians.

In trade it so often happens that the seller will propose to sell for less, "bein' it's you." There is only one way to make all transactions impartial. Pay the preacher what he is worth and then charge him what the wares are worth. That phrase, "bein' it's you" may be well intended and many times is; but it smacks of a special favor that may be a substitute for neglected benevolence or even for common honesty. At the counter every customer should be treated alike. At the desk there should be no difference. At the altar all are the same. In real human relations distinctions disappear. The Constitution of the United States is right. "All men are created equal."

ELON LETTER.

The loss of our library in the fire of 1923 was a major misfortune. Some of the books we can hardly hope to replace. But we are now in position to care for any books that may be given us. The Carlton Library is a fire proof building, but in addition there is a fireproof vault inside this building, and in this vault the books are stored. This is one of the main excellencies of this magnificent building.

Our friends are appreciative of the excellent care we are prepared to give the books donated to us and they have been especially thoughtful in their gifts. Some have sent money and others have sent books and periodicals. Every gift is highly helpful and thoroughly appreciated. Search your libraries, friends, for books you can spare and send them to Miss Louise Savage, Librarian, Elon College, N. C. We will appreciate your aid. And if you care to send a check of $5.00 or $10.00 to be used for new books, a library needs things both new and old you know, the invitation is cordial for you to send remittance at once to Miss Savage. Due acknowledgement will be made by her promptly.

We are glad to have added four ministerial libraries to the library within the past two years. Col. Ervin A. Holt, Burlington, N. C., a true lover of books and friend of the College, purchased for us the library of Rev. Fred Stovenour of Indiana. It contained about 1,500 very valuable volumes. Dr. J. Pressley Barrett and Dr. W. S. Long willed us their libraries. Rev. J. W. Holt's library has just come to us through Brother Holt's will and the action of the North Carolina Christian Conference. I wish to express our grateful appreciation for these gifts.

Those who have made individual gifts would fill a long list; but we need more books every day. A modern College cannot subsist without a large library. The standardizing agencies require it and the methods of teaching also require it. Will the readers of the Elon Letter please do what their hearts may incline them to undertake to help us right now?

BETHLEHEM LETTER.

Bethlehem College and Academy, located at Wadley, Ala., which has been in operation for the past two years, has started on its third year of regular work. School opened on September 7, 1925, with a very good attendance. We had a very interesting program, opening with song and prayer. The mayor of Wadley, Rev. C. W. Carter, gave the welcome address, followed by Prof. Sullivan, principal of Chambers County High School, who delivered a fine address. This was followed by a vocal solo by Prof. O. C. Fincher, who has full charge of the music for the Public School and the College.

Then came the address of the hour by United States Senator J. Thomas Heflin, who was introduced by Judge F. J. Ingram, of Ashland, Ala. The judge said that it was a distinguished privilege to have the opportunity of presenting to the large audience a man of their own community—one of their own boys, who had played with and roughed it as other boys have done among these old clay hills—struggled to get an education, and from this humble condition had worked his way into the highest law-making body in the world.

With all the good things that the Judge said about the Senator, he did not say too much; for he took the floor and spoke for over an hour to the boys and girls about getting an education—how they could get it and of what value it would be to them. He spoke of the need of a better national system of education, touching incidentally upon many other problems which affect our democracy and our world wide influence. During the entire time he swayed the audience where so-ever he would.

It was certainly a great address, and the students entering upon their school work this year can look back upon this day as an epoch making period in their lives, where responsibility, opportunity, and destiny of years, were condensed in a single hour.

Bethlehem College has accomplished a great work already, when she can attract the attention of such men as Senator Heflin in such a manner as to cause him to step aside and think it worth while to spend even such a short while of his busy life in coming to a village so small as Wadley.

The work of matriculation took place in the afternoon and has been continued ever since, as new students have arrived each day. Everything bids fair for a good year at Bethlehem.

We have two new members on the faculty this year: Prof. Lance M. Jennings, of Gibsonville, N. C., who is a graduate of Elon College, and Miss Cecil Clardy, of Wadley, Ala., who has graduated from the University of Chattanooga, Tenn.

Rev. E. M. Carter, of Wadley, Ala., also a graduate of Elon College, has been elected financial secretary of Bethlehem College, and will take up his work at once. He is a man of wide experience with the public, and we are expecting great things of him this year. We know we will not be disappointed.

"THE JOY OF THE WINNER."

By Eugene H. Rainey.

[Condensed from a sermon preached before the graduating class of Franklin, Ohio, High School, May 24, 1925.]

Text: "So run, that ye may obtain."—I. Cor. 9: 24.

Life supplies no more complete satisfaction than that of the winner; nor does it furnish any pain quite so keen as that which comes to the loser. We enter every contest to win. The same desire underlies our efforts in every race, whether it be that of the athletic field, or those of love, of business, of happiness, or the larger race which evolves all of life; we want to win. We are happy if we do, and we are distressed if we lose.

The commencement season is always a time for lofty visions and great plans of the future. If only the dreams of youth could come true, the Kingdom of our God and His Christ would soon encompass the earth, the sky, and the sea. However there is a vast deal of difference in what one wants to be in a casual way, and in what the future may reveal. If one hopes to experience the real joy of the winner, certain elements of character must be developed. In addition to these, mental training will add power to the motor of life that must be depended upon to carry one on to a righteous success. The amount and kind of schooling that one gets plays no small part in his or her future career.

The acquisition of a high school diploma grants to one a privilege that is still the privilege of the few. It is estimated that of the school children who each year enter the schools of America, 60 per cent graduate from the grammar school, about 10 per cent finish the high school course, and only 1.4 per cent get a college degree. In the face of this tendency to give up before the educational race has been run to a glorious finish, we are told that the college graduate has 250 chances to enter the hall of fame and worthwhile achievement to one for the person who quits before finishing this higher preparation for the race of life. The odds will be still heavier against the person without the grammar or high school course, for, today, the rudiments of education are a necessity.

But a mere accumulation of facts may not be helpful, and sometimes it is harmful. Youth, parents, and all who have anything to do with the leading of young men and young women, need to realize more and more that the environment connected with the educational course is tremendously important. To receive a lasting victory for our youth, their training must be given amid wholesome surroundings such as our church colleges furnish. For much of education is lost unless the trained mind is fortified by a high moral idealism.

When the training period is over and one enters the practical affairs of life, there is one characteristic that will add much to the process of becoming a winner, viz., the habit of doing well each task. For only the best will bring either success or happiness. St. Paul, in speaking of his determination to follow Christ, regardless of the obstacles that might arise, makes this significant statement, "This one thing I do"; signifying that he had set his heart and soul on this one thing and that he meant to give all of his time, his thought, and his energy to the accomplishing of the same. What an impelling resolve with which to enter the larger tasks of life!

After a minister had preached a sermon to a graduating class of a woman's college and was standing at the door congratulating the "sweet girl graduates" as they passed out into the great arena of life, each to fill her respective niche in the development of our social order, he was moved by curiosity to ask the girls what they intended to do now that school days had been finished. About as many vocations were mentioned as there were girls in the class. At the very last came a sparkling young lassie with a twinkle in her eye, and in reply to the minister's query she replied, "Parson, I aim to make a certain young man the very best wife in all the world." This girl had two big ideals that need to be emphasized in this day. First, she placed the duties of the home above all other callings, and this should always be true in all of our human relationships. Second, she meant to excell in her chosen sphere.

Epaminodas, when his enemies elected him to the office of public scavenger, thus to disgrace him, said, "If the office will not reflect honor upon me, I will reflect honor upon the office." Anyone embarking upon the sea of life with such a noble conception of the small tasks will some day grace the big position with effective leadership. It is human to like the showy, spectacular position, but this does not always give opportunity for the greatest usefulness. It has been truthfully said that behind every great man there has been an even greater woman, though the world knew her not. She was the mother of a Lincoln or some other prince among men. In order to be of the greatest service, one ought to know that there is a place for each to fill, and that what the world needs most is boys and girls, men and women to do the simple job just a little better than it was ever done before.

Another adjunct to character is self respect. Girls, in particular, need to learn this. The world expects a higher moral standard from the girl than it does from the boy. Society demands that a girl be 100 per cent pure gold, and the girl who loses her self respect soon becomes an outcast from all that is best in life.

Self respect adds many things. Ambition comes this way, and without ambition one is lost. Life's battles are won in "No Man's Land." In the final issues leading up to and through crises, one is cast on his own initiative. He owes success or failure to himself, not to his parents. All that one may have that is really his, is himself. Persons sometimes inherit wealth, but this is a most fickle thing. The other day an Italian fruit dealer, who arrived penniless in this country six years ago, bought the corner building in which he was conducting his business in a prominent down town section of New York City. The man from whom he purchased the building had to sell it as a last resort, although he had inherited a fortune from his parents. A nobody may become wealthy or famous, or both, with an impelling desire to be something, while the rich may become paupers or disgraces without the wholesome ambition that comes through self respect.

Self respect gives determination and the happy faculty of sticking to a task until it is honorably finished. The course of life is like a hurdle race: there is one obstacle after another. Without determination one is hopelessly defeated before the race begins. It has been well said that there is no royal road to success or happiness, and this will hold true in any profession or experience of life. There is nothing easy about noble achievements.

Self respect adds still another element to character that is very much to be desired. The proper self respect leads to a clean, pure, wholesome life. This kind of life will bring the joy of the winner to all. "Be good to yourself" is one of the very best slogans that one can adopt. Too often one is his worst enemy. There can be no real success without clean living, for it is not within the depths of the human heart and soul to really appreciate anything that is mean or low. Through unclean habits, and there are many, life becomes dreary, monotonous, even while one imagines that he is having a good time. The headaches and the faltering steps "the morning after" are sharp contrasts that form a sorry comparison to the bright, open countenance and the alert mind with which to begin the day's work.

None of the things that have been discussed will be added to one's character unless there is faith enough in God and man to believe that the good is better than the evil. "Honesty is the best policy" for the man always, and for his business in the end. "Righteousness exalteth a nation: but sin is a reproach to any people."—Prov. 14:34. Character makes a winner of every man; without it all are losers. To be a winner, one must have a real goal, and no goal is worthy the longing and desires of human hearts unless it is absolutely good. This absolute good means nothing less than God as revealed through the life and teachings of Christ. Jesus the Christ finished His career when just a little more than a youth, and yet in three brief years of public ministry He changed the entire history of the world, and directed the destiny of man to a region far beyond the range of all the rest of the world's leadership. As we look upon His pierced side and thorn crowned head, we behold a new joy for the winner, the real joy, the abiding joy, that which comes through loving service and sacrifice for others.

A BEAUTIFUL DEDICATION.

It was a very happy day, August 30th, when the new church building at Richland, Ga., was dedicated. If there was any difference, the pastor, Rev. H. W. Elder, was the happiest of all of them. He delights in that kind of work, but his sainted wife, who so recently departed this life had worked so eagerly for just this thing herself. Just the night she was taken sick, she contributed as many dollars as she was years old; she would not wait to make the donation for fear "something would happen"—and sure enough it did happen. She never attended church again.

Then the hearts of the members rejoiced in the accomplishment. It must have been so, for the seemingly impossible had been accomplished. Surely it is always true: when the task is so difficult, there is delight when it is done. There are only a few members, but a host of friends; and that is convincing argument that friends are worth more than money

President S. L. Beougher preached the dedicatory sermon at eleven o'clock; and at that time there was raised, in cash and subscriptions, $300, which was sufficient to pay off the indebtedness on the building. Following the morning services, a luncheon was served on the lawn. This was quite an enjoyable occasion, for many of the friends brought lunches which were all spread together on a long table. The visitors were made to feel much at home .

At about 2:00 P. M., the congregation was called into the house, and after a most interesting song service, the building was formally dedicated. This service was made the more impressive because so many told of their experience as the building progressed, and many reconsecrated themselves to the Lord for more faithful service. What this small congregation has done is a good example for others. One secret of the success is, two or three years ago preparation began, and the dream lived and was realized.

FROM REIDSVILLE.

Our Sunday School has been trying for some time to reach a goal in attendance record of three hundred, and although we have several times had nearly that number, we never reached it until last Sunday morning, at which time we had three hundred and nine present.

Our superintendent, Mr. T. J. Mitchell, promised the school a water-melon cutting when the goal was reached, and this has been arranged by Brother Mitchell to be given next Wednesday evening at 8:30, following the prayer service. We are expecting a large number present on the church lawn to enjoy the feast with us.

We feel that our school is doing splendid work and that an increased interest is manifest in all departments. Our teachers and officers are organized and work together for the good of the school in a commendable way.

The Bible Class of men, with about sixty on roll, last Sunday had forty-nine present, with three visitors, making fifty two. It is inspiring to speak to such a class of men, real men, hungry for the teaching of God's word.

We feel thankful to say that our church is moving along spiritual lines, and we consider that the work is in a progressive state.

The church extended a call to the pastor for the next conference year, and I am fortunate to say they decided to continue the same pastor again, and in addition made a substantial increase in salary.

We feel deeply grateful for so many rich experiences and deep blessings so far in our labors this year, and pray that our lives may be fully consecrated to the service of Jesus Christ our Lord.

An Irish fireman, rescuing a woman at a blaze, lost his holt near the bottom of the ladder and landed heavily with the woman on top of him. A doctor, hastily summoned, pronounced Pat sound, though badly bruised.

"You are a brave gentleman," said the doctor.

"Brave, maybe, but no gintleman," returned Pat, rubbing his injuries, "or I'd a-let the lady go first."—Boston Transcript.

STEWARDSHIP AND PROMOTION.

WARREN H. DENNISON, Secretary.

TWO GREAT ARTICLES.

Two great stewardship articles appeared in the Herald of Gospel Liberty of September 3d, by Drs. Watkins and Thomas. If you did not read them will you not do so now? They should be read to every official board of churches and conferences. They are great because they deal with great themes and great fundamental facts. There must be honest handling of all church funds. Money must go for the puhposes given. Scriptural methods and business methods need to be used by all churches. There must be a Christian conscience used in proportioning the local current expense and the benevolences of the church. We are happy that a better conscience is being aroused in this matter, and it must be borne in mind that churches and organizations cannot play fast and loose with church money. The church must be the example and the light in every community in these as in other matters.

WHY AN ANNUAL EVERY MEMBER CANVASS.

Mr. S. P. Good, of Warren, Ind., is one of the strong laymen in Eel River Conference and Superintendent of the Warren, Ind., Sunday School. He gives the following reasons why.

1. It is business like. Organization and system are essential to success in any joint effort. Christians must use the best business methods for the business department of the church.

2. A budget of the financial program of the church presented to every member at this time makes a strong appeal for support. The membership will respond with a desire to put across the whole program.

3. Local current expenses and benevolences are better proportioned because the membership is presented with figures, showing a total specified amount for others. The amount for others will not look well if it is too small in proportion.

4. The spiritual effect upon the church is excellent. The members are taught to give freely and systematically to the support of the kingdom work.

HOW MUCH INTEREST?

This letter came today: "Enclosed find check which has long been delayed because of circumstances—living on a farm where farming does not pay, my professional work laid aside, a husband sick for two years, but we are both alive and our blessings are more than I can tell. Am glad that I wish to help the Forward Movement work. This goes for 1924, which will make it continuous. My next will be in October, 1925, if God prospers me."

This Maine subscriber had paid out her five years' subscription in 1923. What a fine attitude—unwilling that she should miss even 1924, when she had not renewed her subscription. How different an attitude than that from those who seek every excuse possible to avoid subscribing and paying!

For church and denominational funds and enterprises there are those who are always planning how they may help; and others are seeking how they may get by without doing, subscribing, paying, helping, and those who see how little they may do instead of how much. There are twelve great Stewardship Mottoes that are being placed in multitudes of churches. One is, "Not how much of my money must I give to God, but how much need I use for myself?" It is a splendid motto and goes to the root of Stewardship.

"NO MORE THE OLD WAY."

Mrs. Carl Anderson, of Clemons, Iowa, sends this tithing experience: "I firmly believe that Christian Stewardship is very fundamental and that all who practice it will be blessed in every way. We have tithed for five years and we would not go back to the old way of giving for anything. God gave the first and best He had for us—His only Son. We would be ungrateful indeed if we gave less than the first and best to Him—time, talent, money."

THE UNCHANGED AMONG THE CHANGED.

BY F. D. BALLARD.

In our quiet or eventful lives, time so imperceptibly moves on into days, and days into months, and months into years, that man has to look back over the pages of history to note the changes that have taken place. The hour hand of the clock seemingly does not move, but when twenty-four hours have passed, it has made a complete revolution around its orbit. The little blade of corn so tiny seems not to be growing, but in a few weeks we return and find that it has reached the height of several inches.

Back of the Bible lies a fascinating story: the story of the men and women who wrote it. They were human beings like ourselves, with their hopes and their fears, their dreams and their longings. More than that, they were noble, heroic men and women whose supreme aim was to help others by bringing to them the glad tidings of the living God. They sought to do this first of all through personal contact and teaching, and as a secondary method through their writings. Each book in the Bible, therefore, was written for a definite purpose and originally played an important part in some great hero's life battle for God and for the right. As the cause of some religious war many a bloody battle has been fought whose heroes have gone down in the struggle as martyrs to the cause. For centuries men have been advancing theories about God and the creation. Many of them changing with the setting of the day's sun. In the field of science, during the past century, many wonderful discoveries have been brought to light which have startled the world even in this age of scholasticism and scientific research.

Generations have lived and passed out of existence witnessing the struggle between Protestantism and Catholicism who have long been vieing for supremacy in the field of ecclesiasticism. Each has broadened their conception of the church and Christianity and many changes have come about in their theological views, but they are still not agreed on all points alike. They are continually grasping new ideas and advancing new theories which seemingly are mile posts exhibiting the divine Life so marvelously transforming the lives of men.

Jesus having been with his disciples nearly three years and worshipping in the temple with fasting and prayers as was frequently his custom, was on his way out of the temple when he was approached by his disciples who wished to show him the beautiful structure they were privileged to worship in. They saw the huge stones that were laid one on the other in such pleasing style. They were viewing the work of what they considered a master architect. In this structure were wonderful engravings of stone and magnificent paintings and works of art. The disciples had no doubt labored hard to make possible such a magnificent place of worship and were anxious that Jesus should see it and go through its different courts. Jesus, however, was a man of divine knowledg and insight who saw a long ways into the future. As he beheld the beauty of the temple, while talking to his disciples, he saw only a temporary structure—one that would soon fail to meet the needs of man, as civilization advanced; one that soon would become delapidated and loose its beauty; the hands that built it would soon want to tear down and build on a larger plan, a more magnificent building than that which they had built. Here he began to tell them of the changes that would take place before the law had been fulfilled. This beautiful building which they so greatly loved and one which it had taken years of labor to build, would be destroyed. "There shall not be left here one stone upon the other, that shall not be thrown down."

In the many changes that would take place Jesus exhorts his disciples not to be deceived, "Many shall come in my name saying, I am the Christ and shall decieve many."

In the early 17th century, Deism taught that God exists only, and is to be worshipped; virtue is His true service; man must repent of wrong doing; and there are rewards and punishments after death; but it denies the revalation of miracles, denies Christ and denies that there is any revelation through him.

Calvinism, with its theory of predestination would say that even the elect may not be saved. That man is born to total depravity or to total devinity, and there is no need of a Christ.

Skepticism, with its theory of doubt, comes crying in the face of civilization and mocking God, denying the infallibility of His divine truths.

We also have Unitarianism, Moravianism, Methodism, Pietism, Romanticism, and Atheism. The world is full of isms, each having beliefs of their own, many of them prevalent in our own city or community.

With all of its theories and isms, the world moves on. It must either progress or retrogress. The Church must conquer sin and lawlessness, and greed and vice. It must be the victor or suffer defeat. It must achieve success or meet with utter failure. We must be for God or against Him. We cannot serve God and Mammon. The eternal years are God's, and in time, all of God's promises will be fulfilled. These things have changed and must change. These are simply the forms in which abiding truth from time to time expresses itself.

Jesus, while talking to his disciples, tells them that they shall hear of wars and rumors of wars, but the end is not yet come. Even nations shall rise against nation, and there shall be famine, pestilence and earthquakes, and all of these are the beginning of sorrow.

Only a few years ago the world's greatest war was fought, and millions of lives were lost. Homes were broken up by its awful tragedy and sorrow covered the land. Today, in the fields of France and Belgium, stands the wooden cross marking the spot where lies the body of the unknown soldier. Each tells a story of its own, not in the epataph on the cross, but in the epataph of the life that was sacrificed.

There is still hatred in the hearts of France and Germany. There is no assurance of a permanent peace even in America. Since the day our deceased President Wilson conceived the idea of a League of Nations and unfolded to the citizens of this great country of ours a plan that he had in mind, we have been deliberating over such a plan and trying to devise a way which will assure us of a world peace and good will. Nations are tired of war. These are the treasures of master minds that live for a day and are forgotten, yet we see evidence of the Divine Will living through the ages.

Only a short while ago, a great earthquake swept Japan and completely destroyed whole cities, swallowing them as it took its course. Thousands were rendered homeless and without food. The earth trembled with fear and terror, while other cities were being threatened with the same fate.

For thousands of years the sun has been rising in the east and setting in the west, pursuing its course. The moon and the stars occupy their places in the heavens, and the human eye can perceive no difference today from that of a thousand years ago, as to their position and function. They follow their course daily. These are of the earthly changes that are temporary in their nature. Even those whom we once thought our best friends will fail us. Death separates us from our loved ones. The flowers fade away when winter comes. The trees bud in the spring and shed their foliage in the fall. These are of a changeable character; they are not lasting, but only mortal in their existence.

In the evolution and life of man there are certain changes that are essential to his welfare and to the advancement of civilization. They are of a developmental nature and of eternal value to society. They are steps of progress; of educational value and of moral culture and spiritual development.

It is said that Jesus increased in wisdom, in statue, and in favor with God and man. Jesus was educated, not in the common sense of the word, reading, writing and arithmetic, but in all the social, moral, and religious aspects of life. In our present day we place great emphasis on education, but we are not placing enough stress on religious education. I cannot think of Christ increasing in wisdom in any other way than in the knowledge of God. Educated in the joy of service, social fellowship, honesty, righteousness, brotherly love, kindness, sympathy, and all of the attributes that make good living. When man shall have come into a full comprehension and realization of the life and teachings of the humble Nazarene and have correlated in their every day program of living his teachings as a part of life itself, education will have accomplished its task.

The blind man sat at the gate begging because he was incapacitated physically to earn a living. The leper was an outcast from society because his body was poisoned with a deadly disease. The lame man walked not because of affliction. Jesus is the Great Physician, the same yesterday, today, and forever. It was Jesus that caused the blind to see; it was Jesus that restored the leper back to society; it was Jesus that spoke to the lame man and caused him to walk. "I am come that ye might have life, and that ye may have it more abundantly."

The most profound and yet the most divine education is that of the soul, "For what shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul." God valued the soul of man above all earthly powers, wealth, or fame. Dr. Coe has said, and rightly so, "The soul of all improvement is the improvement of the soul." If men and women would grasp that great truth and inculcate into the minds of our young people in their plastic years of youth these basic principles of character; in the years to come they would be living monuments of Christianity for God and the Church. They would be become lights along the shore of life to pilot men and women to God and righteousness.

There is also among the variations in life certain truths that are moral value, universal in their significance, fundamental in their function, essential to the progress of society and eternal in their scope.

All of our education is said to be social, and we are what we are because of certain instincts and passions that dominate our lives as individuals or as a race. The most vital one is the sex instinct or relationship, and it is perhaps the one that is ignored the most. This relationship is essential in the perpetuation of the race, or kind, and the preservation of the individual. Death never destroys the entire race or kind; life is eternal, only individuals of the kind die.

It is this instinct that controls man's conduct toward woman. Too often the novelest ends the little drama of human life: "They were married and lived happily ever after." We need to know the story in its entirety and not just in part. Love is the strongest passion of the human heart, and exerts a greater influence on mankind than any other faculty of the mind. No other passion is so universal or so powerful in its influence over the character and happiness of all classes of society. It is the essence of the soul, and is blended with all the noble impulses and emotions of the heart. The home, the world's first and greatest institution, is built on the foundation of this instinct, and out of it is developed character in their offspring. Man protects and regards woman, as such. Even in our courts, women's rights are protected over men because we so regard this sex instinct.

A mother may have a son who has committed the vilest sin imaginable. Yet that mother has been known to follow such sons to the electric chair on the day of execution, when all the world has turned their back on them and left them to die the death of the murderer. But the mother stands by him as long as there is left a spark of life. It is mother's boy—her own flesh and blood—nature has not changed her, come what may.

The passion of hunger also is unchangeable. We cannot understand a so vital force, which if uncontrolled becomes so harmful to life. If we neglect this passion and ignore it as being essential to the sustenance of life, death is the ultimate result. If we do not control it, but abuse it with intemperance either in drink or harmful food, we become a drunkard, a glutton, or a dope fiend, and become a menace to society.

We would not fail to mention so great a one as the passion for worship. We should cultivate this passion by giving it high ideals and noble thoughts, and by having an optimistic view of life. There is a longing in man's soul that we call worship, a quest for fellowship with God, which differentiates him from other creatures. We can see in the primative history of man a recognition of the existence of superhuman powers controlling his destiny. The Psalmist evidenced this when he said, "As the hart panteth after the water brook, so panteth my soul after Thee, O God." Again, "My soul longeth, yea fainteth for the courts of Jehovah."

Men for centuries have longed to hear the weird stories of their fellow man who comes from strange lands, bringing stories of heroes, of war and hate, of love and sacrifice, of hardships and persecutions, of peace and happiness. This world has indeed been a place of chaos in the turmoil of war, of pestilence and suffering, of sin and unrighteousness, of lawlessness and crime, of vice and immorality. They have maneuvered from place to place as the laws of immigration and society have permitted. They are present in every city, State and country, among every race, clan and tribe. They will continue to exist until Christians rally to the standard of Christ, put on the whole armor of God, and, with a faith like Abraham's, march forth to battle for God and the right. Then we shall shout the victor's song.

In the morning our life is like the flowers of the field, as refreshed by the morning's dew, they spell joy and happiness; in the evening they fade away from the heat of the noon-day sun. Sadness has dispelled their joy, gloom is their fortune, and a cloud of darkness overshadows their light. With the poet we may say:

"Life may change but it flies not,
Hope may vanish, but can die not,
Truth be veiled, but still it burneth,
Love repulsed, but it returneth."

Jesus never wrote any books that the world knows of; he never has given us a message in song, but his messages are in the Cross of Calvary. They are written in the hearts of men and women. For nineteen hundred years, they have been telling that story. Death has been the price paid by many who have told it, but, in their untiring efforts, they are still eager to tell the story of Jesus, The Unchanged among the Changed.

Review—From Antioch of Syria to Beroea.

Golden Text: "Whom not having seen ye love; on whom, though now ye see him not, yet believing, ye rejoice greatly with joy unspeakable and full of glory."—1 Peter 1:8.

Devotional Reading: 1 Peter 4:12-19.

If one should follow the trail of some of the men who conducted operations in the area covered by the lessons of the past quarter, he would find it plainly marked by blood and death. The biography of many of the men who loomed large in Asia Minor and Greece is a story of war and death. But when one turns to the life of Paul and follows him from Antioch in Syria to Beroes in Macedonia, he finds a trail of new life. Wherever he went, he released new forces of life. He went not to destroy, but to build. And he built as only a wise master-builder can build.

There are many ways of conducting a review, and one hardly knows what to do when twelve lessons, history-making lessons, are to be crowded into two columns of space or thirty minutes of time. These notes represent a few random thoughts that the lessons of the quarter have suggested.

1. The Quarter's Lessons Present a Splendid Character Study of Paul.

A. His Vision.—He saw the larger possibilities of even seemingly small things. He always had his eyes open to the spiritual and the eternal.

B. His Earnestness.—Paul was thoroughly in earnest. Passionate by nature, he went into his work with all the passion of his nature. Folk might question his methods, but a sane man would not question his earnestness or genuineness.

C. His Courage.—Because Paul feared God, he did not fear man. Being a Christian was not an easy thing under any circumstances in those days, but to carry the message of Christianity into the heart of Judaism and of paganism demanded the highest type of courage. Paul had the stuff that heroes were made of in him.

D. His Missionary Zeal.—Paul claimed the whole world for his parish. And he did his pastoral work on a world-wide scale. Few men, except the Master, have ever approached Paul's passion for a lost world.

E. His Personal Interest in Men.—Paul was a good shepherd. He knew his own sheep by name. He maintained the personal touch with them. Great man that he was, he always had the time and the disposition to minister to any who needed him.

F. His Christ-Like Spirit.—For Paul to live was Christ. He was the gospel which he preached. He not only told men how to live; he showed them how to live. Much of the man's power was to be found in his holy life.

2. The Quarter's Lessons Show the General Unfolding Purposes of God.

There is no more thrilling romance in all the world than the story of what two men starting out from a comparatively small Church in an ancient city accomplished because they were working out God's purpose for the world. The story of these lessons is simply the story of the progressive conquest of the world for Christ.

3. The Quarter's Lessons Contain Many General and Specific Truths.

1. The world is to be evangelized through human agencies.
2. Men accomplish most when they are under the dominion of the Holy Spirit.
3. Christianity has a ministry of healing.
4. Christianity often cuts across economic gains.
5. The ultimate test of the value of a man's beliefs is the kind of life he lives.
6. Discovering and training leaders is a most vital form of ministry.
7. Men should be careful what and how they sow.
8. The needs of the world may be inarticulate, but they are very real.
9. Faith in Jesus Christ is more vital than belief about Him.
10. Right thinking is vitally related to right living.
11. Prejudice and bigotry are among the most despicable elements in undesirable character.
12. The goal of the gospel is transformed lives.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

September 27, 1925.

Topic: "Christian Friendliness to South America."—Matt. 4: 16, 17.

Some Bible Hints.

The curious thing about spiritual darkness is that it refuses the light, just as in Christ's day. (V. 16.)

Light dazzles and confuses one who has been used to darkness, and truth has the same effect. Hence we must be patient. (V. 16.)

The word "repent" means to change the mind. Wrong thinking produces wrong living. The call is vital today. (V. 17.)

The kingdom of heaven is the rule of heaven. If men were ruled by heaven's laws, the world would be paradise. (V. 17.)

Suggestive Thoughts.

Often the actions of cold blooded business men create suspicion which takes much friendliness on the part of Christian missionaries to overcome. Acts talk.

The lives of Christian missionaries show the friendly spirit. They are servants of all, helpful, kind. Contrast with a depraved priesthood.

The persecuting spirit in the world has been the source of much misery. Missionaries show a different spirit that teaches higher lessons and lifts life to higher levels.

South American missionaries show by their example that religion without morality is an evil thing, blinding the mind and leading to superstition. Religion means a pure life.

A Few Illustrations.

Eighteen years ago a missionary visiting Curico, Chile, was driven by a hooting mob to his hotel, and was insulted and hissed. Friendliness has won the people, and today the church there is filled.

Colombia is said to be one of the most backward and fanatical countries in South America. This should be a reason for friendly interest, and prayer, which is friendliness.

Brazil is to have gospel centers, each with a doctor, travelling evangelists, agriculturalists, teachers, nurses, druggists, and a school. This is practical friendship.

It takes a real friendly spirit to go to out-of-the-world places like some missions in Bolivia just to teach the natives; but both men and women do that, help, heal, and love the people.

To Think About.

What missionary work is being done in South America?

What is the size of the different South American countries?

What is our obligation to South America?

A Cluster of Quotations.

In Merida, Yucatan, missionaries are teaching people English, and have more pupils than they can handle. Friendship ripens into readiness to receive the gospel.—Anon.

One woman in Bucaramanga, Colombia, says that her son is so different toward her now; he never goes out nights, never drinks, but reads his Bible evenings. He is a member of the Endeavor society.—Maude N. Williams.

A Brazilian pastor opened a house in a town famous for its bigotry. The house was mobbed, the furniture piled in the street and burned, with Bibles and tracts found inside. But one woman was converted!—L. G. Vanderbilt.

A non-Christian once said: "If the gospel you preach were generally accepted, we should need no prisons and could do without magistrates."—Anon.

THE ELON COLLEGE CHURCH.

The Elon College Church held its fourth quarterly conference last week. The conference was quite largely attended and first to last, was full of the spirit of optimism. Plans were laid for a progressive enlargement and expansion of the Church's program, particularly in the field of Christian Education.

The Finance Committe's report showed the budget of the former year fully met, with all obligations paid and a small balance in the treasury. This report also showed that the budget for the new year had been fully subscribed, with some members not yet having reported their subscriptions.

The resignation of the Treasurer, Mr. Harold Barney, was accepted, and a vote of thanks given him for his efficient services. Mr. Henry Peel was elected to succeed him.

The pastor of the Church was authorized to appoint two additional members for the Finance Committee, in view of the fact that the Church had added 125 members during the past year, the first year of Dr. W. S. Alexander's incumbency.

The Director of Christian Education, Mr. C. M. Cannon, gave a report of the year's work showing an increase of eighty per cent in the Church School and its activities for the year, both in attendance and finances. Dr. W. S. Alexander, Mr. Chas. D. Johnson, Prof. S. A. Bennett, Mrs. W. A. Harper, Mr. F. L. Gibbs and Mr. C. M. Cannon were elected the Church's Committee on Christian Educiaton for the ensuing year.

It was voted that the Junior Church should attend the regular Church sessions on Communion Sundays and on other special occasions. The pastor and the deacons of the Church were constituted a Committee on Evangelism for the year.

Mrs. W. P. Lawrence was reelected Secretary of the Church.

W. A. Harper.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

There comes a time in the life of everyone when we think seriously of taking our departure to the land where we can rest from our labors and live in the mansion that has been prepared for the faithful. We then begin to think about the disposition of the earthly goods that we have been able to accumulate while here on this earth. It gets to be a question with those who have accumulated much as to the best disposition to make of it. Whether to leave it to those who are near and dear to us, or whether to set aside at least a part of it to carry on after we have fallen on sleep. It is a serious question and one that should receive the prayerful consideration of everyone who has been blessed with this world's goods.

I believe in building monuments, but not a costly stone shaft to stand at the head of the grave. I believe that after we have set aside enough to make comfortable those who are near and dear to us, if we have been richly blessed, then to invest the balance in buildings at some college to be used in training young manhood and young womanhood to be leaders in the battle of life, or to build buildings at institutions of charity to give a home to the helpless and the fatherless and to give them an opportunity to grow up to be useful in helping to make the world better and to be strong in the Master's work. I am wondering how many members of the Christian Church who have written this very important paper, have put a clause in it something like this one:

"I will and bequeath to the Christian Orphanage, Elon College, N. C., ...Dollars for the general uses and purposes of said institution."

THE PINKINESE AND THE JOLLY PUP.

When Mother takes me calling
I say, "Oh, please and please
Let's visit with the folks who own
The funny Pekinese!"
I walk around him softly
Upon my tipsy-toes;
He sits so queer and solemn there,
So scornful in the nose.
I wonder very often,
Suppose I gave a sneeze,
A loud "Kerchoo!" What would he do,
The pompous Pekinese?

When Brother takes me walking
I cry, "Oh, hip, hooray!
We're sure to see the jolly pup
That joins us every day!"
His ears are raggy-shaggy;
His coat's a dusty brown;
He meets me like a cannon ball
And nearly knocks me down.
He tells me all his secrets,
With joyful jumpings-up.
I wish the pompous Pekinese
Could know the Jolly Pup!

"Jimmy," said a mother to her quick-tempered small boy, "you must not grow angry and say naughty things. You should always give a soft answer."

When his little brother provoked him an hour afterward, Jimmy clenched his little fist and said, "Mush."—The New Guide.

Will you spend four cents on your Sunday School lesson? That's all that it will cost you to get the benefit of Mr. Hardcastle's study each week. And the rest of the SUN will be free!

Are you ready for Conference? Have you done all you purposed since last Conference?

WHITHER, LITTLE TRAVELER!

By Marjorie Vance.

I saw a little lady
Dressed in her bestest gown,
A traveling-bag in one hand
For going out of town.

She looked so very happy,
I ventured then to say,
"Is it for far-off cities
That you are bound today?

"For London or for Paris,
For Cairo or for Rome?"
She smiled and answered, "No, sir;
To see if Grandma's home."

Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

A NATION'S BEST DEFENSE.

"Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord." —Psa. 33:12.

Thoughtful Christians are working for a warless world. It is our manifest duty so to do. But it is also our duty to face facts honestly, and when we do that, we find we are very far from a warless world. There is a great work of education to be done. The world has not given up its faith in the power of might. Nations have not yet given up their pride and their passionate nationalism. Humanity has not outgrown its capacity for sudden and violent outbursts of anger. The mob spirit slumbers, but is not dead.

But a nation's best defense, after all, is not in military readiness to strike to repel the blow of a possible enemy. It is rather to have no enemy. Spain was neither a natural nor an hereditary enemy. She was an accidental enemy. The destruction of the Maine in the harbor of Havana was more than the blowing up of a warship. Such enmities arise without warning. Suppose one of our battleships were blown up in a Japanese harbor. Suppose any one of a hundred possible contingencies. Then peace would depend upon our self-restraint, upon our will to peace, and upon the will to peace counteracting the will to war, of the particular foreign power involved.

Consider the Quakers. They cultivate the will to peace. They suffer no indignities and commit none. Is it thinkable that such a state of mind can be developed in a nation? That is the ideal of many. It is the ideal of the Church of Christ. But, of course, the Church cannot impose its will upon the non-Christian elements of our society. There may be an untouched residuum in which there will be no love of peace, no policy of non-resistance. In that untouched element lies the fuel of the war spirit, the peril of quick response to the war motive. What can remove these?

There is but one remedy. It is the gospel of our Lord, the grace of God that melts our hearts, that creates in us the desire not to destroy but to create, to bring to pass the new heaven and earth wherein dwelleth righteousness.—Rev. C. C. Albertson.

Prayer.—Our Father, teach us and help us by Thy spirit to learn to make every day count in embracing the true spirit of living, and when we all can do this, may the promise that there shall be no more war come to pass. In His name. Amen.

TUESDAY.

A BEAUTIFUL FELLOWSHIP.

"And Abraham said unto his young men, abide ye here with the ass, and I and the lad will go yonder and worship."—Gen. 22:5-12.

When Abraham took his only son Isaac apart from the servants to the sacred place of sacrifice, we get a foregleam of the atonement and the cross of Christ, the father and son in sacrificial fellowship. The patriarchal father giving the son reminds one of divine redemption.

The fellowship of a father and son in spiritual things is inspiring to behold, and is one of the divinest things in human action. If fathers today would take their sons with them when they enter into sacrifice and Christian service, the Church would be stronger, and young manhood would be fortified against many evils of our time. One such day spent by a father with the son, as Abraham did with Isaac, would accomplish more for the spiritual welfare of the coming manhood of America than much of the technique of religious education, valuable as that is.

The night before Alexander Hamilton met Aaron Burr in that fatal duel, he took his son with him into the night and insisted that they sleep together. The son tells how his father's conduct impressed him, how beautiful his countenance and his whole manner, so full of tenderness. In the morning, the father awakened the boy early and took him with him to a quiet place. Taking the palms of the lad in his own, Alexander Hamilton, before that hour of tragedy, told his son to repeat with him the words, "Our Father, who art in heaven."—Rev. A. E. Gregory.

Prayer.—That we may learn to trust God in all things, and that our children also may be taught the fullest obedience to the Divine will, which includes sacrifice and service.

WEDNESDAY.

A WORLD-WIDE INVITATION.

"Can there any good thing come out of Nazareth? Philip saith unto him, Come and see."—John 1:45-49.

There is a picture in this line, a whole history. Philip was a young fisherman of Bethsaida. On the preceding day he had met Jesus, had heard the gracious call, "Follow me!" and had quickly responded.

The first thing Philip did after his surrender to Jesus was to tell his dearest friend Nathaniel about the Lord. How natural! Yet how uncommon today! And these were the words: "We have found Him! We have found Him of whom Moses and the prophets spoke, even Jesus of Nazareth!" The question sprang naturally to the lips of Nathaniel: "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?" There was one sufficient answer: "Come and see!"

That was a wonderful answer: "Come—and see." Not think, or watch, or serve. All that was necessary was to see! Philip was sure of that. He knew that if his friend looked upon Jesus he would revise his opinion about the good-for-nothingness of Nazareth!

What if our doubting, indifferent modern world would only come and see? The result would be not unlike the crisis in the life of the guileless Israelite; the appeal of our Lord would command the confession: "Rabbi, Thou art truly the Son of God."—Rev. Vincent G. Burns.

Prayer.—Our Father, help us this day to follow the example of Philip in leading others to know the Saviour. If the winning of souls is one of the highest duties and greatest privileges that invite the true Christian, make us winners. Amen.

THURSDAY.

KICKING AGAINST THE GOADS.

"It is hard for thee to kick against the goad." —Acts 26:14-16.

A popular misconception as to the meaning of this text, has become crystalized into a picture of one standing face to face with difficulties and trying to work a way through or around them. As a matter of fact, nothing could be further from the thought of the verse. If we understand what the goad is, and how it is or was used, the difficulty vanishes, for the goad is to urge the animal onward, not a hindrance to his progress.

The trouble in the case of Saul of Tarsus was right here. All his life he had been kicking back (for this is the meaning) against the goads that God had been using to get him into the right path.

And it is really dangerous to kick against the goads. Suppose, for instance, the goad of a new vision with all its thrilling possibilities be disregarded. Suppose the vision weakens or is withdrawn! "Where there is no vision, the people perish." And even if the vision tarry, and we kick against it, we unfit ourselves for service. Saul "was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision." What does the vision mean to you?—Rev. I. D. Lyttle.

Prayer.—That we may learn to know and to obey God's will in all things, and that we may know the gladness that comes of loyal service.

FRIDAY.

THE LAMB UPON THE THRONE.

"And I beheld, and lo, in the midst of the throne and of the four beasts, and in the midst of the elders, stood a Lamb as it had been slain."—Rev. 5:6-12.

This is a strange picture, a lamb upon a throne! The lamb, meek and humble, unprotected and unaggressive, upon a throne! The lamb is the meekest of animals; it is made to be slain; it is the one crushed, bitten, torn, devoured! Its blood is shed for others. And lo, because it is so slain, the Lamb is in the midst of the beasts and the elders, and raised upon a great throne!

Now here is an explainable mystery! Jesus is the Lamb of God! His sinlessness is whiter than the snowy fleece of any lamb. His lovely nature is as beautifully meek as the humblest little one of the fold. Can any other comparison express the affection God bears His Son, best beloved of all, than this one Good Shepherd and dearest Lamb of the fold? For the human beasts of the world slew God's Lamb and nailed Him to a tree. And because He was brought to such suffering by loyalty to His Heavenly Father and love toward men, He has been lifted upon a mighty throne in the very midst of the universe.—Rev. Vincent G. Burns.

Prayer.—Ask that, amid all of life's struggles and temptations, we may keep steadily in view the great sacrifice which was made for us. Also that our children may learn to love and to follow Jesus, and to serve Him loyally.

SATURDAY.

THE UNSEEN FOUNTAIN.

"And God opened her eyes, and she saw a well of Water."—Gen. 21:17-20.

We pity Hagar, for no woman was more harshly or unjustly treated, and it is not hard to believe that Abraham's terrible example may have greatly influenced Islam in its treatment of woman.

Poor Hagar, mother of Abraham's child, and yet cast out and abandoned, loses hope. To lose heart is to bring on that strange blindness in which one is unconscious of the true contents and opportunities of environment. Sorrow, if we are not careful, tends to blind us to the good things around us. Hagar had emptied her water bottle, and left her child under the tree to die. Giving way to her grief had suspended her maternal instincts for the moment. Then God came, and the kindly angel of hope and vision. The human extremity was indeed the divine opportunity.

The first thing God did for Hagar was to open her eyes. What she saw was a well of water, clear, cold, refreshing—it had been there all the time. A center of refreshment in the wilderness, a touch of the angel, and that priceless thing called hope returned. God had seen her as He sees us all, as He sees every lonely abandoned life, every mother with her blinding sorrow and burden. He comes to show us the unseen fountains all around us.—Rev. A. E. Gregory.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

SUNDAY.

THE GLORY OF GOD.

"Holy, holy, holy is the Lord God of Hosts; the whole earth is full of His glory."—Isa. 6:3.

The great prophets of the Old Testament may be reckoned Protestants long before Luther. Men

Kiddies' Korner

MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT, Editor.

My dear Pollyanna Kiddies:

Did you send your Pollyanna a letter?

I hope so, for Pollyanna will be disappointed if you should forget her. This week, I think it would be lovely to write to Pollyanna again, and, perhaps, send something through the mail—a surprize, you know Oh, just anything dears. But remember your Pollyanna! And listen, remember that this is a contest and that the Kiddie who has played the game best will receive a prize. This time the prize is coming from your editor. You will have to write me all you do, and I know a dear, dear lady who wants to read all your letters and judge who will get the prize. Is that fair? Your Pollyanna has to write what you have done for her—see? Then you will tell what she did for you.

Oh, deary me, I most forgot to tell you something—school begins this week! What? You knew that already? Well, well—I can't wait to hear all about it. Your Pollyanna wants to know too.

Learn about "Baby Ray," and the two kitty-cats, and the little chickens, and write your editor a letter if you can. And—the juniors—why, of course they write beautifully already, and I just know I'll hear all about school and the new games, and your Pollyanna game too, next week. Remember dears, the contest closes the first of October. Then comes the Pollyanna letters, and then comes the prize. Do your best, I'll do the rest.

WHO IS YOUR POLLYANNA?

CANDY-BOX DOLLS.

The dolls were hidding in the candy box, and all the time Rosemary didn't know it. She could see nothing but a strip of white cotton wadding that had once separated layers of chocolate.

But Magic said, "Why, I see six fairy dolls in the strip of wadding!"

Magic snipped off an oblong bit of wadding and cut it almost in half lengthwise. Then she overcast the edges all around to keep the layers of cotton from separating. Next, with blue embroidery silk she made two eyes at the top of the piece of wadding. With red silk she made two dots for a nose and several tiny stitches for a mouth.

Magic then stuffed in a bit of cotton between the layers under the face and sewed the top of the head together. On the head went fuzzy golden hair, which was nothing but strands of yellow embroidery silk combed out all kinky and curly. After that she sewed a few stitches across the neck. Then she sewed the body together down the back with over-and-over stitches and made the legs the same way.

Suddenly, on went pink shoes! They were scraps of material sewed to the ends of the legs and then bent like feet and sewed in that position with over-and-over stitches.

Arms were made from a narrow strip of wadding, using only half its thickness. The edges were overcast, then doubled and sewed together. Over-and-over stitches at the ends of the strips made hands, with thread wound around in place of wrists. The strip was sewed to the back of the doll, just below the neck.

Finally running stitches were sewed across between the body and the legs and other stitches made elbows and knees.

The fairy doll was so funny that we named her Thimby. That is short for Thimble. The first thing Thimby said was that the next time Rosemary plays hunt-the-thimble she, Thimby, wants to be IT. The first thing Thimby did was to fall to sleep in a bed Magic made from one of the narrow boxes in the bottom of the candy box.

And there are five more dolls in that candy box, Magic told Rosemary.—Frances Margaret Fox.

WHY BEARS HAVE SHORT TAILS, AS GRANDMA BEAR TELLS IT.

By Blanche Silver.

When Grandma Bear saw her two grandchildren coming across the path, she knew by the expression of their faces that something was wrong.

"Suppose you've been rambling in some honey-nest," she suggested as the bear boys came into the house, for Bobby and Dobby Bear would rather hunt for honey than do anything else.

"We've been over to Reddy Fox," replied Bobby Bear.

"Say, Grandma, why don't we have long tails like Reddy Fox?"

"I just hate this tiny tail of mine," sobbed Dobby Bear, as great big tears ran down his furry cheeks. "I wish we had great long tails."

"That just reminds me," laughed Grandma Bear, "about a little bear that lived a long, long time ago. Shall I tell you about him? He had a lovely great long tail, even longer than Reddy Fox's," and Grandma Bear drew up her comfy chair before the great log that was crackling in the fireplace.

"Long, long ago, when the world was quite young, there lived in the great woods a wee little bear called Tommy Bear," began Grandma Bear.

"And did he have a long tail?" asked Bobby Bear excitedly.

"Just a second," laughed Grandma Bear. "No, he had a tail just like yours and Bobby's. But he grew discontented with his short tail and went to Reddy Fox's cousin and asked him where he found his long tail. Reddy Fox thinking it a great joke, sent him to the old Perch Witch who lived under the rocks in the great blue pool.

"Old Perch Witch mixed up a stew and spread it over Tommy's tail and sure enough it grew so long in a few days he had to tie it in three knots to keep it from dragging in the sand-burrs. Everything was lovely, and soon all the bears in the neighborhood began to grow long tails. But a sad day came, when the fall days began to roll around and all the bears were sent out to gather the honey from the wild bee's nest.

"They could climb up the trees all right and get the honey, but in one tree the bees objected, and Tommy Bear had a terrible time. Usually he was the first one down a tree in time of danger, but his lovely long tail caught on a branch and Tommy Bear had to hang there until his daddy came and untwisted his tail."

"Did the bees—" interrupted Bobby.

"Sting him?" laughed Grandma Bear; "why, Tommy Bear's head was a sight. His eyes were so swollen he couldn't see for days.

"As soon as the swelling went down, Tommy Bear hustled back to the Perch Witch and she gave him back his short, stubby tail. And what do you think? Every bear in that neighborhood went back to Perch Witch and had her give them back their short tails. So all the bears from that day to this have kept their short tails," and Grandma Bear wiped her glasses on her apron and kissed her two charges. "So don't ever envy your friends anything, for only harm would come of it."

"Not me," laughed Bobby Bear, glancing in a tin can the Bear family used for a mirror; I'll keep my short tail. Let's go after honey now," and away the two bears ran for the tree where the honey bees had their hive.

Grandma Bear laughed softly as she watched them disappear.

ADVENTURE.

By Rowena Bastin Bennett.

A runaway road passes grandfather's gate
And scampers away to the lea;
I say to it, "Please, little road, won't you wait?"
But it only cries, "Come, follow me!"
The gate whispers, "Stay!" and the swing cries out, "Play!"

But the runaway road just scampers away,
And I'm so bewitched that I burst into laughter
And leap the low fence and go merrily after.
I've followed before; so of course the road knows me,
And there is no end to the secrets it shows me:
A meadow lark's nest that every one passes
Because it is hidden so safe in the grasses;
A cave in the hillside for brownies to play in;
A nook in the forest for violets to stay in,
For jack-in-the-pulpits to linger and pray in;
The haunt of a wood sprite in yonder tree's hollow
And, high on the cliffside, the home of the swallow.

And still the road beckons, and still do I follow,
Till, all wearied out, I sit down on a stile,
And, oh, it is pleasant to rest there a while!
But the tireless road hurries happily on Until at the turning it's suddenly gone.
Oh, if it were not for my grandmother's worrying
I'd follow the road, though I'm tired of hurrying;
I'd see what's behind every twisting and bending
Until I had followed the road to its ending!
And where does it lead, do you really suppose?
Perhaps into Fairyland—nobody knows!
But when I'm grown up I shall find where it goes—
Shall follow and see all its wonders unfurled.
It will lead me adventuring over the world!

Where are you Little Boy Blue?
Are you in the house?
Are you in the barn?
Are you in the meadow?
I see you, Little Boy Blue.
You are under the haystack.
Wake up! Wake up!

like Isaiah, Amos, Hosea and Micah protested vehemently and successfully against the prevalent idea that holiness simply meant "separation" of a person or a thing to the worship of God. They insisted that worship, which was a mere form of words or ritual that was not linked with righteousness, was a travesty of worship. They preached that to be holy meant to be consecrated to God, and to bear the hallmarks of that in character.

In this vision in the temple, Isaiah sees the Lord in such glory as causes the prophet to be abased and humbled. The sight of God means the true vision of self. It has always been so. It was so with Peter, with Saul of Tarsus, Augustine and Wesley, and may be with us. The modern world is losing much, with all its hard practicality. It is losing the sense of awe, of reverence for God and His worship, and it never stays long enough in the temple to get its vision of God. That glory is there, if our eyes are open to behold it. We see largely what it is in us to see.

Prayer.—Our Father, we pray that our little family group, both individually and collectively, may seek continually the house of God and the spirit of God until we shall know Him. Amen.

It could be real estate instead of dollars, and it can be stated to be used for some special purpose.

This is your institution, and whether the amount be small or large, it will be a blessing to the little homeless children. If you have not included the Orphanage in this paper, won't you add a clause to build a monument here.

Our friends, Holland and Beamon Company, of Suffolk, Va., remembered us a few weeks ago with a car of coal to keep us warm this winter. This company is very kind to us and makes this an annual contribution. We are grateful. We need one more car. Who will donate it?

THE SOUTHERN SERVES THE SOUTH

A buyer as well as a carrier of Southern products

The industrial resources of the South are so diversified that the Southern Railway System is fortunately able to purchase a large part of its supplies along its own rails.

While we are carrying the products of our shippers to the markets of the country, we are also buying from them for our own use coal, iron, lumber, cross-ties, equipment, rails —the thousand and one things that are needed to operate and maintain a railroad system of the magnitude of the Southern.

The Southern is a buyer as well as a carrier of Southern products.

THE FIVE WISHES.

"I wish I lived in a beautiful palace, with nothing to do but what I pleased," said little Susie Blake.

"Oh, I wish I was very, very pretty so that the people would look at me and say, 'She's the prettiest girl I ever saw!'" exclaimed Ella Dudley.

"And I do wish, more than anything else, that I had lots and lots of money," said Dora Kyle.

"I would like to be very bright and write beautiful story books," said Maggie Wilkins.

"I wish to be good—so good that all my friends will love me," timidly said little Katie Otis.—Round Table.

STATISTICS EXTRAORDINARY

A prisoner in Newgate compiled some curious statistics from the Bible. He found that the word "Lord" occurs 1,853 times; "Jehovah" 6,855 times; "Reverend" once; "Girl" once. The middle verse of the Bible is the eighth verse of the 117th Psalm. The longest verse is the twenty-eighth of the ninth chapter of Esther; the shortest is the thirty-fifth verse of the eleventh chapter of John. In the 107th Psalm the eighth, the fifteenth, the twenty-first and the thirty-first verses are alike. There are, in all the books of the Bible 3,586,483 letters; 776,693 verses; 1,189 chapters.

Religion is intended by God to be a very beautiful thing, and pious people are to be the most attractive folk in the street. Everything about them—manner, mood, speech and action—are all to be as it were clothed in fairest attire. And this attire is to be the clearest evidence that they have been with Jesus and have learned of Him.—J. H. Jowett.

May the path to the fulness of God be much traveled by our feet.—N. Fay

WARNING

Why you should take organic iron to enrich your blood instead of metallic iron —how to tell the difference.

While iron is absolutely necessary to your life and health always remember that your blood contains organic iron and not metallic iron which people usually take; therefore when you take iron always take organic iron like the iron in your blood and like the iron in spinach, lentils and apples. Metallic iron is iron just as it comes from the action of strong acids on small pieces of iron and is an entirely different thing from organic iron. Organic iron may be had from your druggist under the name of Nuxated Iron.

Millions of people annually are using Nuxated Iron. It will not injure the teeth nor disturb the stomach. A few doses will often commence to enrich your blood, help revitalize your wornout exhausted nerves and give you new strength and energy. It costs about eighteen times as much to make organic iron, like Nuxated Iron, as it does to make metallic iron, though it costs you but little more. Always insist on having genuine organic iron —Nuxated Iron. If you are not feeling quite up to the mark, telephone for a package today. In tablet form only; look for the letters N. I. on every tablet and refuse to take substitutes. Your money will be refunded by the manufacturers if you do not obtain perfectly satisfactory results. At all druggists.

BARKER.

Died at home in Alamance County, N. C., September 5th, 1925, Miss Mary Lelia Barker, aged 19 years, 11 months and 20 days. She was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Barker. Her parents, one sister and three brothers survive her.

She was a member of Union Christian Church, and delighted in Sunday School and Church work in which she labored. She was one of those beautiful characters that find joy and happiness in the service of faith, hope and love. She was popular in her community and greatly loved by her companions and associates. Funeral services were conducted from Stony Creek Presbyterian Church by the writer, assisted by Rev. Mr. Roberson. The interment was in the Stony Creek Church cemetery.

May the blessings of a loving Heavenly Father bless the bereaved ones.

A CHALLENGE TO VIRGINIA.

When William C. Gregg, vice chairman of the Southern Appalachian National Park Commission, in an address at Harrisonburg, Va., some days ago, declared that "Virginia is challenged by its leading citizens to stop the financial loss of the past" and "grasp the service opportunities of the present," he summed up in a few words the objective of the present drive to raise $2,500,000 to insure the establishment of the Shenandoah National Park in the Blue Ridge Mountains of Virginia.

The Shenandoah National Park, he pointed out, has lain buried in the Beautiful Blue Ridge Mountains for untold centuries. While Virginia and the other Southern States have lain slumbering, the Western States have gone ahead and obtained great areas that are now attracting millions of dollars to their people. Colorado, Mr. Gregg said, is understood to be receiving about $60,000,000 a year from tourists, three fourths of whom are attracted to the State by the Rocky Mountains National Park.

Mr. Gregg very conservatively estimated that Virginia has already lost 25,000,000 visitors by not having seen to it that the Shenandoah National Park was established 25 years ago. Figuring that each visitor would have spent but $4, which is ridiculously low, he has shown that the State has already lost one hundred million dollars through its lack of foresight. Mr. Gregg's address is of interest to every man and woman, boy and girl, who lives in Virginia.

The Palestinian Government is preparing to grant concessions for the extraction of the enormous quantities of potash and other valuable salts held in solution in the waters of the Dead Sea.

Athlete Goes to Mission Post.—

Eric Liddell, Scotland's famous runner, and well known athlete, has finally sailed for his mission post in China. On the day of his departure, and after he had just won several events, a vehicle upon which he was seated was pulled through the streets in state by his fellow students, and at the railroad station the great throng joined in singing, "Jesus Shall Reign."

To Repair St. Paul's.—

The Chapter of St. Paul's Cathederal undertook to repair the dome of the Cathederal, which had been declared dangerous. The Chapter asked for 125,000 pounds, and has received twice that amount, and gifts continue to pour in, in spite of the announcement that sufficient money is already in hand. The latest gifts come from Yukon, Ballarel, and Geelong.

Chapel Built in Station.—

The new union railway station of Chicago contains a unique feature. It has built within it a chapel where religious services will be held. It will be open at all times for prayer and meditation, and the bodies of the dead in transit will be cared for there, and when there is need, funeral services will be held there. This new station is one of the finest terminals in the world, and it is fitting that a place of prayer is there.

Minister Lincoln Kissed Dies.—

Henry E. Wing, retired Methodist minister, died at his home at Redding, Conn., on August 24th, at the age of 86. During the War between the States, he was asked to carry a message to Lincoln of the important Union victory of the Wilderness. He was at that time a correspondent of the New York Tribune. When he arrived with the message, Lincoln impulsively kissed him upon the forehead. The incident was related by Mr. Wing, a few years ago in a small volume called "When Lincoln Kissed Me."

Americans Read Newspapers.—

At least thirty-three million Americans buy one newspaper every day. This is about the same number who attend the movies. It is a question in some people's minds as to which type of "culture" does the most damage. Speaking at Chautauqua last month, Bruce Bliven, a newspaper man, accused the press of reflecting rather than moulding civilization. He further pointed out that the papers were kept weak because they had to shape their news and editorial policies so as not to step on the toes of circulation. All editors, perhaps, can recall notes from subscribers which would make them feel Mr. Bliven's words keenly.

J. Frank Norris Threatens New York.—

J. Frank Norris, the Baptist fundamentalist, of Fort Worth, Texas, is threatening New York with destruction in one hour by earth-quake He pointed out that sixteen earthquakes have occurred recently. He declares that this catastrophe is coming upon the great city because it "has broken the law of marriage, and has disregarded the whole law of God." He points out the fact that the church has liberalized and modernized the gospel, and that it is losing men. He also declares that we stand upon the greatest spiritual awakening that the world has ever known.

Excavating Armageddon.—

Dr. Clarence S. Fisher, archæologist, has sailed for Palestine to begin excavating the plain of Armageddon, the most historic battle field. It has been the scene of many battles from the time of the first migrations from Asia to Africa, up to the late campaign of General Allenby at the head of a British Army. The plain of Armageddon is near Mount Carmel. Dr. Fisher is to be joined next month by Dr. James H. Breasted of the Chicago University faculty. The excavations are expected to occupy five years and are being undertaken under the auspices of the University of Chicago. They are being financed by John D. Rockefeller, Jr.

Birmingham Man Succeeds Bryan.—

Mr. W. M. Cosby, the senior deacon of the Sixth Avenue Presbyterian Church, of Birmingham, Ala., has been asked by the Moderator of the General Assembly to accept a place on the General Council of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., to succeed William Jennings Bryan, whose death occurred last July. This is the highest honor which can come to a member of the Presbyterian Church aside from being chosen Moderator of the General Assembly. The General Council is made up of eighteen men, half ministers and half laymen. Mr. Cosby has given much of his time and money to the propagation of the spiritual, moral and educational interests of the church.

Large Gifts Announced.—

Announcement has just been made of gifts of one hundred thousand dollars each to Howard and Birmingham-Southern Colleges. The donor of such munificent benefactions is Mr. Erskine Ramsay, of Birmingham. This gift of two hundred thousand dollars brings Mr. Ramsay's gifts to colleges up to half a million. He gave a hundred thousand to Alabama Polytechnic Institute at Auburn sometime ago, with which the Erskine Ramsay Engineering Building is being erected. Another similar gift went to the Alabama Woman's College at Montevallo, and another to the University of Alabama. These gifts are the initial donations on a half million dollar drive which each of the Birmingham colleges is putting on in the coming spring.

People of means and insight are beginning to realize that the church supported and church controlled institution has a very definite place in the educational system of the nation, and more and more they are supporting them.

About To Be A Hundred.—

The New York Christian Advocate, the oldest official weekly of the Methodist Church, is entering upon its one hundredth year. On September 9th, it began the completion of its century of usefulness. It has adopted the slogan, "one hundred thousand for the one hundredth year." It is a worthy slogan, and we hope that the Methodists will rally to its support. It is of interest, however, to remember that our Herald of Gospel Liberty was a hundred years old in 1908, and is pacing right along toward another quarter of a century. The Christian Sun was first published in 1844, so it is eighty-one years old. Both of these papers are deserving of your support as members of the Christian Church. We are glad that Religious Journalism is lasting so well, and the Christian Church ought to be proud that it fostered and has supported the oldest religious newspaper in the world. It or The Sun ought to be in every home of the church, and every Christian ought to agitate until it is placed there.

What Chinese Students Do.—

The large part played by students in the nationalists agitation in China lends interest to a recent survey of the occupations of 3,284 graduates of the thirteen leading Christian colleges and universities in that country. Of this number only 164 were ministers. 353, however, were engaged in social-religious work, and 821 are teaching in Christian schools. In non-church schools 197 are at work. The medical profession claimed 333, law 14, engineering 13, agriculture and forestry 75, public office 98, business 400. 47 of the graduates were studying in other universities in China, and 156 were studying abroad. 67 were engaged in occupations other than those listed, and 496 were not reported. These figures show that the educated classes and the students of China wield an influence far beyond the same class in other countries. It is important, however, that the students of the present keep themselves informed regarding current affairs. It has been charged that the students of America take less interest in public affairs than the students of other lands. If the charge be true, it bodes ill for the future of our country. No man can lose four years, and then adequately make it up later. It can't be done in these busy days.

NOTES-PERSONALS

THE CHRISTIAN SUN and other publications should have a good place and favorable consideration on our Conference programs.

There is an old saying that "no news is good news." Evidently some of our preachers take this saying literally. Brother preacher let the readers of THE SUN know what is happening in your field. They are interested.

Our building at Rocky Ford, Carroll County, Va., is rapidly approaching completion. The frame work, weather-boarding, and roofing are complete. They are now ready to begin the finishing work on the inside, ceiling, etc. Then it must be painted. If friends are going to contribute to the building fund, now is the time.

"Safety or Sorrow" is California's warning to autoists. The price we are paying in human sacrifice for speedy and reckless driving of automobiles is appalling. About two lives lost every hour of the day and night, the year around, tell some of the story of speed and recklessness in the United States.

Dr. W. H. Denison, Secretary of Stewardship, Dayton, Ohio, is conducting a week's Stewardship Institute with our Burlington, N. C., Church, having begun his work there last Thursday, September 17th. Dr. Denison is an authority on the great subject of Stewardship and any church is fortunate indeed to have his services.

The Mission Board of the Southern Convention met in annual session at Suffolk, Va., on Wednesday, September 23d. The evening before President L. E. Smith, of the Southern Convention, invited the heads of departments and the Executive Committee of the Convention to take council together as to what had to be done in carrying out the decisions of the Convention in Norfolk, in 1924.

Rev. T. Fred Wright, with his family, moved from Elon College last week, where he has been in school for the past three years, to News Ferry, Va., to become pastor of Pleasant Grove and Ingram Churches, Halifax County, Va. Bro. Wright has served several near-by churches with great acceptance while a student in Elon College, and the Halifax pastorate is fortunate to have in their midst this faithful and capable man, with his interesting family.

The following is of interest to all who had the privilege of knowing Miss Nolan while she was at Elon College last year, where she won such esteem as teacher of music and as an artist of great distinction at the pipe organ:

"Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Nolan announce the marriage of their daughter, Katherine Eloise, to Mr. Arthur Edwin Andrews, on Monday, June 15, 1925, San Diego, California. At home 3614 Georgia Street."

The people of Bailey, N. C., are saying praiseworthy things about Prof. A. R. Flowers for the splendid lecture he delivered in our town on Sunday, September 13th. We are always delighted to have Prof. Flowers pass our way and speak for us. He has several old pupils in our town and oue of the remarkable things about him, as a teacher, is the life long esteem they have for him. Bro. Flowers attended the Freewill Baptist State Convention which met at Grimesland, N. C.—C. J. Oneal.

Mr. Galen Elliott, student in the University of North Carolina, is making an heroic effort to boost and build up Christian Endeavor in the Churches of our eastern North Carolina Conference. His efforts should be seconded by the young people of the conference. There was held in our Raleigh Church, Sunday, August 15th, a Christian Endeavor Union for the conference that was well attended. The next union will be held at the Chapel Hill Church on November 14th and 15th, and should be largely attended.

A very intelligent and discriminating friend of THE SUN's editor, in a recent writing, says: "I am in enthusiastic agreement with Dr. W. W. Staley on the matter of reading the Bible in the schools. There is too much splutter about the Bible and too little knowledge of it. If the old Book is good enough to kiss when one takes an oath in court, it is good enough to read in the schools, is the way I look at it." Many others feel as this good friend does, that Dr. Staley's position is very sound and sensible.

It is learned with very deep regret that Rev. H. B. Hall of our Palm Stree Church, Greensboro, N. C., has tendered his resignation to take effect October 14, 1925. Brother Hall seems to have done fine work there and proven himself a capable and enthusiastic leader and here is hoping that if some anxious church has not already given him an opportunity to accept its pastorate the coming year, that it will be done at an early date since we need to keep such a faithful pastor busy in the pastorate.

It was the editor's privilege to worship with the Ingram, Va., congregation on Sunday, 20th inst. Dr. S. T. A. Kent is the wide-awake superintendent of the Sunday School and teacher of the Adult Bible Class. It is a very interesting and growing school. Some of our most loyal and faithful workers are to be found in this congregation. They are missionary in spirit and in example, and are deeply interested in sharing with others the blessings and benefits of the gospel they love so well. It is a joy to worship and to work with such a people.

Our Christian forces are certainly put under lasting obligation to Bro. Charlie Johnson of Wake Chapel Church, Fuquay Springs, N. C. Bro. Johnson is a very capable contractor and builder, and knows how and what should go into a church house to make it substantial, complete and attractive. This busy man has just donated a whole month of his valuable time and talent to leading in the work and helping build our Rocky Ford Church and school house, Carroll County, Va. The whole Church ought to give this good man a vote of thanks, and we know it does.

In a private letter to the managing editor, Rev. E. T. Cotton, who has resigned his charge at Oshawa, Ontario, and accepted the pastorate of the Christian Church at Franklin, Ohio, says: "The Ministerial Association, of which I was president until my resignation, gave me a surprise this week. The newly elected president informed me that the Association had authorized the Secretary to write a letter of appreciation and commendation of my work, etc., said letter to be sent to my new field of work. I greatly appreciate this, to know that I have been able to fit in pleasantly with Canadian men and customs." He further says: "THE SUN has made many a bright day for me in Canada, so I want it to shine in my home in Ohio."

SUN readers will learn with sorrow of the death of Rev. B. F. Black, at his home at Phoebus, Va., on Saturday morning, September 19th. Bro. Black had been pastor of Rosemont and Berea Churches in Norfolk County until some weeks ago when he resigned and moved to Phoebus. He had been in poor health for some months, but was supposed to be improving. Our sympathies are extended to the bereaved family. The burial was at Suffolk, Va., 3:00 P. M., Monday, September 21st. Bro. Black was an Elon graduate and was widely known and held in loving esteem.

"We had a good day at Union (Alamance) on the second Sunday in September. The Sunday School was interesting and well attended. Rev. H. J. Fleming preached a very helpful and thoughtful sermon at 11:00 A. M. It was well received and much appreciated by the large audience. One member was received into fellowship. Prayer was offered for rain in accordance with the proclamation of the Governor of North Carolina. The evening hours brought refreshing showers. After dinner, two visits were made to see sick people of the congregation; and at 4:00 P. M., near Long's Chapel, I baptized three persons by immersion; and at about 8:00 P. M. a couple called at my home and were united in marriage."—P. H. Fleming.

The following is excerpted from a letter written to Bro. Jas. L. Foster, Financial Agent for Franklinton Christian College, from Bro. John J. Pitt, of Norfolk, Va.: "I am in hearty accord with you in all that you have written to me regarding the Negro race, their needs and the new opportunities that seem to be opening to this sadly forgotten people. It is a great challenge to the New South to meet the condition and face it courageously. It is a worth-while task for the Christian manhood of the South to tackle. I am not one of those who thinks in terms of the 'negro problem.' Rather it seems to me that we should think straight and directly of the Negro race as a people here in this land to be dealt with justly and fairly; for whom a good deal of sympathy should be shown, as well as charity. It must be heartening to men like yourself to witness the better attitude, the finer spirit that is abroad in the South as well as other parts of the country, manifesting itself in so many expressions of good will to the Negroes. More power to those who are working for a day of better understanding." Brother Foster adds the following: "Bro. Pitt substantiates his attitude by sending check for $75.00 to aid in the building fund of Christian College, Franklinton."

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

What about your Children's Day Offerings? The Southern Christian Convention requested every Sunday School within its bounds to hold a Children's Day service, preferably the second Sunday in June, and send the offering to the Board of Religious Education. A number of schools have complied with this request and sent in their offerings. If we are to keep Miss Pattie Coghill in the field and maintain our work, we shall need $500.00 more from the Sunday Schools this year. If your Sunday School has held its Children's Day and the offering has not been sent in, will you please see that it is forwarded at once. If you have not had a Children's Day or the offering has not been taken, will you please have your school take a special offering for this work and forward it immediately?

THE EASTERN VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.

Place of next session: Franklin, Va.
Time of meeting: October 27, 1925.

The program is about completed. Two or three more chairmen of committees are to be yet heard from as to subjects and speakers.

If there is anyone who wishes to be heard at the conference on any special matter, or if there is anyone who has suggestions as to things to be emphasized, let him notify the chairman of the program committee.

The committee has allotted more time than usual to the subject of Stewardship. On the first night of the conference there will be a pagent on Stewardship, given by the young people of the First Church, Norfolk, Va. This will be followed by an address on the subject by Dr. W. H. Denison, of Dayton, Ohio.

On the morning of the second day, there will be given one hour and twenty minutes more to the discussion of Stewardship.

The committee feels that the churches may profit by this discussion and study by sending their strongest representatives to the conference, which representatives may help in creating a deeper interest in the subject of Stewardship in the churches during Stewardship months—November and December.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

POWER IN CHURCH, IN SUNDAY SCHOOL, AND CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

One is safe in declaring that the greatest need of every Church, Sunday School, and Christian Endeavor Society is more power. The superintendent wishes more power with which to make his school more active and efficient. Teachers wish more power that they might make the lessons more interesting. The Secretary and the Treasurer wish for more power that their reports might be more adequate and inspiring, and the pupils all wish more power that their school and society might at all times be wide-awake, more interesting and more inviting. The one need is more and more power. The pastor realizes that his one need is ever more and more power.

Have we, as workers, considered well the source and character of power? First, as to source. No mortal man or woman has ever created that mysterious and unknown thing called power. Do we not forget that all power is created of God and that He alone is the origin and source of power? A simple illustration from the material world will make this clear. Scientists tell us that all material power has its source in the sun. We burn wood or coal in our fire-places or furnaces for heat, light or power. This power is not in the wood or the coal, except as the sun's rays had been stored up there, and the wood and the coal were the store houses in which the rays of the sun had been accumulated. The power that moves all the spindles in our factories, and all the trucks and motor cars, is from the same source, namely, the sun that shines in the heavens by day. It only communicates to all these other objects the power which they seem to have.

Now, as the sun in the heavens, which shines by day, is the seat and source of all the power that moves in the material world, so likewise is the Son of God, who is seated at the right hand of the Father in glory, the source and the seat of all power in the moral and spiritual world. He realizes this when, just after having conquered death, hell and the grave, He said, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." We, all of us, want power, and we need it and must have it if our Sunday School, our Endeavor and our Church and our other moral and spiritual enterprises and agencies are to go forward.

Now, from all spiritual reference, it seems that Jesus, who is the source of all moral and spiritual power, is willing to communicate this power only on one condition; and that is that it be properly transmitted or released through us to the advancement of His Kingdom, the carrying on of His work and the building up of His cause in the world.

I cite two instances from scripture, though there are scores of others, and this brings us to the consideration of our second, namely, the Character of Power.

In Matthew 28: 18-19, immediately following His declaration that He had all power both in heaven and in earth, He said, "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, and lo, I am with you even unto the end of the world." It will be seen from this scripture that Jesus promises His power only on condition that they who receive it go and teach the nations, and furthermore, He promises to be with His own to the end of the world only on condition that they teach all nations. We wish more power in our Sunday Schools, in our Christian Endeavor Societies, in our Churches. Are we willing to let Jesus release this power on His terms and conditions, namely, that we through our prayers, our persons, and our purses, will go to the uttermost parts?

We might as well face the fact now as to be driven to do so later. As sure as God reigns and His Son is the source of all power, there is just one reason why there is no more power in the Church and no more powerful Sunday Schools in our churches, and that reason is because we are unwilling for the Son of God to release His power through us for the salvation of those who do not know Him and have not had the chance to know Him as we have. We can no more build up powerful Sunday Schools and powerful Churches, than we can drive locomotives without fuel, until we submit to the condition imposed by the Son of God and become missionary in spirit, in attitude, and in activity.

Let us search the scriptures to see whether these things are so: "Ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you, and ye shall be witnesses unto me, both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria and unto the uttermost parts of the earth."—Acts 1: 8. Here revelation is plain, pointed and logical. It declares that we cannot create any power, but only receive it, and that, too, after the Holy Ghost is come upon us. Now the direct and logical sequence and outcome of receiving this power is that we shall be witnesses both in Jerusalem, (which means at home, and in all Judea the State in which we live), and in Samaria (which means in all the United States), and unto the uttermost parts of the earth, (which means to those anywhere who know Him not.)

The most deplorable, the most pitiable, the saddest and most tragic fact in our Sunday Schools, Endeavor Societies, and Churches, is that while all claim that they wish the power, they prefer their own teachings, own narrow-mindedness, own ignorance to the plain teaching and the infinite knowledge and wisdom of our Lord and Christ. We shiver in a cold house in the winter time, declaring that we desire warmth. Just outside is the woodpile in whose logs are the sources of heat stored up from the sun that shines in the heavens by day. We wish to be warmed, but we are not willing to submit to the simple condition of laying on the wood and putting the fire to it. This is no more simple nor silly, nor short-sighted, than teachers and workers in our Sunday Schools, Christian Endeavor Societies, and Churches, who say they want power, enthusiasm, warmth, ability to build up and reach others, and yet are unwilling to meet the demands of our Lord, who said that as a condition to granting that power, that we must be willing witnesses of Him to all nations.

J. O. A.

THE MAN OF CONVICTIONS.

The person of convictions, deep and abiding, is ever and always a person of power. We wonder sometimes at the power of the prophets of old. One need not wonder. These men began their prophecies and repeated them over and over with the "Thus saith the Lord." That was the way the prophets had of declaring their convictions. They were convicted of the Lord to write what they had to write about; to say what they were saying.

This was to a large degree Paul's power. He had convictions. Neither prisons nor pillories nor powers of hell could turn him from those convictions. He tarried with the Lord until he was convinced of his duty; a veritable convict of the Lord with no alternative but to do the Lord's will and way.

There is always danger, of course, that one may have convictions that are wrong, hence the injunction, "Try the spirits whether they are of God."

The editor has just read a most refreshing volume from the pen of Evangelist William Edward Biederwolf. One is refreshed by such a volume, because on every page one has evidence that here is a man who has convictions; who believes, with all his heart, what he says, and dares to stand up before the world and say it. Biederwolf believes in the reality of hell; believes it as firmly as Jesus believed it when He drew the picture of Lazarus and the rich man and showed the final estate of each. One may not from one's logic and rationalistic point of view, agree with Mr. Biederwolf. What boots it? Here is, after all, a man whose utterances have power and the charm of whose sentences is refreshing, inspiring, illuminating. He believes something. One could wish that very many CHRISTIAN SUN readers would avail themselves of the delights of the little volume in question, entitled "Later Evangelistic Sermons." (It can be bought in handsome cloth covers for 75 cents, or in paper for 25 cents, from the Bible Institute Colportage Association, 826 N. LaSalle St., Chicago, Ill.)

The charm of this volume, the power of it, consists not in the depth of its learning nor the breadth of its scholarship, but in the evidence through and through that these utterances are from a man who has convictions. He, at any rate, believes in what he is saying.

Pastors cannot be evangelists all the year around; they have to nurture the flock, build them up in high and holy living, even as Jesus lived and labored and wrought much with the Apostles about Him, preparing them for further and future activities. But the pastor may have his convictions and as he gives utterances to these there will be power in what he says.

Laymen, followers of the Lord Jesus, must have convictions and hold hard to their sense of duty and obligations. These are they who have power and weight in the Church and in the world.

Deep convictions, properly expressed, are refreshing. They let the world know where one stands and what one holds to. The world knows wheree to place one who has convictions. Such a person may not sway and influence as many, but will sway and influence some most powerfully and everlastingly.

In this hour of doubt and dispute, it is certainly wholesome and refreshing to find the man who is able to say with all his heart and soul, "Thus saith the Lord God Jehovah."

This is one reason why professional evangelists seem to have a power that the average pastor does not have. The evangelist is as a rule dealing with the high places of sin and has very definite convictions about the reality of sin and of the One who can redeem from sin. His convictions are clear as to these things that are vital, and he has power with the multitudes because of these convictions.

The pastor has his convictions also, but they cover a wider range of attitudes and of constructive work and activity. His convictions may not be as intensive, but if he is doing his work in the world, they are more extensive.

That which, however, it is desired to emphasize here is the thought that if we are to have worth and weight in the world, as followers of the Lord Jesus, we must have very deep and abiding convictions as touching God, and His Son, and the Comforter whom He sent.

These convictions we may all have if we read much and devotionally the Word of God, and tarry much in prayer at the throne of grace.

CHURCH FINANCE.

Trouble usually follows neglected obligations, and there are two methods of failure, positive wrong-doing and culpable indifference. The positive wrong is easiest of correction. The conscience of the offender is more sensitive than the conscience of the offended. The gross sinner repents sooner than the indifferent Christian. The church has emphasized the spiritual life to the neglect of material obligations. Prayer and praise, attendance and attention, have claimed exemption from financial intrusion. "Too much is said about money; I like to hear the pure gospel." The pure gospel includes every human interest and every human obligation. Unpaid debts could never be in harmony with the pure gospel. The material and spiritual interests of the world and the Kingdom of God are so related that they cannot be separated without loss to both. God's dealings with mankind are concrete witnesses to this statement. Consider God's method.

God created the material universe before He created man. The creation of man was the final and supreme act of creation. Man could not live in this world without material supplies. The church can no more exist and do its work without material support than man can live without material food. By analogy God's method for His church, as well as for man, is based on material foundations. It is not possible to build up a growing spiritual church without financial support. This truth ought to be a part of the education of members of the church. Every member ought to know that he cannot serve God and keep back from God what His Kingdom needs and what God requires of him—to "give as the Lord prospers him."

The pulpit has been afraid to make this obligation of financial support as clear and obligatory as the necessity requires. Men get nothing until they put something into it; and they have to put money, judgment, time, energy, and faith into business. The Church of Jesus Christ is not less important than business Those who till the soil put their best seed into the land and then cultivate the growing crop in order to reap the harvest; and they cannot live nor prosper in any other way. Religion is no less a business and no less a field than these essential occupations of mankind. Financial support of the church is primary and lays the foundation for genuine spiritual growth, and "by their fruits ye shall know them." The church is suffering from spasmodic and illiberal giving. The burden of most churches is financial burden, and the burden is the weight that rests upon a few instead of upon the many. A financial revival is as much needed as a spiritual revival. "Give, and it shall be given unto you"; and that means money as well as faith or love. W. W. S.

BRITISH WANT PROHIBITION.

The kinship between America and Britain is fundamental, because it is based upon community of language, racial stock, and ideals. This brotherhood is again strikingly evinced by the news that British industry is preparing a great drive for the adoption of prohibition, following the lead taken by the United States. The pressure of competition, combined with Christian moral sentiment, is compelling intelligent Britons to cope with the liquor evil. A dispatch from the London bureau of the New York Herald Tribune says:

"Plans are under way for the launching of the greatest prohibition drive ever staged in Great Britain. Not only the Liberal party leaders will enter the campaign, as reported in these dispatches, but also the heads of many large industries, who will go into the fight as a result of reports from the United States that prohibition has greatly benefitted the industrial conditions.

"Former Premier Lloyd George, it is understood, will take active leadership of the campaign. Other prominent members of the Liberal party will join with him.

"The Clyde and Tyne shipbuilding and engineering corporations, the Manchester factories, the Sheffield steel plant sand London business houses are said to be among the industries which have lined up with the prohibitionists.

"Captain Martin, secretary of the United Kingdom Alliance, the chief dry organization of this country, while refusing to divulge the names of the captains of industry who have enlisted in the drive for prohibition, confirmed the report that a number of former Cabinet members have been enrolled for the campaign, which "will be the biggest thing of its kind yet organized."

"Martin said the Laborites have not yet decided whether to come out for prohibition or merely local option. Edward Scrymgeour, England's only prohibitionist M. P., asserted that many heads of business houses had assured him of their readiness to take part in the drive. Social organizations and missionary societies will aid." —The American Standard.

It is for the happiness of those united in society, to harmonize as much as possible in matters which they must necessarily transact together. Civil government being the sole object of forming societies, its administration must be conducted by common consent. Every species of government has its specific principles. Ours, perhaps, are more peculiar than those of any other in the universe. It is a compilation of the finest principles of the English constitution, with others derived from natural right and national reason.

To these nothing can be more opposed than the maxims of absolute monarchies. Yet from such we are to expect the greatest number of emigrants. They will bring with them the principles of the governments they leave, imbibed in their early youth; or if able to throw them off, it will be in exchange for an unbridled licentiousness, passing, as is usual, from one extreme to another. These principles, with their language, they will transmit to their children.

It would be a miracle were they to stop at the point of temperate liberty. In proportion to their numbers they will share with us in legislation. They will infuse into it their spirit, warp and bias its direction, and render it a hetrogeneous, incoherent, distracted mass.

Is it not safer to wait with patience for the attainment of any degree of population? May not our government become more homogeneous, more peaceable, more durable?—Thomas Jefferson.

The Supreme Court has denied the right of a foreign bishop of the Russian church to control the persons or the property of that church in the United States, and has turned over this control to an American archbishop.

This doubtless establishes an important precedent that can be applied to existing Roman Catholic conditions in the United States, where title to so many millions of dollars of property, that it is next to impossible to compute them, is held in trust for an alien pope by his henchmen here.

There would seem to be no doubt, in the light of this decision, that any congregation of American Catholics could repudiate the dictatorship of an alien pope, and that they would be confirmed by the courts in ownership of any property then held by their church, or held in trust for it by anyone, if they took it over. Some day this will be done here, and on a very large scale.—The National Observer.

The "worst wet spot,, in the country is New Orleans, La., according to E. C. Yellowly, national chief of prohibition agents, where raids on August 12th, netted $1,000,000 worth of strong liquor. Roman Catholicism, planted in New Orleans in the days of French ownership, and fostered carefully by the priests of Rome since that time, has made this the most typical papal city in the United States. It is therefore natural that it is also the "worst wet spot." For wherever the Roman system goes, there flourish booze, lawlessness, superstition, and ignorance. It is America's task to meet and solve the Roman Catholic question, for the benefit of the entire world.—Exchange.

The anti-Bible campaign waged by the Jews and Roman Catholics in this country, to forbid the use of the Holy Bible in our schools, was marked by a temporary injunction, obtained by the Jew-Jesuit forces in East Liverpool, Ohio, on August 21st, to restrain the Board of Education from permitting the use of the Bible. Hearings in court to decide the issue will be held this month. Every schoolroom in the land needs the Bible, and it should be read and studied daily. America is a Christian country by official decision of our Supreme Court. Jew-Jesuit anti-Bible elements should return to Europe—American Standard.

Two Rembrandt portraits valued at more than $500,000 eventually will come into possession of an American museum as a result of a suit which attracted international attention. Joseph E. Widener, sportsman and financier won the action involving his right to the paintings by purchase from Prince Felix Youssoupoff of Russia. Mr. Widener has said that he will bequeath his entire are collection, which already includes 14 Rembrandts, to some museum, in memory of his father.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Life is a school and men are learners. Some of the lessons are hard, but they all have their value. Men might have it easier if they were more faithful. Teachers sometimes seem harsh, but this is because learners neglect duty. The great teacher was Jesus, and the Church is composed of His disciples. The world often criticises the Church and thinks it is of little value. Business, education, pleasure, occupy the thought, time and energy of men. But God has his own methods of impressing men with His power and the value of the Church. The recent drouth has done two wonderful things in the field of Providence and the Church: revealed human reverence for God and human respect for the Church.

The proclamations of the Governors of several States requesting the Churches to pray for rain show their belief in God and the Church. Human dependence upon God is a larger factor in society than men sometimes realize when prosperity smiles upon the people. "Before I was afflicted I went astray, but now have I kept thy word." When dire distress comes upon a people and human resources fail to meet necessity, then men instinctively turn to God for help. The extreme heat, the dry earth, the dry streams, the withered crops, the hungry cattle, the dying trees all made men feel their helplessness and dependence upon God. People have felt this more within the last month than they had felt it for years. All the people have felt the need of rain. This public feeling expressed itself in the proclamations of Governors requesting the Churches, the ministers and Christian people to pray for rain. Why did they not call upon some other organization to pray? Some political party, some lodges, some business organizations, some educational institutions, the social clubs, the heads of States? Because men feel that in spite of the faults and weaknesses of the Church, it is the one Institution that has access to the throne of God. The Church did pray, and rain has come.

Two results ought to follow. The world-powers ought to turn their influence more and more to the service of God and the support of the Church, and the Church ought to cultivate more and more the spirit of faith and prayer. God rules in heaven above and in the earth, and that Institution that represents Jesus Christ deserves recognition on the part of the State not only when there is no rain, but when gentle showers keep the flowers blooming, the crops growing, and the streams flowing. It is worth much for men in authority to recognize God and the Church, and for the Church to express her faith in prayer. The Army and Navy are powerless in a time of drought; but the Church's greatest power is in prayer. The Church is God's House of Prayer; and His people exert more power in prayer than in all other fields of service. Pentecost was the result of ten days of prayer. Jesus won his victory through prayer. Prayer is the medium through which God manifests His power of conviction and salvation. "Men ought always to pray and not to faint."

The drouth has its lessons and the showers have their blessings; the one teaches men ,the other helps men. The world would be helpless without God and the Church. The critic of the Church lacks faith in God. It takes calamities sometimes to bring the world to its senses and the Church to her knees. "God moves in a mysterious way His wonders to perform," and His movements are just as mysterious to awaken in men a sense of His power and His willingness to answer prayer.

ELON LETTER.

A College used to be a place of plain living and high thinking. Mark Hopkins on one end of a log and a student on the other, we have been naively told, constituted a College. But all is changed today.

The modern College requires a group of specialists as teachers, adequate buildings and equipment, and an income on invested funds enabling the institution to make up the annual deficit from current income. No College other than the aristocratic society schools thinks of charging the total cost of instruction. Students on an average pay about one-third what their education costs. The other two-thirds come from endowment and gifts of generous friends.

The College should afford its students adequate facilities for scholarship, for the development of their physical life , for social improvement, for leadership training, and for character growth.

The facilities for scholarship necessarily include adequate class room space and equipment, laboratories, library, and a high grade teaching staff. These facilities do not guarantee scholarship, but they make it possible.

The development of the physical nature requires courses in physical education, whereby regular exercise is provided and bodily defects may be corrected. Atheletics is a part only of this physical education program.

Social grace is no mean quality of true education. We need to learn to live with each other in a clean, wholesome way. The best way to develop a young man of highest personal and social ideals is to have him associate with pure young women and young men like himself in hope and aim. The co-educational College is therefore sweeping the educational world of higher education like a tidal wave. It ought to.

Leadership training is provided by College activities such as literary society work, inter-collegiate debating, editorial work, social clubs, religious organizations, class organizations, student government, and the like. There is a politics of the campus as much so as in the arena of citizenship. Leaders in College bid fair to be leaders in the work-years of life.

The Christian College cannot neglect the development of Christian character: The whole atmosphere of the institution must be Christian. All the professors must be Christians and must teach like Christians. Their presentation of their various specialties must be in the nature of commentaries on Christian truth. Definite courses in Bible and Religious Education must be offered. Attendance on daily Chapel, Sunday School, and preaching services should be required of all students, and the voluntary religious organizations should offer them opportunities for initiative and resourcefulness.

BETHLEHEM LETTER.

The new Christian Church at Richland, Ga., was opened and dedicated on August 30, 1925. Sunday School was held at 10:00 A. M., song service at 11:00 A. M., and the sermon was delivered by Dr. S. L. Beougher, President of Bethlehem College.

A fine dinner was served on the grounds, to a large company of people; and after the crowd had eaten to their entire satisfaction there was enough left to feed that many more. Our schools in domestic science will have to be going some to turn out as good cooks as there are in and around Richland. I would like to go down there and board for a month.

At 2:30 P. M., the people again gathered in the church for the dedicatory services. Rev. E. M. Carter, Financial Secretary of the College, led the song service. The scripture was read by the pastor of the Richland M. E. Church, from Solomon's Prayer, ii Chron. 6: 12-21. The dedicatory address was made by Rev. H. W. Elder, pastor of the church. Brother Elder said in part: "We dedicate this house to Almighty God, our Father and Creator, to set forth His most worthy praise; that He may make it His abiding place, to manifest His adorable majesty and glory continually. To Jesus Christ, our Lord and Redeemer, to the end that His gospel may have free course and be glorified to the perpetual honor of His holy name. To the Holy Spirit, the Comforter, under whose benign influence the souls of disciples may have continual solace, and the world be convinced of sin, of righteousness and of judgment. To the substantial unity of all the followers of Christ, to the oneness of their labors, hopes and promises. To the faithful preaching of all truth which shall tend to uphold the authority of the Holy Scriptures, and lead men to worship God, and to live in peace, purity and righteousness. And to an increasing fervency of spiritual life, through the willing consecration of every faculty, the growth of the Church and the conversion of souls."

The writer offered the dedicatory prayer, to which the whole congregation responded with a hearty "Amen." Following this, many short but heartfelt talks were made by various members of the congregation.

The afternoon services closed with a benediction offered by Rev. E. M. Carter.

Through the untiring efforts and supreme consecration and sacrifice of Rev. H. W. Elder, pastor, and J. H. Abell, J. R. Godfrey, and J. C. Tatum, members of the building committee, the membership of the church, the people of Richland, and others outside, we have a Christian Church in Richland, Ga., that all who contributed to may feel a pardonable pride in and one of which the whole denomination may feel proud. It was through the faith and stick-to-it-iveness of Brother Elder and his faithful little band, that we have a ten thousand dollar church—a fine, up-to-date, and commodious brick structure. And it was all paid for except three hundred dollars, which was raised at the morning service, before the building was dedicated.

Its appearance is homelike, resembling a bungalow in style, with Sunday School rooms on each side of the auditorium and in the rear, with folding doors. On either side of the pulpit is the choir loft and just at the back is a baptistry and dressing rooms. The church building will seat over 700 people. It is well lighted throughout.

In addition to this they have purchased a new piano.

Rev. H. W. Elder, the pastor, is loved and respected by all. His grandfather and father accomplished great things for the Church, and Bro. Elder, besides his untiring efforts in pulpit work has built twenty-two churches—may he live long to bless the world.

REPORT ON CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

ELON CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

To the Members of the Elon College Christian Church:

I herewith submit report of the Sunday School, Junior Church, Christian Endeavor, and Christian Education for the past year.

Sunday School.

The Sunday School has enjoyed a very profitable year. On February 1st, we moved into the Christian Education Building and placed the Sunday School on a full departmental graded basis.

The officers, teachers, and students are very grateful to the college authorities for the use of this splendid building for our work. We have found it fully meets our needs and gives us every opportunity. We should be exceeding grateful that we can enjoy these wonderful facilities.

We have not in many respects lived up to our aims and hopes for the Sunday School work. However, we have worked, and shall continue to work earnestly toward our ideal of a well regulated, efficient Sunday School.

An administrative and teaching force of 35 persons is required to properly conduct our Sunday School on the departmental graded basis. Under the old system only eleven were required. This large increase of teaching force has been a drain on our little community, because it has been our policy wherever possible to use the towns-people rather than the college people in our work, and at times I have found it difficult to keep the work properly manned. As a whole the people of the town have been splendid in their co-operation, and we should rejoice in the very marked increase in the interest and activity of the religious work of our community.

I want especially in this report to commend our pastor for his interest and assistance in the Sunday School work, and the departmental superintendents for their faithful and efficient service.

The attendance of the Sunday School has increased approximately 80 per cent so far as numbers are concerned since the Christian Education Building has been in use. The individual pupil's attendance record has shown a slightly better average. We had enrolled before February 1st, 185 students, with a normal attendance of 135; we now have an enrollment of 302 students, with an average attendance of 240. Probably our greatest work the last half of this year has been in the interesting and getting attendance on the part of the boys of high school age.

As to finances for the past year, the Church financial secretary will no doubt make a detailed report. After moving to our new quarters, with a larger attendance and greater needs, we found that the old apportionment for the Sunday School literature and expense was not sufficient, and it was necessary to exceed the budget in this respect. The apportionment for these items has been increased for this year, and by strict economy we shall expect to stay within the allotted budget.

Junior Church.

In the spring of 1924, when the Religious Activities Organization of the College, which had begun the Junior Church work, gave it up, the Sunday School took over the Junior Church as a temporary measure and carried the work forward for a little more than a year without any permanent arrangement being effected. Since the middle of the summer no provision has been made for the Junior Church.

This work ought to go forward and the Sunday School will co-operate with any person or agency who undertakes this work.

Christian Endeavor.

We have not had a Christian Endeavor Society in connection with the citizens work for about two years now. Several attempts have been made with Junior and Intermediate Societies, but they have either failed in their attempt to start the work, or have not carried on long. The Sunday School has so far been unable to initiate this work as a part of its regular curriculum. It hopes to do so in the not far distant future, but for the present, if Christian Endeavor is to function it appears it must be done through a seperate agency.

Christian Education.

As Christian Education representative for the local church, I have not been able to do any work except that in connection with the Sunday School and Children's work. We should give a little more attention this year to the general plans of the Department of Christian Education as touching our community, and make our offering to the department larger this year.

Respectfully submitted,
C. M. CANNON,
Director of Christian Education.

VIRGILINA, VA.

Three of the four churches of my charge have had a series of meetings this summer. At all of these meetings I have had splendid ministerial help, good attendance, and fine co-operation on the part of the church membership.

Brother H. E. Crutchfield, a ministerial student, was with me at Liberty, Halifax County, Va., the week following the first Sunday in July, and did nearly all of the preaching. Brother Crutchfield is a young man of conservatism and gains the confidence of the people. There were several professions of faith, and eight have been received into the church; three prior to the meeting, and five at its close. This church has a live Missionary Society and a Christian Endeavor Society that have been functioning since the organization of the church in 1911. A missionary program was rendered at the church on Saturday evening, September 5th, under the direction of Miss Agnes Whitt assisted by others. Refreshments were served on the church lawn and a delightful time was enjoyed by those present.

Rev. J. E. McCauley assisted me at Lebanon, Semora, N. C., during the third week in July. Brother McCauley is a strong preacher and does personal work, by visiting people in their homes and at their places of business. The results were very gratifying, considering that this is a community with four churches, all holding series of meetings, and a special tent meeting just prior to any. There were several professions and ten united with the church.

At Virgilina, the Christians, Methodists and Baptists united in a meeting held in one of the warehouses. Rev. Samuel Z. Hensley, of Greensboro preached for us twice a day for two weeks. Brother Robert Ramsay, of Cluster Springs, Va., led in the singing. The crowds were immense throughout the meeting. There were at least a hundred professions and eighty gave in their names to unite with some church. Forty-six have been received into Union Christian Church. The ages vary from nine to seventy-six years. From one family there were grandfather, a grandson and a daughter.

Hebron alternates with Averett Baptist Church, so did not have a series of meetings this year. This church is taking on new life. While the membership is not large, they are very loyal. They have a good Sunday School and more members are taking part in our prayer services.

RICHMOND CHURCH BUYS PARSONAGE.

The First Christian Church of Richmond has taken another long step forward in the purchase of a parsonage.

The property secured is that which has been occupied by the present pastor during the past year and is located at 3206 Grove Avenue. It is on one of the best avenues and in one of the best residential sections of the city, and is only two blocks from the church.

It is a two story brick building containing eight rooms and two baths and is equipped with hot water heat, electric lights and gas for cooking and lighting purposes. There is a double garage on the lot. The price paid was $11,000.

This gives Richmond one of the best and most commodious parsonages in the Southern Christian Convention and one of which the church may well feel proud.

A MISSIONS ROOM FOR EVERY SUNDAY SCHOOL.

BY EDWARD H. SMITH, Foochow, China.

Everyone knows how difficult and often ineffective is the work of the substitute teacher in the Sunday School.

One way of meeting the absentee teacher situation is to have a Missions Room, fitted up by missionary leaders, with maps, pictures, charts, curios and other objects of missionary education and interest. You will likely be surprised when you begin to make your collection to find how many things are available. A room made attractive by flags and pictures makes boys and girls eager to see what is behind it all.

Each Sunday one or more classes may have a lesson in the Missions Room. If a teacher is sick the class may come for a number of Sundays. Classes may come for a Sunday to study some particular phase or field of missions in this room where special helps are available. By fitting up such a room and keeping it up today some earnest worker may help to bring a real missionary message to an entire Sunday School. The plan is simple, inexpensive, workable. Try it in your own church.—Missionary Review of the World.

Sulgrave Manor, ancestral home of George Washington, in Northamptonshire, England, will be reproduced in Richmond, Virginia, as the home of the Virginia Historical Society. The home is to be the gift of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Wilbourne Weddell. Mr. Weddell, a native of Richmond, is American consul general at Mexico City. Mrs. Weddell is now on her way to England with an architect to study Sulgrave Manor, and upon their return to this country, plans for the building here will be drawn up and the building started.

THEN I SHALL KNOW.

When this passing world is done,
When has sunk yon glaring sun,
When we stand with Christ in glory,
Looking o'er life's finished story,
Then, Lord, shall I fully know—
Not till then—how much I owe.

When I stand before the throne,
Dressed in beauty not my own,
When I see Thee as Thou art,
Love Thee with unsinning heart,
Then, Lord, shall I fully know—
Not till then—how much I owe.

Are you ready for Conference? Have you done all you purposed since last Conference?

STEWARDSHIP AND PROMOTION.

WARREN H. DENNISON, Secretary

A NEW BIBLICAL PAGEANT-PLAY.

"I'm not a father—I'm a bank," complains the busy business man in the Pageant-Play, "The Dream that Came True."

And it may also be said that his wife, Mrs. Walden, is less a mother than a club-woman. And their family—whew!

It is a very natural and human set of events and changes into which the authors bring their characters in "The Dream that Came True." It is a very good selection of a vehicle for Stewardship teaching. There are speaking parts for children, youth and grown-ups, and the pagentry brings the total number of people in the action up to thirty.

Cain, Abel, Gehazi, Naaman, the foolish farmer, the rich young ruler, the three servants, the lord of the talents, the widow and the ten virgins, all appear. Yet the staging is simple as befits a religious play, and the production could very well be made into a service of worship. The United Stewardship Council sponsors the play—The New Christian Steward.

Urges Annual Every-Member Canvass, Duplex Envelopes, Weekly Offerings, Both for Current Expenses and Benevolences.

Paul S. Denison, Norfolk, Va., Secretary of the Finance Committee of Christian Temple, says, "Once a church adopts the annual every member canvass plan, I am sure it will never give it up." And he gives the reasons why:

"A few of its advantages are—

1. The personal call made by the canvassers,
   a. Binds the membership closer together.
   b. Gives an opportunity for heart to heart talks.
   c. Report of unusual circumstances in any home may be made to pastor.
   d. Gives opportunity to present both parts of the budget in the most effective manner.
2. No one is slighted.
   a. Gives everyone, man, woman and child, a chance to subscribe.
   b. It encourages personal giving rather than one subscription for the entire family.
3. Contributions (per annum) are much larger,
   a. Much more can be given by giving weekly than annually, or spasmodically.
   b. It is easier to give regularly each week.
   c. It is a thrifty habit.
4. It is business like,
   a. Records may be kept more easily.
   b. Reports may be made more accurately and with more ease.
   c. Money comes in regularly, thus making it possible to meet all obligations promptly.
   d. The church and His work are bound to prosper under this method."

Extracts from Letters.

Rev. R. G. Clark, Huntington, Indiana: "The Every Member Canvass meant a great deal to our church."

Helen Hauk, New Richmond, Indiana: "I am sending my renewal pledge for the continuation of the Forward Movement work. I expect to send this amount as long as I live and can get the money. I feel that this is a great work."

John J. Pitts, Norfolk, Virginia: "Tithing, I hope has helped to make me feel humble. Were I not giving definitely, systematically, there might be an inclination on my part to consider myself generous in my own conceit. I am giving only a tenth, and I am made to feel that I am giving only the least that I should."

MISSIONARY SOCIETY PROGRAM, 1925-26.

ALICE V. MORRILL, in Christian Missionary.

How the months fly! It hardly seems possible that we are entering upon a new missionary year, with its new programs. Our programs for this year are a little different than usual; sore of "two in one" proposition. A questionnaire was sent out to representatives of different types of societies, seeking information as to what kind of programs they wanted, what changes they had to suggest, and what criticisms to offer. I would like to express my appreciation of the prompt response of these women, only one or two failing to reply. The majority think that the programs should be based on the two study books for the year, a small minority prefer those of a different character. While it is impossible to suit every condition and type of society, we have tried to please as many as possible. Therefore you will find that, beginning with October, the programs for four months are based on the home book, "Peasant Pioneers," and for the next four months, beginning with February, on the foreign book, "Looking Ahead with Latin America." But for each of these eight months we have also prepared, and they are printed with the others, a miscellaneous program, which follows our "Program of Service," and our denominational home and foreign mission periods.

There are certain features which are to be used with either program—the devotional topics and the "Listening In"—Station, "C. M.," which is, being interpreted, news from The Christian Missionary. Different ways of presenting this will be suggested from time to time, and if you use some novel and helpful method, please pass it on to the writer that all of us may have the benefit.

The devotional services are based on the book, "Prayer and Missions." This is the foreign book for the women this year, the books on Latin America are for general use, in the Church School of Missions, study classes as well as missionary societies. There is just one thing that we feel like insisting that the societies shall do about their programs, whether they use the ones prepared by the Board or make their own, and that is that every society in the Christian Church use the book, "Prayer and Missions." It is by Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery, who has written so many of our text books. It is a book which we all need, individually and collectively. There has been prepared a leaflet, "Let Us Pray," with suggestions for each devotional service. It is, of course, impossible to use all of the splendid material in the book, eveen though we use it all the year, and I hope that you will make some provisions whereby every woman may read it. One way is to buy several paper bound copies, the number depending on the size of your membership, and bind each chapter separately, circulating it among the members after it has been used in the meeting. You know we always read things with which we are familiar.

Another new feature is "What to Do"—suggestions of things which societies may and should do each month.

Last, but not least, our young people have been remembered in the preparation of these programs, and we hope that our young people's societies will use them as well as the adult societies. They are going out under the caption, "Programs for Women's and Young People's Societies."

The Theme for the year is "Teach Us to Pray." The programs are sent out with the sincere prayer that we may not only study and think and talk about prayer this year, but that we may really learn how to be effectual Pray-ers.

FOURTEEN POINTS ON FOREIGN MISSIONS.

1. Every book in the New Testament was written by a foreign missionary.
2. Every letter in the New Testament that was written to an individual was written to a convert of a foreign missionary.
3. Every epistle in the New Testament that was written to a church was written to a foreign missionary church.
4. Every book in the New Testament that was written to a community of believers was written to a general group of foreign missionary churches.
5. The one book of prophecy in the New Testament was written to the seven foreign missionary churches in Asia.
6. The only authoratative history of the early Christian Church is a foreign missionary journal.
7. The disciples were called Christians first in a foreign missionary community.
8. The language of the books of the New Testament is the missionary language.
9. The map of the early Christian world is the tracing of the journeys of the first missionaries.
10. Of the twelve apostles chosen by Jesus, every apostle except one became a missionary.
11. The only man among the twelve who did not become a missionary became a traitor.
12. The problems which arose in the early Church were largely questions of missionary procedure.
13. Only a foreign missionary could write an everlasting gospel.
14. According to the apostles, missionary service is the highest expression of Christian life.

MRS. W. R. SELLARS,

NORTH CAROLINA S. S. AND C. E. CONVENTION.

The Eastern North Carolina Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention convened with the Oak Level Christian Church, Youngsville, N. C., on July 14, 15, and 16, 1925.

The writer arrived at the convention a little too late for the Annual Address of the President, but was just in time for the first reports.

The first report was on "Organization and Expansion," by Rev. J. E .Franks. In his report Mr. Franks told of the organization of the Christian Church, as it is at the present and warned against merely trying to hold our own, as we have been doing for the past few years, instead of expanding.

The next report was on "Missions," by Mrs. Carl Whitaker. In this report Mrs. Whitaker stressed home missions, and especially the ones in the mountains of Virginia.

The report following this was on "Literature." Prof. L. L. Vaughan, who presented this report, made an impressive talk on the importance of using all of the Christian literature available. He urged everyone to subscribe to the CHRISTIAN SUN and one or two other papers.

There were but very brief discussions of any of the reports, as the delegates proved not to be in a talkative mood.

Following the hour for open discussions, Miss Pattie Coghill gave some interesting points on the value of the Daily Vacation Bible School to the Church and to the child.

At the close of Miss Coghill's talk, Dr. W. A. Harper gave an address on "Why People are Sunday School Superintendents, Officers, Teachers, Etc." His reasons for this were: First, because the church expects it of them; second, because they want to be modern—other churches having officers—they do not want to be behind the times; third, because it is a good chance for them to grow; fourth, some really wish to teach the Bible. But he said the reason should be that the truths of the Bible should be taught and that people ought to be willing to serve and give, instead of being served and being given to.

Wednesday Afternoon.

Song service, devotional service, and roll call of Christian Endeavor Societies.

Following the roll call was to have been reports from the three departments of Christian Endeavor, but owing to the absence of those who were to make these reports, no reports were received.

Rev. J. Fuller Johnson gave a talk on "Christian Endeavor from the Pastor's Point of View." In this talk Rev. Johnson used as an illustration the efficiency of the one church out of his seven where there was a Christian Endeavor Society.

There were a few other remarks on Christian Endeavor from Miss Jennie Gunter and Miss Pattie Coghill. Then songs were sung and the convention adjourned for supper.

Wednesday Evening.

Following a song and devotional service, there was an address by Mr. Chas. D. Johnston, of the Christian Orphanage at Elon College, on "The Needy Child." Mr. Johnston told of the work being done by the orphanage and of a proposed building plan to be carried out through an apportionment which had been sent to each of the churches. One Christian Endeavor Society pledged $10.00.

Next came several addresses, including one in which Dr. J. O. Atkinson brought out the importance of the responsibilities of the Sunday School.

The convention then adjourned until Thursday morning.

Thursday Morning.

The session opened with song and devotional services. Following this was an address on "The Spark Plug of the Sunday School," by Mr. A. M. Johnson.

After this address, there were several secretarial reports, followed by an hour for open discussion. In this discussion, Dr. Atkinson brought out the suggestion that since this was a Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, there ought to be more heard from the Christian Endeavor workers in future conventions. Acting on this suggestion and in behalf of the Chapel Hill Society, the writer volunteered to see that we take care of at least twenty minutes in next year's convention. We then told how we thought the Christian Endeavor work should be carried on and how it oculd best help Sunday School and Church work. Several other addresses followed, among them being "The Challenge of Our Age to the Church," and "The Church's Opportunity Through the Sunday School."

It was decided to finish the convention before stopping for dinner.

The report of the Committee on Nominations was heard. Rev. J. Fuller Johnson was elected president of the next year's convention.

There were expressions of the convention by different delegates. The Committee on Resolutions offered a resolution asking that at next year's convention every church in the conference have a representative Christian Endeavor Society, or in other words to make Christian Endeavor 100 per cent.

As no plans were made for the carrying out of this resolution, the writer got up and pointed out the need of a strong central organization of all of the present Christian Endeavor Societies and asked for a meeting of all delegates immediately after the convention adjourned, for the purpose of forming a Christian Endeavor Union. The proposed union was formed and officers elected. It was further decided to call a Christian Endeavor Union conference to be held in Raleigh on the third Sunday in August.

Everyone was delighted with the hospitality of the Oak Level people and a very enjoyable as well as helpful time was shared by all.

MISS PATTIE COGHILL, Field Secretary

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

October 4, 1925.

Subject: "Paul in Athens."

Golden Text: "In him we live, and move, and have our being."—Acts 17: 28.

Lesson: Acts 17: 16-34.

Devotional Reading: Psalm 139: 7-12.

Reference Material: John 4: 19-26; i. Cor. 15: 12-20.

Athens! What associations that word conjures up! It was the most famous of all the cities of Greece. And what Greece stood for in a comprehensive way so far as culture is concerned, Athens stood for in an intensive way. Here indeed was the very center and the heart of the fine arts in life. Poetry, prose; comedy, tragedy; painting, sculpture, architecture, education, philosophy, oratory—the things that had made Greece famous, found their high-water mark in Athens. It was here that the great minds and the great artists had lived and labored, and they had left their monuments, not only in marble and on printed page, but in the thought life of the nation. Of all places that a man of culture would want to visit, Athens would be the first. It is easy to understand why Paul would turn his steps toward this city that had very powerfully affected the thought and life of the world, and which teemed with associations for him because of his culture and broad knowledge.

It is quite likely that Paul spent a great deal of time visiting the places of interest in Athens while waiting for Silas and Timothy, and he probably found this very helpful and very profitable. But he also found it very depressing, or as Dr. Goodspeed says, "exasperating." For in spite of the fact that the Athenians were masters of the fine arts in life, they were not masters in living. Their splendid culture served only to bring out to Paul's mind, and to impress upon his heart, the inadequacy of it all. Underlying all the culture there was a philisophy that was so materialistic and inadequate that his heart grew sick within him. "His spirit was stirred within him, when he saw the city wholly given to idolatry."

Here is an open index to Paul's character. It shows the measure of the man. Where many a man would have been swept off his feet by the grandeur and glory of Greece; where many a man would have revelled in the opportunity to participate in "city life," Paul was stirred within him at the ignorance and the tragedy of the whole thing. There was something pathetic about it to Paul and he could not keep silent under the finer impulses of his nature. He believed he had what the Athenians and all men needed; therefore he spoke.

We will do well to check up on our attitude toward, and our reaction to our modern life, not only in the cities, but in the smaller towns. That much of our modern American life is frankly materialistic and ungodly is generall admitted. What effect does it have upon us? One thing is sure: if we have the spirit of Paul and the spirit of Christ, we will feel our hearts stirred within us when we see so much of our life given up to idolatry. What our nation needs right now more than anything else is men and women who see the dangers in the trend toward materialism, and who will become so stirred that they will enlist with full consecration in the Master's program of spiritual redemption. President Wilson was right when he said that civilization would not survive materially unless it were redeemed spiritually. Just what are you doing to establish Jesus' ideals in our civic and national life?

Paul first "reasoned" with the Jews in the synagogues, then with devout persons—probably Greeks who had become interested in the Jewish religion—and then he took the matter to the market place—a kind of clearing house for ideas—where he went daily to present his cause. The Epicureans, who believed that enjoyment was the end of life and who thought that death ended all, and the Stoics, who had a good system of ethics, but who believed that a blind fate was the governing force in life—the logical outcome of this theory was that the nearer a man approached to supreme indifference toward all the events of life, the better—encountered Paul and took him to the Aeropagus where they called upon him to expound his views. As usual, Paul welcomed the opportunity to preach Christ.

The setting was rather dramatic. He was "in the midst of" Mars' Hill—a hill named after the God of War—surrounded on all sides by imposing evidences of Greece's greatness in the realm of culture. On every side there were statues in honor of Greece's great men. What is more, the whole city was full of Idols—it has been said that there were more idols in Athens than there were men. And lest they should have overlooked one, and thus invoke his divine displeasure, the Athenians had erected an altar to The Unknown God. The whole thing was simply a confirmation of what Paul had already known. Greece had everything but vital religion. She had the material and cultural civilization; she did not have spiritual life.

Paul took as his text the inscription which he found on the altar to The Unknown God. His genius as a teacher, and his respect for people of other races and beliefs is never shown to greater advantage than here. There is a principle here that we need to recognize. There is too much disregard for other folk's beliefs, there is too much bitterness in religious discussions. We need more of Paul's courtesy, a courtesy based on a consuming passion to speak the truth in love.

The sermon is a master-piece in some senses. It is more than a work of art; it is a living gospel. Unlike orthodox homiletics, Paul did not have three divisions to his sermon. Some of the striking truths which he declared are as follows:

1. That which men so often ignorantly worship and seek after is the God revealed in Jesus Christ.
2. God is the Creator and Lord of all creation.
3. He is the giver of all life.
4. He is not to be worshipped with men's hands, but with their hearts.
5. Mankind is a unity.
6. God is not far removed from His world or His children. In Him we live and move and have our being.
7. God is a spirit and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and truth.
8. There is a wideness in God's mercy, but He commands all men to repent.
9. There is to be a Judgment Day.
10. Jesus is to be the Great Judge.
11. Men have assurance of the Judgment in that God hath raised Christ from the dead.

These were strange doctrines to the Athenians. But they gave heed until the discourse left the mere intellectual plane and proceded on the plane of moral pressure. It was one thing to hear a fine discourse; it was another thing to have the preacher get back into the moral life of the hearer. As Dr. Parker says, "But the moment Paul flamed into moral earnestness, left the intellectual plane and came down to struggle with the heart and question it with hard interrogations, then the Athenian mocked, or with partial civility nodded to him a promise that they might come again tomorrow. We say, 'we will come again tomorrow.' So we may, but Paul may not be there."

We are to be doers of the word and not hearers only.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

October 4, 1925.

Topic: "How Can Our Society Benefit Our Community?"—Matt. 5: 13-20.

Consecration Meeting. Rally Sunday.

Some Bible Hints.

Salt influences its surroundings, as the society should influence the lives of its members. (V. 13.)

Light is a positive force, changing conditions surrounding it; so the society should be a force for good, a training school. (V. 14.)

The society can help the community by observing both divine and human law, indeed, by going beyond the law in kindly service. (V. 17.)

A group of earnest Christians can raise the level of righteousness in any community by patient example, by loving service. (V. 20.)

Suggestive Thoughts.

The society will benefit the community by maintaining high religious ideals, without which any community will deteriorate. Begin with the young.

The society may provide clean recreational opportunities for young people—tennis, baseball, and so forth.

The society may take the lead in play-ground work, helping the children, even providing a playground, perhaps on an open lot, or behind the church.

A Few Illustrations.

One society has formed two Sunday Schools in outlying districts where otherwise the children would have no Sunday School teaching.

By helping the foreigner and bringing him into the fellowship of American life—in the society—we help the community. Organize friendship.

To Think About.

What do you know about welfare organizations in your town?

What social uplift work is our society doing, and what should it do?

How may we benefit the community through the church?

Some Quotations.

Show me a city with no improved streets, no parks, with unkempt alleys, sorry looking homes, and I will show you a place where the people are just like their surroundings. Make people better and you make better cities.—F. H. Bohn.

Modern businesses employing foreigners welcome help in teaching them English. The thing, they know, should be done, and they are ready to co-operate in doing it.—B. Blanchard.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

Since our last letter we have had rain. A rain that made the ground wet one more time. Of course it came too late to do the present crops any good; but it will relieve us of the clouds of dust on the roads and also on the farm. It had reached the point in our farm work that the dust was almost unbearable.

Our farmer boys are getting ready to sow oats, rye and wheat, and hope to make a good crop next year to make up for the loss sustained this year on account of the drouth.

A good friend said to me a few days ago, that I ought to say more about our New Building at the Orphanage in THE SUN, as so many of our people did not even know that we were building another building. I want to say for the benefit of those who do not know it that we are building a new building, and that the contractor has the walls up to the top of the first story windows and is pushing the work right along. In a few months the Christian Orphanage will have another splendid new building. The building will cost thirty thousand dollars to build and to furnish.

We have asked all the Churches in the Southern Convention for a very modest sum to help finance this work. A number of the Churches have responded beautifully, and have pledged more than we asked. Some of course will not give. But if they could come in closer touch with this work of love and charity and see the crying need, they would be troubled and would gladly give. I pray that God will give those non-giving Churches a new vision, and may they also dream dreams of the little helpless, fatherless children crying for a home, and in their dreams see the widows weaping in distress and then may they awake to a realization of their duty.

THE SUNSET GATE.

"Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart."—Luke 2:28-33.

There is a gate, awful, massive, mysterious, which opens at the sunset of life. Rich and poor, white and black, king and peasant, enter on the same terms and under the same conditions. All life's luggage is left on t hehither side.

The Old Testament saints spoke of being "gathered unto the fathers." The New Testament writers spoke of death chiefly in the terms of sleep. They had not forgotten the great words of Jesus spoken in the death chamber in the house of Jairus. Paul, in a Roman prison, had his eyes fixed on the western sky, and awaiting the chariots of God, said: "The time of my departure is at hand." Simeon in the temple, his one great desire to see the King glorified, exclaims, "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart." His sun of life was already touching the horizon and he was looking every moment for the gate to open. To these men it was a jeweled gate. They had seen the glory of the morning on the other side.

When the sentence of death was pronounced upon him, Socrates said: "The time of my departure has come. You go your way; I also go mine, and God only knows which is best." That is not the attitude of the Christian. Simeon knew which was best. He knew the God before whom he had walked and He who had redeemed him would be with him into and beyond the sunset. —Rev. Alfred J. Reynolds.

Prayer.—Now, unto Him who in the beginning created the heaven and the earth and made man in His own image, we will give all the praise, as we humbly acknowledge Him to be Lord of lords and King of kings. Amen.

TUESDAY.

GOLD TRIED IN THE FIRE.

"When he hath tried me, I shall come forth as gold."—Job 23:10-12.

I had a friend who had gone through fires of affliction. But through it all she kept smiling and sweet, with never a word of blame for those who seemed inconsiderate. She never mentioned her troubles in a grumbling manner, but we could all see the scars upon her heart, and we knew that she was bearing up for the sake of others.

One day she was the subject of conversation of a group of friends. Said one: "Why, she seems almost glad of her trouble. I'm sure I should go into retirement, but here she goes about amongst her friends and would never know she had a heartache. All we see is the sunshine."

And this is as it should be. Does the artist show us his brushes and paints? Are we interested in the author's typewriter? Do the chisels of the sculptor bring any particular joy to our hearts? No, it is the thing that has been produced that we love to look upon—the painting, the book, the statue. And why should we parade our sorrows and our troubles? These are but the instruments our Father uses to bring out His own likeness in these lives of ours. If our friends know something about the blows we have received, and have for us a little sympathy, it is well; but shall we invite them to look upon the sore spots, or force them to get under the burdens that they may know how hard these are? No. Rather, let the world see the gold that has been refined than the fire that has tried it.—Rev. I. D. Lyttle.

Prayer.—Asking that our lives may be guided in accordance with God's will, and that we may have faith and courage to walk in the way He opens for us.

WEDNESDAY.

FELLOWSHIP WITH GOD.

"If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship."—1 John 1:5-7.

To have fellowship with God, we must do three things: First, we must walk in the light, which involves acknowledgment and confession of sin—sinfulness by nature and by acts. Upon confession, God's provision for our forgiveness in the blood of His Son becomes our immediate possession. Walking in the light embraces, further, keeping His commandments, avoiding love of the world, and guarding against yielding ourselves to false teachers.

Second, we must do righteousness. Our motive for doing righteousness lies in our hope. We are to be like Him. Therefore, we must purify ourselves as He is pure. The reward for doing righteousness is the assurance of our acceptance with God, and experience in the prevailing power of prayer.

Third, we must manifest and possess love. God's love was manifested in sending His Son to be our propitiation. Love in us is manifested in our loving one another. The mutual love involves fellowship between God and us, affecting our lives in giving us boldness and in casting out fear. The means to such love is faith in Christ, through whom we are begotten of God and have the assurance of everlasting life.

In having fellowship with God we also have fellowship with the saints and our joy is made full.—Rev. Chas. Curtis McIntire.

Prayer.—O Thou who art gracious, pardon our hard-heartedness toward others, and grant us hearts of flesh, as we remember how often Thou hast forgiven our iniquities. Maintain our spirits steadfast so that we may not wrong our souls by hating those we despise. In Jesus' name. Amen.

THURSDAY.

RELIGION AND REDEMPTION.

"Who shall deliver me from the body of this death?"—Rom. 7:21-25.

There are those among us today who would like to abolish the term "sin." They tell us that its use is out of date, and that no person in polite society talks of it. To such people, denunciations of sin are beside the mark. They want the preacher who prophesies unto them smooth things.

Rev. Theodore Parker, the New England divine, once wrote, "In the ancient classics (of Greece and Rome) you find no consciousness of sin—God be thanked for it." And yet those same classics contain records of cruelty, wrath, vice, drunkenness, sloth and other deviations from virtue! Paul, who knew something of the life lived in the ancient cities, describes them in terms that indicate clearly enough that whether there was consciousness of sin or not, the fact was there. Surely any one who uses eyes and ears in these modern days sees that something exists as a mighty factor in human life, warping and twisting it from right and beauty, and leading it away from God and the good. Whatever name you choose to bestow upon it, this thing is there!

For ourselves, we prefer to call this factor by its true name. We know that in ourselves and in others it energizes and produces what is bad. A wise man or woman recognizes the fact and seeks deliverance. We stand ready to echo Paul's question. And if we do, we shall not be long in finding his answer, "I thank God, through Jesus Christ our Lord."—Rev. H. D. Ranns.

Prayer.—O Thou divine Redeemer of all the world, save us from fear that Thy sacrifice may not avail, on account of the slow process of the world's acceptance of it. Keep alive our sure conviction that He who was lifted up from the earth will in time draw all men up unto Himself. Amen.

FRIDAY.

THE NEIGHBOR WHO CARED.

"Go and do thou likewise."—Luke 10:33-37.

Everybody likes the good Samaritan. The word "good" is not applied to him at all in the account in Luke. Jesus said, "A certain Samaritan." The first audience that received these words quickly rendered a verdict for the Samaritan as against the priest and Levite, and all audiences since have given the like verdict. Men have liked the character so well that they have substituted the word "good" for the word "certain." Nobody knows his name. He simply lost himself in his good deed and so became one of the world's best-known and most-loved characters.

He paid the price. The privilege of such aid is never quite a gift. The man in Christ's parable paid the price. He even walked, that the wounded man might ride. In other words, we cannot be servants unless we pay the cost of service.

A young lady, seeing a group of admirers gathered around a woman who had given a faithful and successful service in a foreign field, said that she would like to be a returned missionary if it were not for being an outgoing missionary. We can all see how that statement involves a moral contradiction. Service without cost is a counterfeit simply because service without cost is service without character. We serve God and man in the positive help ministered through Christian character. To ring true in all the experiences of life has in it a service beyond the power of spoken word or commanding deed. Anything but love grows weary in well-doing. Only love will impel us to "Go and do likewise."—Rev. W. S. Stranahan.

Prayer.—That we may learn the value and the joy of helpfulness rendered to our fellow-men, and have within us the spirit of Him who "went about doing good."

SATURDAY.

LITTLE DEEDS OF KINDNESS.

"Ye are the salt of the earth."—Matt. 5:13-16.

It is a big task to make the whole world Christian. It is not to be done by Church members who are only half-hearted in the task of the kingdom, and mostly occupied by the affairs of this world. It needs a little company who will follow the Master with all their power. Then they may lead the crowd. The disciples were to do more than teach. They were to so practice the gospel in all the relations of life as to become the "saving salt," with power to check the corruption of the world.

The responsibility of following Jesus today involves more than a willingness to teach and preach the gospel of Jesus. Religion can only be expressed, taught and realized, as it is shown in daily character and social living.

A testimony recently given by a Salvation Army lassie, is very suggestive: " 'I don't want no preaching,' said a sick woman to me. 'I ain't much of a hand to preach,' said I, 'but I can make a good cup of tea.' And with that I crossed over to the stove, started a fire and made her one in a jiffy. Then I put on some oatmeal for her three children's breakfast, and while it was cooking I tidied up the room and then washed the babies' faces, until everything looked a deal brighter and cleaner. Not one word did I say to the woman about her soul, but now she comes to our meetings very regularly and our

MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT, Editor.

Good morning Pollyanna:

Are you acquainted with your Pollyanna yet? Write him or her at once and get acquainted. I want all the Kiddies to play—and then write me about it. Sh-h-sh, its a secret—the prize, I mean! But you may tell it to the "Kiddie Korner"—after Pollyanna wins it—surely! What have you done for your Pollyanna this week?. Something nice, I am sure. I can't hardly wait to know all you do. But wait, do not write and tell me yet! The first of October, write your editor a letter and tell her what Pollyanna did for you—See? Oh, oh, I must be careful—the bell is ringing for school and away we must run. When you get home this afternoon, think of your Pollyanna—write to your Pollyanna—or better still, send your Pollyanna your first beautiful drawing. Oh, just wait till Mr. Postman brings you a package from Pollyanna—OOH-ee-oh, my—let's run to the mail box quickly!

Good bye, dear Kiddies, run away to school now.

MAKING FRIENDS WITH THE LITTLE WOODS PEOPLE.

"Sh-h-h!" warned Aunt Sue, pointing mysteriously.

Up over the edge of a log whisked a little brown creature. When it saw Jean and Jim, it stopped as short as if someone had pressed a button. Then it sat up on its hind legs, flipped its tail, rubbed its nose absently and stared.

It had the beadiest black eyes and a pointed nose that made it look ridicuously inquisitive. It wasn't much bigger than a full grown mouse, but it looked and acted like a wee squirrel. It wore a beautiful white vest and had black and white stripes on the back of its brown coat.

And such a tail as it had! It was almost as long as the little chap himself and was all fluffed up like a bottle brush.

Jean and Jim had just come from the city to the woods, so they had never seen anything like this before

Suddenly Jim sneezed, "Kerchew!"

The little fellow leaped about six inches, straight up into the air and with a loud chitter of fright scurried off into the bushes.

"What was it," asked Jim and Jean all in one breath.

"A chipmunk," said Aunt Sue, "and just about the cunningest and friendliest of all the little woods people, I think. When I was a little girl no bigger than you two, I saw my first chipmunks and promptly set about getting acquainted with them.

"First I put some bread and crackers, broken into small bits, on some loose boards. Later on I put on some peanuts, but the chipmunks had never seen them before, and I actually had to teach them to like the new kind of nuts.

"When they had got the habit of coming to my lunch counter regularly, I began to stay near it. Each day I moved closer until I was at last standing beside it. By that time they had grown so used to me that they paid no attention to me. One day, however, I put the bread on my hand, and that was another matter!

"Bobby—I called him that because he had only half a tail—was the first to appear. He saw what I had done and sat up to think things over, his little black eyes full of doubt and fear. I didn't dare to move, so it seemed a long time before this look of distrust gave place to Bobby's usual twinkles. He rubbed his nose, gave his tail a saucy flirt and started towaards me.

"Then suddenly Bobby's caution got the better of his appetite and we were back at the beginning—Bobby staring suspiciously and I not daring to move. How many times he did this I don't remember; but at last, step by step, every muscle tensed, ready for a backward spring, Bobby pulled himself to my hand, stretched his neck as far as he could, seized a piece of bread in his mouth and was gone.

"That was the beginning, of course. It took many patient hours, but before the summer was over Bobby grew absolutely fearless and at least a dozen other chipmunks were climbing into my lap and eating out of my hands."

"Didn't they ever bite?" asked Jim.

"Dear me, no!" exclaimed Aunt Sue. "Of course, I was careful never to try to hold them or pick them up against their wills."

"Aunt Sue," said Jean, "do you think that Jim and I could have some chipmunk pets?"

"I am sure of it, if you can sit still and be patient!"

"We can! We can!" Jean and Jim both declared .

They could and they did! Before the summer was over they had chipmunks running up on their shoulders and into their pockets and one even used Jean's big broad-brimmed hat for a race track.—Ruth A. Nichols.

A LETTER FROM BELL FLOWER.

Dear Onkel Jonathan:

Their is a new man come to our Sunday School. He knows pretty near evything he is principal of something I think it is principle of Ejucation.

We are not going to think or talk no more because we have got to correolate our hands and eyes and souls. The way you do that is to cut paper. Our class cut up a quanerty yesterday and a pitcher of a kid in a nightie. The kid's name was Joseph. But Joe Hunkie says if any kid says he looks like that he'll bust his face. Some of the kids in Sunday School say it is the Joseph in the Bible, but I don't think that can be.

The kid in the pitcher has got curls, and we had to color him red and blue and yeller with wax crayons to show he had a offul bad dream.

I am going to be a good girl and learn all I can because us kids have been offul negleckked.

Your loveing niece,

Bell Flower Winesappe.

P. S.—Some of the boys ackted offul and slung paper wads and ate the paste the man gave us.

MY NEW DRESS.

My mother buys a piece of cloth
To make a frock for me;
She cuts it up in little bits,
Though why, I cannot see.
She cuts it up in little bits,
And then, with might and main,
She sews and sews and sews and sews,
And sews it up again!—Selected.

Prayer.—That we may learn to do the little deeds of love and kindness, to help the feeble, feed the hungry, and do those acts of love and practical sympathy that speak louder than words.

SUNDAY.

A WONDERFUL PROMISE.

"Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."—Matt. 5:8.

Virtue is the result when God conquers a man. It is impossible to understand how a man can be truly virtuous if he be separated from God. For God is the source of every good and perfect gift. That man has found virtue who has found God. That was what Jesus clearly told us. He said that if a person would only be pure in heart, he or she would surely see and know God! That is a wonderful promise! When the heart is pure, the spiritual eyes are bright and clear. God can be discerned; while before He may have been obscured, now the virtuous vision perfectly perceives Him!—Rev. Vincent G. Burns.

Prayer.—Our Father, grant that we may have strong faith in God's abiding goodness and his readiness to help all who trust Him. Give us Thyself, virtue and to see Thee forever. Amen

FACTS EVERY CHRISTIAN SHOULD KNOW ABOUT OUR MOUNTAIN WORK IN CARROLL COUNTY, VA.

THE PICTURES EXPLAINED.

We are presenting herewith five scenes, which are selected as typical of our activities and opportunities in Carroll County, Va. We think that our friends in Carroll County and those who may never see them, other than through these pictures, will agree that these portray conditions, privileges and prospects as they actually exist. These scenes are selected from five times the number which are now in hand, and seek to avoid all exageration or any overdrawing of facts and features as we now face them.

No. 1 gives the old house in which Miss Hedgepeth began her work, and in which our first day school and Sunday services were held.

No. 2 gives a little glimpse of the building in which our Elk Spur Church service and day school are now held, and Mrs. Sorrell's day school class. This house is only a few hundred feet from where the old house stood and cost $4,000. Carting material up the long distance of the high mountain and building adequately up there is naturally a costly and tedious process. We have a beautiful building and regret that our picture does not more adequately portray it.

No. 3 is our junior quartet, whose voices gladden the hearts of their parents and of our congregation at Elk Spur on many occasions of Christian service and divine worship.

No. 4 shows the farm of two of our most loyal members at Elk Spur, and who, out of their generosity and deep devotion for our work, gave an acre of land from which to get firewood and logs for our Elk Spur school. Their team and method of travel may not be as rapid as some of our more modern fast-flyers, but they arrive just the same and may always be counted upon to be near the preacher when he opens the Book for service and to help him in his labors and efforts for the kingdom.

No. 5 shows the Rigney home, on to which a shed was built, 12x14 feet, to enable us to have services and school in their community. The Rigneys have been our dear and devoted and generous friends, and are happy in the thought that their own dwelling has housed also our Church and our school. By close inspection of this picture, the end of the shed or "lean-to" will be observed. This, of course, has not been adequate to meet the demands of our growing congregation, and our Rocky Ford Church is now to be built to the joy of the Rigneys and to the deep gratitude of the entire community. The Rigneys have never charged any rent for the use of their house for school and Church service, and are happy to aid as best they can in the work of a permanent and adequate building for our congregation. The class and congregation about the door of the Rigney home tells its own story of the prospect and the need.

WHAT HAS BEEN ACCOMPLISHED IN OUR MOUNTAIN WORK.

One could hardly realize just a few years ago, when the Southern Christian Convention took up work here, under the faithful supervision of Miss Iola Hedgpeth, that conditions really existed, as they did, so near home. The people here were willing and wanted to attain unto higher things, but there was lack of support by those who were able to help them out of their need. Miss Hedgepeth did a great work here. She did a work that we believe will some day develop into greater things than we can even hope for now. We are being asked by the people at large, "What has been accomplished here through their efforts in sending money and giving their support?"

Elk Spur.

This is located near the top of Fancy Gap, and gets its name from the early settlers. It is a narrow strip running along the top of the mountain and was once a famous place for killing deer. When the work first began, it was located here. There was only a log-cabin school house that had already been condemned by the county. To show you the kind of school that really existed, I will point out an example. The pupils, it is said, would fight during school hours, and often one could see the teacher being carried on a fence rail by several boys to give him a dip in the cold spring water —a sport known to them as "cooling the old boy." The school only lasted for just a short while during the year. Now we have at this place a building worth four thousand dollars, not including the seventeen acres of land. Then, near it we have a parsonage worth fifteen hundred dollars. The work here has gone from that little condemned log house to a Church of nearly forty members. The people here, as a rule, are very responsive to the call, both for Church and school. Surely God has done a wonderful work in saving souls through our efforts here.

When I first came to the field, Sunday observance was a thing known but little to most of the people. Hauling hay, trading horses and many other occupations were common among the people. One may ask if all of this has been eliminated. It can be well said that it has, with but little exception.

Rocky Ford.

This work was first begun by workers being sent in here for just a few weeks in the summer. Miss Clemmer and Miss Lankford began teaching school in a small shack. Then, when we began our preaching here, we saw at once that it was a very promising field of labor. In the summer of 1922, I was numbered with those that came up here temporarily. During this stay, the spark was kindled for Rocky Ford building. Dr. Atkinson spoke under the same cherry tree May 31, 1925, and gave the people the final assurance, where we workers met two years before and wrote Dr. Atkinson, asking him for a building here some time in the future. This building will be located on the Fancy Gap Road, near the foot of the mountain, and in one of the most needy sections. The people are not near so able to do for themselves as they are at Elk Spur. We have about forty on our Church roll at this place, and a fine prospect for a large Church membership here as soon as we have ample room. This place gets its name from the many rocky clifts in this section. The land is poor and exceedingly steep and hilly, but the people are deserving, willing and appreciative.

Dear readers, it is with hope and great desire to give these people a Church that we are asking you to make us a real liberal donation for the new Church that we have now begun. We will not be able to complete this unless our people come to our rescue. We are assured of God's promise when He said, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel," that He will place it upon your hearts to help in this work. Isaiah said, "How shall they hear without a preacher?" We are asking, "How shall they have preaching and school without a building?" For two years we have held school and Church service in a shed room of the willing Rigney home. Our congregation has outgrown these quarters and now we must build.

M. T. SORRELL, Pastor.

Fancy Gap, Va.

Our Prison Work.

We realize that we are to give all a chance. The prison workers of this section do not have any preaching or religious service at all. I have begun to help them in a very small way by preaching at their camps as often as possible. There is a great need here for prison work. Let us pray that God will send reapers into the field, for the harvest is truly ready; but the reapers and their support are lacking. It will seem impossible for you to realize that there is such a great opportunity and that so much has been accomplished in such a short length of time. Yet, I am sure if you will take your car and drive over here, you will be more thoroughly convinced that we could not afford to put off special efforts for our home field in the mountains of Carroll County, Va.

POND.

Miss Bettie Pond was born August 31, 1861, and died August 30, 1925, aged sixty-four years less one day. In early life Miss Bettie professed faith in Christ and united with Barrett's Christian Church, of which she remained a faithful and devout member until her death called her home. She was sick only a few days before her death. She was removed from her old home near Barrett's Church by kind hands and placed in a hospital in Suffolk, Va., with the hope that she might be spared a few years longer, but God saw fit to call her to her reward. Her body was laid to rest in the old family burying ground near Barrett's Church in the presence of friends and relatives. Funeral services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. J. S. Carden, of Durham, N. C. May God bless the sorrowing ones.

G. C. CRUTCHFIELD.

HAWKINS.

Jesse Lee Hawkins, son of Mr. and Mrs. Billie Hawkins of Hurdle Mills, N. C., was born February 27, 1890, and died August 16, 1925. Jesse had been afflicted all of his life, yet he bore his afflictions well and without complaint.

The funeral was conducted at Walnut Grove M. E. Church by Rev. Mr. Whitley, of Cedar Grove, N. C., and his remains laid to rest in the church cemetery.

The large crowd that attended the funeral and the beautiful floral tribute was an evidence that he was loved by those who knew him. Jesse was kind and good to all the children who knew and loved him. He loved to go to church and was interested in preaching. We do not doubt but that he is taken out of a life of pain and sorrow and is enjoying the "rest that remaineth to the people of God."

May the Lord bless and comfort the bereaved ones and help us all to be true and faithful to Him who doeth all things well.

J. FRANK APPLE.

MADDOX.

A. Clyde Maddox was born October 29, 1906. Died August 6, 1925. He had never enjoyed robust health, but had struggled bravely in preparing for life's larger duties, pursuing successfully his studies in school. Neither did he forget his spiritual interests, having united with the church several years ago, and has since lived a faithful and consistent life. By his gentle, loving disposition he gained many true friends, who join father and mother, brother and sisters, in their sorrow. His body was laid to rest in Grace's Chapel cemetery, to await the coming of the Savior. May the Lord comfort the bereaved.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

By Rev. S. M. Lynam.

A Chinaman's War Here.—

An editor remarked the other day that we were being advised to handle China with gloves, but that China seemed to be handling us with Tongs. This apparently is the case when the On Leongs and Hip Sings seem to be at each others' throats all over the country. New York, Boston, Chicago, and other cities have their police busy striving to get the murderers of Chinamen of both Tongs. An assembly of Chinese notables met in New York in the District Attorney's office and talked peace, only to be followed up by a wholesale murder of members of both Tongs all over the country. Some of the Chinese are being deported, and some are awaiting execution in death cells of American prisons.

An Experiment in Good Will.—

The German press is highly complimentary of Seymour Parker Gilbert, Jr., who a year ago entered upon the difficult task of carrying into effect the Dawes plan. Under his considerate administration, Germany has met her obligations for the first year, the troops have been withdrawn from the Ruhr, the German people's irritation at the domineering attitude of the military victors is subsiding, and business is picking up. Herr Hans Meyer, for two years the able financial advisor to the German government, holds that the Dawes plan is responsible for this goodwill. He believes that if German merchants are given a fair chance to manufacture and to market their goods, that they will be able to meet the enormous contributions provided for in the reparations plans.

Dr. Speer on the Church Paper.—

"I believe with all my heart in the value of the religious press, and lament all the more on that account that we have so few religious papers which are able to maintain themselves, and which approach the Christian ideal.

"I think we ought to put forth every effort today to maintain our religious papers and to lift them to a still higher level of effectiveness and Christian Spirit."

If the people of the Christian Church really could agree with Dr. Speer on this most vital matter there would be no need for the deficit on the church papers which every convention is compelled to meet at each meeting. Could the loyalty of the churches and the church folk be aroused, it would be easy for The Christian Sun to serve, and for the people to serve The Christian Sun.

"And Obey."—

Throughout the Episcopal Church, among officials and the press generally, there is much discussion as to whether wives shall promise to obey their husbands in the wedding ceremony. Bishop Charles L. Slattery, Bishop Coadjutor of Massachusetts, would leave it out all the while. He is chairman of the joint commission which has the revision of the prayer book in hand. Bishop Irving P. Johnson of Colorado thinks differently about the matter. He argues that the household must have a boss, and that that boss must be the husband. He would keep "obey" in the ceremony. The dispute has reached the point where it will go before the Triennial General Assembly of the church next month at New Orleans. In the mean time none of the brides, past, present, or future, seem to be worrying over the promise.

The Spiritualists Meet.—

The International Spiritualist Congress met in Paris recently. They took up several, to them, very important matters. How to greet a ghost was discussed, but no decision could be reached. The very important question as to whether spiritualism is a religion, a philosophy, or a code of morals, could not be settled except for each individual spiritualist as he wished it. The Congress did adopt a flag, however, a white background with a golden sun. They spent considerable time denouncing spiritualist exposers like Harry Houdini. In this little denunciation party Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, of Sherlock Holmes fame, and Mrs. M. D. Cadwallader, of Chicago, had prominent parts. Many marvelous stories were brought to the Congress of Spiritualism, and the French people were not prepared to believe many of them, and the ruder element gave the delegates some trouble from time to time during the assembly.

Immigration on the Decline.—

The National Industries Board has just made public some enlightening figures concerning the immigration to the United States. During the first decade and a half of the century, immigrants came in rapidly increasing numbers. The war caused it to drop off to almost nothing. After the war immigrants reached their former proportion until the check of limiting laws in 1921, and a still greater check in 1924. 294,314 persons came to the United States in 1924-1925, from which must be subtracted 92,728, who returned to their native lands. A number of the countries failed to reach their quota, but the most interesting figures are those which prove that more persons from certain countries returned home than immigrated to this country. Among the countries not losing population through emigration are Greece, Hungary, Italy, Lithuania, Spain, China, and Japan. 130,193 of the immigrants arriving in this country were from Canada and Mexico. These two countries have no quota laws to restrict their coming.

Victor Lawson's Will.—

The newspapers recently have been full of the will of the late Victor F. Lawson, owner and publisher of the Chicago Daily News. In this remarkable will Mr. Lawson takes rank with the constantly increasing number of rich men who give back to society in the form of benevolent trusts the earnings of a life time. His bequest of $1,300,000 and one-fourth of his residuary estate to the Chicago Congregational Society for Missionary and Church Extension was the largest gift ever bestowed on a religious society. Three-fourths of his estate he left to benevolences, and his fellow editors are pointing out that his will is significant of the man. He provided that the Chicago Daily News should be continued as under his personal management, and that about three-fourths of the income from it should be spent on benevolences. His paper is one of the great money makers of the country. John J. Mitchell is executor and trustee of the estate, and will carry out the provisions of the will. Mr. Mitchell is President of the Illinois Merchants' Trust Company.

A Great Frenchman Dies.—

Early in September, Philip Rene Viviani died after a lingering illness. He was born sixty-one years ago in Algeria. His mother intended him for the Church, but his love for debate and oratory led him into the law. Finding Algeria too small for him, he established himself in Paris. At thirty he entered the House of Deputies as a Socialist. Later, in 1904, when the split in the Socialist party occurred, he assisted Alexander Millerand to organize the Republican Socialists. He was prime minister of France at the opening of the war, and was for many years the leader of the lower and middle classes of France. He coined two famous phrases. In the fight with Rome over the renewing of the Concordat, he declared, "We have put out the lights from the skies," meaning that the attention had been turned from the future life to social justice. He coined the second phrase when he appealed for a "Sacred Union," and brought together the factions of France in common cause. Twice he visited this country. Once he came with Marshall Joffre, and once as second French delegate to the Washington Arms Conference. In his going the world loses one of the greatest orators that it has ever known.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Rev. F. C. Lester, pastor of the Franklin Christian Church, Franklin, Va., was a welcome visitor to the office of THE SUN this week.

Mr. Otis S. Smith of the firm of Ballard and Smith, Suffolk, Va., gave the SUN office a call this week. We are always glad to have our friends call.

Rev. J. E. McCauley left last week to enter the theological department of Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tenn., to pursue work leading to the B. D. degree.

Rev. L. L. Wyrick, who is pastor of our church at Danville, Va., will be open for pastoral work the next year, two Sundays in the month—the first and third. His address is Route 2, Danville, Va.

We are requested by the Secretary, Rev. W. C. Martin, to announce that the Western North Carolina Conference will meet in annual session at New Center Church, near Seagrove, N. C., on November 10th.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN loses a good and loyal friend and the Christian Church one of its most worthy and efficient laymen in the death of our dear brother, Dr. J. M. Welch, Wadley, Ala. His pastor, Rev. E. M. Carter, writes of his life and departure in our obituary columns. The widow and sons have our sympathy in their sorrow.

THE SUN'S editor had the privilege, in company with Dr. W. A. Harper, of being at our new church at Glendon, N. C., Sunday, September 20th. Rev. J. C. Cummings is the worthy and very much beloved pastor, and is doing excellent work. The new church house is well built, ample and attractive. It is a source of pride and joy to the entire community.

A copy of Rural America, published at College Hall, Merom, Indiana, indicates that Union Christian College, Merom, Ind., is now no longer under control of the Christian Church, but is by no means vacant or idle. The college seems to be an agricultural institution now and conducted by the community and in behalf of the agricultural interests of the community.

Brother R. H. Coble of Hopedale Christian Church writes as follows: "On Saturday night, August 22, 1925, Hopedale Christian Church met in quarterly conference. After transacting a good deal of business, the Church called Rev. J. F. Apple again as pastor. We will have two meetings a month. May the Lord bless our beloved pastor that he may bring to us the rich message of God for many years yet."

Rev. W. J. Edwards writes, "Brown's Chapel meeting closed with great success. Several aged people were converted, and the Church was considerably revived. The meeting at New Center will begin the fourth Sunday (in September). Mr. Alfred will be with me and we are hoping for a great meeting. As I am leaving this work, I will be ready to serve elsewhere next year. Any church in need of a pastor for the next year, will please write me at Steeds, N. C., Route 1."

The women of our Alabama Conference are this year to hold their first Missionary Conference separate and apart from the general annual conference. Mrs. E. M. Carter is president, and the all day session is to be held at Wadley, Ala., on October 17th. There should be a large attendance of the women from all over the conference. A very interesting program is presented elsewhere in this week's SUN.

The following is taken from a recent issue of Every Evening. Dr. Helfenstein is worthy of much praise for the work he has done in the cause: "At the regular monthly meeting of the official board of People's Christian Church, held last evening, it was decided to celebrate the fifth anniversary of the pastorate of Dr. R. C. Helfenstein, the pastor. During the five years of Dr. Helfenstein's ministry in People's Christian Church, it has enjoyed one of the most successful periods in its history. With a church building and equipment valued at $25,000 when Dr. Helfenstein assumed charge, it today has a church edifice and Sunday School and community center, together with recently acquired property adjoining the church on the north and south, valued at $250,000. The new Sunday School and community building is the first of its kind in Delaware and is especially adapted for departmental Sunday School work now being adopted by all denominations. Dr. Helfenstein, in addition to his church activities, has also proven himself a factor in the community life of Dover, and is one of the active members of Dover's Rotary Club, which he helped to institute here. He is chairman of the educational committee of the club."

There must be something wrong when big men have to form themselves into a Union for the purpose of getting a square deal in the amenities of life. By "big men" we mean those men whose physical latitude and longitude are above the average, not the men whose names are linked with "big business" or great achievement.

What are they kicking about? Simply this: Hotel beds are too small, chairs are too short in the legs, and doorways and other openings are so constructed that they are apt to knock their heads on the transom.

There is a popular delusion that a six-foot man can sleep comfortably in a six-foot bed. The fact is that, geometrically speaking, he has to convert himself into the diagonal of an oblong area before he can sleep at all. Otherwise his feet would be projecting several inches beyond the foot of the bed.

Does this persistent catering to the wants of smaller men suggest that the race is physically deteriorating? Probably not, although some think it is. The fact that tall men are becoming vocal in clubs and unions may indicate just the opposite, that the physical proportions of the race are increasing. Certainly the conditions of life make for a larger physique today.—Exchange.

C. E. UNION CONVENTION.

The First Christian Endeavor Union Convention of the Churches of the Eastern North Carolina Conference, was held at the Raleigh Christian Church, on Sunday August 15, 1925, at 2:00 P. M. The meeting was opened by the hymn, "If Jesus Goes With Me," followed by a prayer by Stanley A. Garriss. After the song, "There is a New Day Dawning," Galen Elliott, president of the union, made an address. Following this was the registration of delegates. The following societies were represented: Raleigh, Oak Level, Fuquay Springs, Chapel Hill and Sanford.

At this convention the Eastern North Carolina Conference was divided into several districts, and each Christian Endeavor Society represented, agreed to take the responsibility of organizing new societies in their respective districts. It was further decided to have the Christian Endeavor Union Conventions quarterly, the regular Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention taking the place of one meeting. The next convention will be held at Chapel Hill, on November 14, 15, 1925.

After an expression of appreciation to the Raleigh Society for their entertainment, the union adjourned.

The purpose of the Christian Endeavor Union is to establish a closer communication between the Christian Endeavor Societies of the Christian Church in Eastern North Carolina, in order that Christian Endeavor may be made 100 per cent throughout that conference.

GALEN ELLIOTT,
President, C. E. Union.

REV. E. T. COTTEN LEAVES OSHAWA.

The congregation at the Christian church service Sunday night was pleased with the vocal duet rendered by the pastor and his wife and with his masterful sermon, but listened with regret to the resignation of Rev. E. T. Cotten, who has accepted a call to the Christian Church of Franklin, Ohio. Mr. Cotton expressed appreciation of the fine spirit of harmony and co-operation in the church and the splendid spirit manifested by the people of the city toward them. "It is with regret," he says, "that we feel it necessary, because of our little daughter's health to leave this city of such wonderful possibilities and fine promise of great future growth."

While in Oshawa he has given himself to many phases of the cities' activities along with his own church work, and is now President of the Ministerial Association. During his four years' pastorate the Christian church has been improved in appearance and in its opportunity for service and worship by the installation of a fine pipe organ; the membership has been almost doubled; and the finest spirit of optimism is felt by the members.

Mrs. E. T. Cotten, who received her musical training at the Cincinnati College of Music, and was teacher of piano and voice at Starkey Seminary, New York, 1915-17, has rendered a very helpful service to the church and delighted many at public meetings and services of the various churches of the city.

The farewell sermon will be preached the last Sunday in September and Mr. and Mrs. Cotten, and little daughter, Margaret, will leave for Franklin, Ohio, U. S. A., where he becomes pastor October 1st.—Oshawa Telegram.

NOTICE.

Delegates and visitors who will attend the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference, which meets at Franklin, Va., October 27, 1925, are requested to notify the pastor, Rev. F. C. Lester, at their earliest convenience, that entertainment may be suitably arranged.

THE EASTERN VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.

Place of next session: Franklin, Va.
Time of meeting: October 27, 1925.

The program is about completed. Two or three more chairmen of committees are to be yet heard from as to subjects and speakers.

If there is anyone who wishes to be heard at the conference on any special matter, or if there is anyone who has suggestions as to things to be emphasized, let him notify the chairman of the program committee.

The committee has allotted more time than usual to the subject of Stewardship. On the first night of the conference there will be a pagent on Stewardship, given by the young people of the First Church, Norfolk, Va. This will be followed by an address on the subject by Dr. W. H. Denison, of Dayton, Ohio.

On the morning of the second day, there will be given one hour and twenty minutes more to the discussion of Stewardship.

The committee feels that the churches may profit by this discussion and study by sending their strongest representatives to the conference, which representatives may help in creating a deeper interest in the subject of Stewardship in the churches during Stewardship months—November and December.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE BIBLE AND LIFE.

Only that part of the Bible is helpful to one which one makes vital in one's life. The Bible is worth no more than any other book, save in the method and manner of its influence over, and control of, human life and destiny. One may know the entire book from Genesis to Revelation, and then be as little influenced or helped by it as one would be by knowing the almanac or the dictionary, from beginning to end. "Devils also believe and tremble"; but the Book avails them nothing. It is not the amount of Bible lore with which one is familiar, but the amount of the plain teachings of the Word which enters into the life and conduct of the reader, or the hearer, that counts.

Nor does the fact, that one may quote by rote or from memory many passages glibly, even indicate that one is a real Bible student or really believes in the Word. Some of the greatest skeptics of the age, as well as some of the most patent scoundrels, can quote scripture and argue with great versatility their poisonous views and beliefs. It is not the amount of scripture one may quote. It is the spirit of the teachings of the Word of God which one lives that tells on one for time and eternity.

This leads one to the thought, and emphasizes in one's heart the fact, that the Word of God can no more be overthrown than human life itself. From beginning to end of the scriptures, there flows a resistless tide of life and truth and love. "Search the scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me."—John 5: 39. It is, therefore, not controvertible or superficial facts which one should search for in the scriptures, but for life eternal—the richer and the more abundant life.

More than this may be said. The scriptures can no more be overthrown nor destroyed than the very fact and life of God Himself can be overthrown and destroyed. This for the reason that our Bible, differing from all other books, sets forth in explicit terms God's life and love in His dealings with men. Our Bible places God at the beginning, and through the whole Book we find Him dealing with men and women, revealing Himself, opening up His very heart and life to them. Of course, the grand climax of this process is reached when "The Word became flesh and dwelt amongst men." The Book tells the story of the dwelling on earth and the deeds among men of the Incarnate Son of God. The Old Testament, like the New, was throughout seeking to lay bare to all who would read and give heed the revelation of God Himself, to men and women in every condition of life and in every attitude of mind and thought and conduct. We have a revelation of God as He deals with the wicked and lost men and women as well as with the righteous and the faithful. The Koran of Mahomet, it has been pointed out, reveals man as he dares to speak to his God. Our Bible, on the other hand, reveals God as He graciously and lovingly speaks to man. It is God's dealings with faithful Abraham and the faithless Saul, and the Shepherd David, and the Prophet Isaiah, and the irresolute Jonah, and the impetuous Peter, and the loving John, and the energetic Paul, that interests the reader and reveals to one how God has dealt with men; and since in Him is no variableness nor turning, we know how He may be counted upon to deal with us. One does not have to argue the inspiration of the scripture any more than one has to argue the validity of love or the veritableness of truth. One who will read and give heed to its teachings, knows that the Word of God is an inspired book and invariably inspires the life of one who reads it thus.

All the other books that were ever written and printed are as nothing compared with this one, when it comes to measuring its weight and worth in influencing the lives and shaping the destinies of men and the nations. "I know that the Word of God is inspired because it inspires me." And that fact can no more be destroyed nor confused nor overthrown than can life itself.

THE MISSION BOARD MEETS.

The Mission Board of the Southern Convention was in all day session in Suffolk, Wednesday, September 23d. All members of the Board were present as follows: Lieut.-Governor J. E. West, Chairman; J. M. Darden, W. W. Staley, D. D., K. B. Johnson, Rev. H. W. Elder, C. H. Rowland, D. D., J. A. Williams, G. O. Lankford, D. D., Mrs. J. A. Williams, and Mrs. W. A. Harper.

A very busy day was spent discussing ways and means of conducting our missionary work and endeavoring to lay plans for the future. The Secretary's report showed that he had collected during the year, directly through his office, and paid to the Treasurer of the Convention on Home and Foreign Missions Accounts, $9,380.60; that there had been collected and paid to Chas. D. Johnston, Exec. Secretary of Men and Millions, $22,827.32, which work of collecting was turned over to the Mission Board some two years ago, but which was to be distributed by Brother Johnston to the various departments of our church work. The Secretary's report showed that there had been collected and paid to the Treasurer of the Convention from the Conferences and from the Woman's Boards for Home and Foreign Missions, $14,494.36.

During the year places helped in our Home Mission endeavor, were: Richmond, Va.; Elm Avenue, Portsmouth, Va.; Winchester, Va.; Franklinton, N. C.; First Church, Portsmouth, Va.; Newport News, Va.; The work in North Alabama; Roanoke, Ala.; Palm Street, Greensboro, N. C.; Raleigh, N. C.; South Norfolk, Va.; Richland, Ga., and the mountain work in Carroll County, Va.

Reports coming to the Board from these points were hopeful and gave signs of progress and development. During the year, Rev. H. W. Elder, Richland, Ga., with some assistance from the Board, had built and dedicated an ample brick church in his town; and South Norfolk is in the midst of its building program and is to have a very adequate and ample house of worship. The Foreign Mission work is assisted through the General Offices at Dayton, which of course went to Porto Rica and Japan. It so happened the past year that more was paid out for Foreign Missions than for Home Missions by the Board.

Although the time of Men and Millions is not out, so far as financial payments are concerned, the five year period expired with last April, and the Board has gone far enough to find that the raising of an Emergency Fund of $25,000 for Missions during the coming year is imperative. It was left to the Executive Committee of the Board, working with the Executive Committee of the Convention, to work out the details of laying before our people the need of this emergency and securing the same within a year to keep from hindering or crippling Mission work already begun. It is doubtful if during the year any Board of the Church meets, whose work is of greater moment to the whole Church than that of our Mission Board, and certainly the Convention has, in the personnel of this Board, men and women whose hearts are in the Mission work and whose devotions to the Church and all its enterprises is unquestioned and whose wisdom and ability for the task before them have shown themselves to be thorough and competent. It is hampered in its great desire and aspiration for the Church for the lack of sufficient funds, and if our people could be stirred with Missionary zeal and could catch a true missionary vision, there would be adequate resources with help to all and hurt to none for the carrying forward of our missionary work at home and abroad. The regret of the Board always is the many applications, worthy and deserving, that have to be turned down solely from lack of funds. There were appeals from points that should be helped, which appeals could not be satisfied, more to the regret of the members of the Board than even to those making the appeals.

When it is revealed, by comparison, what we are doing for Missions now so far exceeds that which we were doing ten years ago, the Board is inclined to take hope and with courage to press forward in the work committed to its hands by the Convention. J. O. A.

MISSIONARY EDUCATION.

Missions is but another name for the Church engaged in Christian activity. Social service is a word of more recent coinage, and in the minds of many includes also the thought of missions as well as the thought of stewardship in its relationship to others. There is no doubt that the Christian life which does not appropriately express itself in service and in giving intelligently for the support of the Kingdom will atrophy. The true Christian life is one of expression and of growth in expression.

However, we must sadly confess that the present apathy in respect to missions and the missionary program of the Church is a rebuke to the educational agencies of the Kingdom, whose solemn duty and privilege it is to educate the Church, and particularly the youth of the Church in the program and purposes of missions.

There are three particular weaknesses in the present missionary education program:

The first of these arises out of the fact that we have felt it necessary to organize special missionary groups. The consequence is that missions must compete with the Sunday School, with Christian Endeavor, with training classes, even with the Church, itself, for its place of service in the Kingdom's program. Since missions is the central and fundamental thing in the Christian life on its expressional side, this is a most unfortunate situation.

The second weakness is that Missionary Education is unrelated to the regular curriculum of Christian Education. The Sunday School at this particular time is studying the work of Paul as a missionary. Missionary instruction should be related to the work of Paul, but there is no correlation whatever between the Mission Study Books and the curriculum in our Sunday Schools. Herein again we find a most regrettable situation.

The third weakness is the fact that the material for missionary instruction is un-graded. There is a tendency to have books for young people and books for adults, but we need a graded material adapted to the ages of all who are touched by the educational program of the Sunday School, beginning with the Kindergarten Department and reaching through to the Adult Division.

We must re-organize the curriculum of Missionary Education and our method of approach to the missionary problem in such a way that the whole Church shall be included in the scope of the work atempted and made to function for its advancement. W. A. H.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE MEETING.

President L. E. Smith, of the Southern Convention, and Chairman of its Executive Committee, called a meeting of his committee at Suffolk, Va., Tuesday evening, September 22d, and also invited to the meeting executives and heads of departments of the Convention work. There were present at the meeting: Dr. Smith, Dr. I. W. Johnson, Dr. W. W. Staley, Dr. W. A. Harper, Col. J. E. West, Supt. C. D. Johnston, Prof. P. J. Kernodle, Dr. N. G. Uewman, Rev. J. H. Lightbourne, Mrs. J. A. Williams, and J. O. Atkinson.

Dr. Smith stated as the object of the meeting that there was a desire to check up on the resolutions and decisions of the last session of the Convention to find out what departments had done in carrying out the vote of the Convention and to get suggestions and help for the next session of the Convention. It was a worth-while meeting. It was revealed in every instance that those charged by the last session of the Convention with carrying on the work of the various departments, were proceeding on the basis of enactments by the Convention and were working together for the good of the whole church and the growth of the Convention. All the departments reported progress since the last session of the Convention.

One important decision was reached, and that was that a Commission should be appointed, charged with the duty of working out the whole plan of finance for the Convention and submit its findings and recommendations to the next session. President Smith is to appoint and announce this commission at an early date. There are earnest men and women in the Christian Church who willingly give of their time and the best judgment they have to promoting in the world the cause of the Kingdom as represented through our Christian Church.

THE UNITED STATES IN PROPHECY.

HENRY C. SCOTFORD, D. D.,

In Patriotic Pamphelet.

There have often recurred to the thoughtful reader of the Bible and Biblical literature, the questions:

Has the United States any place in Biblical Prophecy? Would such a nation escape the eye of prophetic inspiration? Would a nation that has such a commanding position in governmental, educational, industrial and Christian affairs in the world be missing in the pages of prophecy?

Beginning with the twelfth chapter of the Book of Revelation, we find figures of speech that certainly mean events that would come to pass after the Patmos visions.

"A great sign (or portent) was seen in heaven (ecclesiastic affairs): a woman arrayed with the Sun and the Moon under her feet." In Revelation "a woman" undoubtedly means the Church, the bride of Christ. In this case it was the true Church, enlightened by the principles and power of God's Word and Spirit, shining out in the evangelizing of the world to Christ and reflecting the truth out into the world of human beings to be saved, as the moon reflects the glory of the sun. "Upon her head a crown of twelve stars" was seen, indicating a complete relationship of royalty to the Kingly head of the Church, viz.: Christ our Lord.

The meaning of the sign deepens, as the woman was ready to give birth to a child. Here let us contrast this woman with the one mentioned in Revelation 17:1. This latter still represents an ecclesiastic church body, but is the apostate church, cast off and disowned by the groom, and yet seeking to keep His name. This is revealed by the judgments pronounced against it. The scarlet-colored beast and the harlot make up the Roman Church, when it came under the power of papacy and was corrupted by the union of Church and State. Read the medieval history of Rome and then listen to the judgments pronounced against the harlot church on the seven hills. The scarlet-colored beast, born of evil things called the abyss, was to go into perdition (Rev. 17:8) and then in Rev. 19:2 God's severe judgments against the apostate church are thus given:

"For true and righteous are His Judgments: for He hath judged the great harlot; her that corrupted the earth (the common people) with her fornication, and He hath avenged the blood of His servants at her hand."

In opposition to this, we find growing at the same time the true church of the twelfth chapter of Revelation, the woman "arrayed with the sun" and crowned as queen, the true universal church, protesting against the corruptions of the harlot, apostate body. From the enlightened Protestant church was to be born a child.

One peculiarity in the development of our democracy is in the fact that it began in a small way. The "woman fled into the wilderness where she hath a place prepared of God, that there may nourish her a thousand two hundred and three score days." If ever such a place was prepared of God for such a mighty work, this beautiful land was such a place. There so fled the Pilgrim Fathers from Scrooby, England, to Leyden, Holland, back to Plymouth, England, and thence to the wilderness of America, the "place prepared of God," where they were nourished and were able to lay foundations for a mighty Christian Empire.

The compact in the cabin of the Mayflower, in which the Pilgrim Fathers, by the will of God, established a constitution and a code of laws, by which they were to regulate their own civil and religious actions, became the first free government that stood the test of time and also became the model of all the colonies in later years. The Plymouth Colony elected their own governors and officers, while the other colonies were governed by officers sent for that purpose by the mother countries. An effort was made to place a governor over the Plymouth Colony by the English crown, but the people stood by their compact and resisted the attempt.

Later the Dutch Colony in Manhattan and the English Colony in Virginia took knowledge of the free government in Massachusetts and rejected the domination of their ancestral governments. While they were nominally Dutch or English Colonies, they still paid into their mother countries taxes as far as they were able, but selected the amounts themselves. It was because the English Colonies objected to oppressive taxation without representation in Parliament, that the Revolutionary War came on. This, together with the Roman effort to plant colonies and to destroy the Protestant settlements revealed the evident intent of the dragon governments in Europe to get possession of the reins of power.

After the independence of the United States was secured, the Roman Catholic element in the old country continued the measures, adopted by the Roman Hierarchy, to get possession of this country's government. Without doubt the Roman Catholic elements of Europe have been incited to flood our land with those who are not in sympathy with our free institutions, but are desirous of using our liberties for the selfish ambitions of the Hierarchy at Rome, seeking to gain power by which they could enthrall the masses of our country, by means of ignorance and superstition. This at least is revealed by the prophetic visions of Revelation.

The revelator saw the great red dragon warring against Michael and his angels, "and there was war in heaven." The forces of truth and righteousness, in harmony with the heavenly host, led on by the Captain of our salvation, contended against the Devil and his minions, the Roman pontiff and his coadjutors. The Protestant forces prevailed against the apostate elements. The result was the great Reformation, in which such men as Luther, Zwingii, Melancthon, on the continent of Europe, and Wicliff, Tindale and Knox of Great Britain, and many martyrs at the stake of those times of great contest, which were followed later by the Wesleys, Whitfield and the forces of Pilgrims and Puritans in England. The triumph of Protestantism is thus clearly revealed.

In these days of machinery, human life may depend upon the slightest precaution. It will no doubt seem paradoxical in these prohibition days that an instrument with such a reputation as a still could be the means of saving anybody. Yet it is perfectly true that the commander of the PN-9 and his comrades were saved by the advice of his mother who urged him to take a small still with him. When the water supply gave out and the entire crew would have perished through thirst, the little still was brought into requisition, the sea water turned into fresh, and the lives of the crew were saved.

Goodyear discovered the process of the vulcanization of rubber. For years his family is said to have existed on the charity of neighbors. Although he lived to have his patent recognized as basic, yet he died a poor man, more from choice than from necessity. He was always indifferent toward money.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Rev. Benjamin Franklin Black was born at Keezletown, Rockingham County, Virginia, January 24, 1871, and died, suddenly, at his home in Phoebus, Virginia, Saturday morning at half past seven o'clock, September 19, 1925, at the age of 54 years, 7 months, and 25 days.

He was married first to Miss Belle Sinclair Thompson of Suffolk, Virginia, October 8, 1901. She was the mother of two children; one died in infancy; the other, Miss Judith, is now in her Junior year in Elon College, N. C. Mrs Black passed away April 17, 1912, and was buried in Cedar Hill cemetery, Suffolk, Va.

He was married a second time to Miss Allie Swisher, of Clifton Forge, Virginia, on April 22, 1913. She is the mother of two little girls, Virginia Dare and Ruth. These, with their mother, survive, and God's promise to them is: "A father to the fatherless, and a judge of the widows, is God in his holy habitation."—Psa. 68: 5.

He was educated at Elon College, North Carolina, from which institution he received his Bachelor's and Master's degrees. He preached during his college years and has been in the ministry about thirty years. He has served many churches at many periods, as Secretary of Y. M. C. A., in Suffolk, Virginia, Memphis, Tennessee, and Clifton Forge, Virginia.

He was a Base Chaplain overseas for more than nine months during the World War. This endeared him to soldiers and no doubt led him some five months ago to settle with Phoebus Presbyterian Church, where he rendered his last service the Sunday before his death.

While a student at Elon College, he began the creation of a Museum for the college, and he possessed fine capacity for such work. His effort prospered and was a valuable asset to the college until the great fire of January 18, 1923, completely destroyed the Administration Building in which the Museum was located. He continued his interest in this special work, and had in mind the erecting and equipping of an adequate building for that purpose. He had already enlisted the interest of State and National Government authorities, and the promise of assistance in this project so dear to his heart.

He was a natural orator, and could hold an audience spell-bound when in his prime and stirred by some great theme. He was never happier than when he faced a great congregation with a great message from the Word of God.

In March, 1924, he had a severe attack of angina pectoris, from which he never fully recovered. He has been in a feeble state of health since that time; but, recently, was thought to be in better condition. His death, therefore, was all the more stunning to his loved ones and his many friends.

To sum up a few of the manly qualities of this dear man of God can give only a poor picture of his real life:

1. He possessed an attractive and genial personality; good will radiated from his whole being.

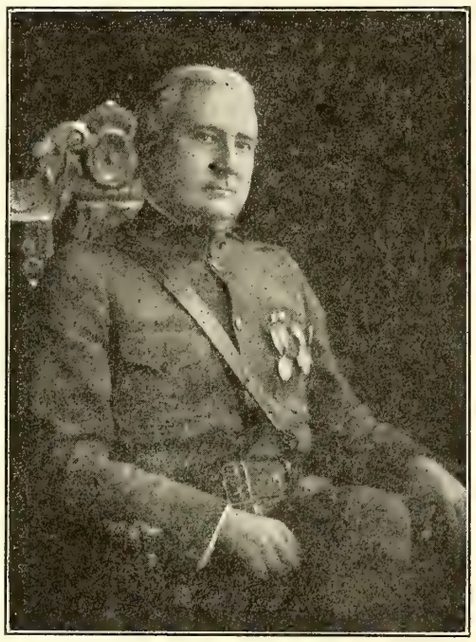
2. He possessed a liberal spirit both in his judgment and his service. His heart and his hands were wide open.

3. He was manly in his relations, Christian in his sympathies, benevolent to the extent of his ability.

4. He was devoted to his family and friends, tolerant in his judgments, and hopeful in his disposition.

5. A good man has fallen; a brave and true citizen, friend, and Christian, has gone to his reward.

The funeral service in the Suffolk Christian Church, Monday afternoon, September 21st, was largely attended by ministers, soldiers, Masons, people from many churches he had served, and the altar and casket were banked with flowers.



REV. BENJAMIN FRANKLIN BLACK.

The Quartet sang, "Well Done," "Home of the Soul," and "Kissed by the Angel of Peace."

His remains were laid to rest by his wife in Cedar Hill Cemetery, with Masonic and military honors, in addition to the church services, and the dear ones went to their home with sweetest memories of the past, and bright hope of reunion in that "house not made with hands."

W. W. STALEY.

ELON LETTER.

Rev. B. F. Black came to Elon in the early days when it was necessary for the students to lend a helping hand in many ways. He selected as a method by which he would help his Alma Mater the creation of a museum. While he preached the Gospel on Sundays to earn his way through College, he, also, during the week days used his spare hours to collect specimens for his beloved Museum, to mount birds and animals, and to preserve specimens of reptiles and beetles. He was very successful in securing donations from the Government departments and from individuals. His Museum was very valuable in teaching Biology, Botany, Anthropology, and Geology. In the fire of January 18, 1923, the Black Museum was destroyed, but he had not ceased to labor for its restoration, and had promises from State and National Government authorities for liberal assistance. He was also in correspondence with persons in foreign countries who were able to send him rare specimens.

His interest in the Museum was but an evidence of his fine generosity of spirit which appeared in his association with his fellows and in his life-work everywhere, whether he was engaged in the ministry, Y. M. C. A. Secretaryship, or the Chaplaincy in the United States Army. He was everywhere the soul of generosity and liberal heartedness.

He was, perhaps, the greatest orator that Elon College has ever produced. He made a great reputation for his Alma Mater, when as a College student he attended a Y. M. C. A. meeting for the various Colleges in this State held in Durham, North Carolina, at which is now Duke University. In a discussion his feelings were deeply moved and he swayed that group of College men by his eloquence completely to his way of thinking. It was certainly always to his credit that his powers of eloquence were expended in Christian directions, and he had the happy insight always to sense the Christian side of any proposition.

While I remember him from the year 1894, when I entered Elon College as a student myself, I particularly remember his insistence that he be allowed to enter the Chaplaincy of his country in the recent world war. Government official after Government official told him "No," that he was too far advanced in years to undertake the strenuous activity of a Chaplain. I quite well remember the words spoken to him by Secretary of War, Newton D. Baker, when I appeared with him in that official's office in Washington. "Brother Black," said the Secretary of War, "you look like Jupiter, but my judgment does not warrant me in approving you for appointment. You have all the qualifications for an excellent Chaplain except that of being beyond the age limit."

We did not give up the quest, and finally appeared before the Chief of the Army Chaplains. We were there discouraged as in other places, but Colonel Axton promised that he would endeavor to find an appointment for Brother Black, after Brother Black had told him in response to his statement that to enter the Chaplaincy would likewise cost him his life, that he had but one life and he was willing to give that to his country. It was not long before the post was found, and Rev. B. F. Black donned the uniform of his country and became Chaplain Black, serving in France until the end of the war.

I cannot but feel that the hardship of the Chaplain's life undermined his health and that in a very real sense he is a casualty of the war.

A great good man has fallen on sleep, and life is poorer by his taking away. His memory will last while the human heart appreciates a man who is willing to sacrifice for a cause he loves.

W. A. HARPER.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

What about your Children's Day Offerings? The Southern Christian Convention requested every Sunday School within its bounds to hold a Children's Day service, preferably the second Sunday in June, and send the offering to the Board of Religious Education. A number of schools have complied with this request and sent in their offerings. If we are to keep Miss Pattie Coghill in the field and maintain our work, we shall need $500.00 more from the Sunday Schools this year. If your Sunday School has held its Children's Day and the offering has not been sent in, will you please see that it is forwarded at once. If you have not had a Children's Day or the offering has not been taken, will you please have your school take a special offering for this work and forward it immediately?

Chairman Board of Religious Education.

FROM WAKEFIELD CHARGE.

We have had several things of interest in our field this summer. Among those things have been our revival meetings.

The first of these meetings was at Barretts, which began the fourth Sunday in August. Rev. J. S. Carden of Durham, N. C., was with us and did the preaching. His first message got hold of the people, and throughout the meeting there was growth both in interest and numbers. His message was simple and plain, Scriptural and soul-stirring. We had the co-operation of the entire community. The music was exceedingly good; this old Church is noted for good singing. So far as visible results, there were only two conversions and one addition to the church, but many were led to reconsecrate their lives anew for service. The church was greatly revived and strengthened. It was the wish of the church, as an appreciation of Brother Carden's fine preaching, that he come again another year.

The fifth Sunday was a great day which will not soon be forgotten among the people of this charge. The four churches met at 10 o'clock for a union Sunday School, which was conducted by Brother Atkinson, of Dendron, Va., which he did with great credit to himself and to the school. Following the Sunday School hour, we were favored with some fine recitations and at eleven thirty by an address by Dr. W. W. Staley. I wish I had the space to give you his address. I think it was one of the best I ever heard him make. Following this address was a short business session, then dinner, which proved to be a feast. The good people certainly did spread a dinner. Then for more than an hour, everyone enjoyed a social time together, shaking hands and renewing past days and old friendships. At 2:30, the crowd re-assembled for the afternoon session, and, as Miss Pattie Coghill who was slated for an address was unable to be present on account of sickness, the time was filled by the pastor. The day was a success in every way, and everyone enjoyed it.

Sunday night, August 30th, the revival meeting began at Ivor. Brother Carden also did the preaching there. Much interest was manifested throughout the meeting. Brother Carden made a fine impression on the people, not only of our church, but of the entire community. May God ever bless him in his work. As to the results here, we had one conversion and one addition to the church. The church was greatly revived and strengthened by the meeting. Ivor is not a strong church in membership, but nowhere will one find a more loyal and devoted membership than there.

Sunday, September 13th, the revival began at Burton's Grove. Brother Garmon did the preaching there. His message was Scriptural throughout, delivered in a most earnest way, and was received by a waiting congregation. While there were no visible results, the church was greatly strengthened.

There is very little material within the reach of these churches, but we feel in our hearts that God was honored in a great way, nevertheless, and His Kingdom was made stronger. May God bless these fine and big hearted folks, and enable the pastor to render the very best service possible.

G. C. Crutchfield.

REVIVAL MEETINGS.

I am a little late in reporting my revival meetings, but I will give you just a short report of my work.

My first meeting was at New Hope, begining the fourth Sunday in July and lasting for one week. We had a good meeting, with Rev. Jesse Dollar assisting. Our people enjoyed having Bro. Dollar and his good wife with us. We feel a great interest in them and their work. Our church was greatly revived and three members were received by letter.

My next meeting was held at Beulah Christian Church, where I did most of the preaching. Rev. W. T. Meacham came and preached a few times and Rev. C. W. Carter preached the last sermon of the meeting. The meeting was fine, music good, and attendance excellent. Great work was done, three members being received into fellowship and the interest much revived. Our conference meets with this church this year, and we are expecting a great meeting.

The week following the second Sunday in August was spent in the Bethlehem School of Methods. I must say it was the greatest pleasure of my life to be present by the permission of Antioch Church. God bless them. Any church will suffer loss, that refuses to give its pastor the privilege of such training.

On Friday night before the third Sunday in August, we began a union tent meeting at Mt. Olive M. E. Church, South, Rev. John McCenatha, pastor. Antioch and Mt. Olive united in this great meeting. Rev. S. A. Owen, of the M. E. Church and myself did the preaching. Great crowds attended and many souls were blessed. Forty people united with the two churches. It was indeed a great revival.

Our little church at Roanoke had already, with the other churches of the town, been in a union meeting.

Now we are moving toward conference time. Last Sunday was the best day in the whole history of Antioch Church. We had our annual missionary sermon at 11 o'clock A. M. The congregation was called upon for a free-will offering, and raised about $126.00. Everybody was full of joy. At the noon hour we enjoyed a bountiful repast under the shade of the trees.

At 2:30 the church met for communion service, and then in church conference, where the church in harmony transacted the business in a real brotherly way.

The present pastor was unanimously elected for another year. Bro. Elmo Higgins was elected secretary, and Bro. J. J. Baired, treasurer. Bro. M. . Hamlin and his wife were elected as chorister and organist respectively. We then sang, "Praise God from Whom All Blessings Flow," and retired peacefully to our homes, feeling good. And I feel good yet.

More later. God bless our dear Church.

G. D. Hunt.

Wadley, Ala.

ROANOKE, ALA.

I have held meetings at the following places this summer:

Bethany, beginning the second Sunday in July. Here we were assisted by Rev. S. D. Lankford. We had a good meeting. The church was revived but there were no additions to the church.

Our meeting began at Shady Grove on the third Sunday in July. Here we had no ministerial help. Brother D. W. Sheppard sang for us and rendered very valuable services in song. We had a good revival, but with only three additions to the church. Have received five since the July meeting.

The meeting at Rock Stand began the fourth Sunday in July, and continued through the following Saturday. Here we had a good meeting, with nine additions to the church. Rev. H. M. Gray did the preaching in this meeting, and did it well.

The meeting at Noonday had its beginning on Saturday before the first Sunday in August. The church here was ready for a meeting and had a mind to work. We held two prayer meetings each day. The women and girls held their meeting in the church building at 4:30 o'clock, and the men held theirs at the same hour in the W. O. W. hall. Great good was accomplished through these prayer meetings. Rev. H. M. Gray came to us on Monday night and did the preaching the remainder of the week, and did real gospel preaching. My brother, Sam Dollar, did the singing. As a result of this meeting, the church was greatly revived and twenty-eight members were added to the roll. We have received five since, making a total of thirty-three new members this year.

At New Harmony, our meeting began on the third Sunday in August. My brother, Rev. J. H. Dollar, did most of the preaching. Bro. H. L. Bradford did the singing. The church was greatly revived and twenty-seven members were received for baptism; five for Shady Grove, one for Cragford Church, three for the local Baptist Church, and eighteen for New Harmony.

We held our meeting at Lowell the first of June. Three members were added to the roll at that time and fifteen have been received since, making a total of eighteen this year. The church is in much better working condition and very much encouraged.

May the Lord be praised for all that has been done. Brethren pray for us, that we may keep humble and stay busy.

Yours in Christ,

J. D. Dollar.

BEREA, NORFOLK.

Sunday, September 20th, was Home Coming Day at Berea Christian Church, Norfolk County, Va.

For six years we have been celebrating such days in our church, and we have always enjoyed the coming together of our people on such occasions. Usually there are quite a number present that otherwise never do appear. Such coming together of distant and former members, so gladdens our hearts that we are impressed to do greater things in God's service.

We sometimes meet friends or relatives that we have not seen for several years. Last Sunday I met a lady that I had not seen for twenty-five or thirty years—a widow of a very highly esteemed cousin of mine. I also met others, members of our church whom I had not had the pleasure of meeting for ten years.

On this glad day, our new pastor, Rev. J. F. Morgan, held the fort for us, by giving us two of his good and very appropriate sermons relative to the occasion. According to former plans, our series of revival meetings began Monday evening and continued through the week. Bro. Morgan did most of the preaching, and did it in his usual appealing, persuasive and inspiring way. Rev. O. D. Poythress came on Thursday evening and gave us one of his wide awake sermons for which he is famous.

We had several professions of faith, but not as much visible good work as we desired, yet we feel that good things were accomplished, for we can never tell, until it has come to pass, what will be the gatherings of the bread cast upon the waters.

Because of Rev. Morgan's acceptance of the call to our church, as pastor, there is an impressive sentimental tone of good cheer, hopefulness, determination and zeal prevailing within our church borders. We trust that better results than ever before may come to pass by us as the chosen of God in His service.

M. W. Hollowell.

MISSIONS

Rev. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

STEWARDSHIP AND PROMOTION.

Warren H. Dennison, Secretary

The weather was hot and it was dry, but the Hardwood, Southern Ohio Conference, people were in earnest and we had a splendid Stewardship institute September 8th and 9th. Attendance and interest were fine.

Our Leaders Speak Out.

Rev. J. E. Kauffman, D. D. Piqua, Ohio, gives five results from the Annual Every Member Canvass:

1. It brings to the attention of the members their financial Stewardship obligations, to their church and to God.
2. It helps to create a greater interest in the propects of the church.
3. More money is secured for the work of the church.
4. Every member is led to feel a personal responsibility for the activities of the church.
5. It developes a wider vision in each member in relationship to the world-wide work of the church.

Financial Secretary.

Question—Our church is not a large church, but we would like to know the duties of a Financial Secretary?

Answer—The Financial Secretary shall receive all payments on current expense and benevolent subscriptions, take charge of all offerings and special collections at church, keep an accurate account with each subscriber in a book provided for that purpose, pay all moneys received to the proper treasurer (current expense or benevolent), take a receipt for the same (or pay by check), furnish subscribers with statements of their accounts as may be directed by the church or its official board, make reports to any session of the church and its official board. He shall keep the church membership fully informed of the general financial condition, needs and plans of the church. He shall see that each new member received into the church shall be fully informed of the church's financial plans and secure his weekly subscription without delay.

In small churches the Financial Secretary and Stewardship Secretary may be the same person if he is qualified to teach stewardship as well as to record finances.

Your Stewardship Study Class.

Of course your church will have Stewardship Study classes for the first six weeks of November and December. These two months are the stewardship period of the Christian Church and your church will no doubt be in harmony with our great program. Two matters at least need immediate attention; the selection of the instructors for your stewardship classes. They will need time to thoroughly prepare themselves. The other is the selection of the books to be used so that they may be announced and ordered so as to be on hand. If this bureau may be of assistance in suggestion about text books for different groups, such as officials, laymen, young people, women, we shall be glad to serve.

BARS ALIEN CHURCH CONTROL.

The Supreme Court has denied the right of a foreign bishop of the Russion church to control either the persons or the property of that church in the United States, and has turned over this control to an American archbishop.

This doubtless establishes an important precedent that can be applied to existing Roman Catholic conditions in the United States, where title to so many millions of dollars of property, that it is next to imposible to compute them, is held in trust for an alien pope by his henchmen here.

There would seem to be no doubt, in the light of this court decision, that any congregation of American Catholics could repudiate the dictatorship of an alien pope, and that they would be confirmed by the courts in ownership of any property then held by their church, or held in trust for it by anyone, if they took it over. Some day this will be done here, and on a very large scale.—The National Observer.

ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE CONVENTION.

Special attention of pastors, church officials and members of congregations of all churches in the United States is called to the Thirty-third Year Biennial Convention of the Anti-Saloon League of America to be held in Chicago, November 5-9. It is pointed out that every church congregation, every young people's society and every local unit of a temperance organization is entitled to send a delegate. It is believed that many congregations will send their pastors as delegates, each congregation taking care of the pastor's expenses and it is urged that wherever possible this be done.

Rev. Dr. Francis Scott McBride, General Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of America, and Rev. Dr. Howard H. Russell, its founder and associate superintendent, are urging that the churches of America take particular interest in this convention. They instance that the Anti-Saloon League is "The Church in Action Against the Saloon," and that this organization was founded after a conference and prayer meeting in the library of an American church college. It was the church of the United States, working through the Anti-Saloon League as its regularly constituted agency, that brought about prohibition. The job is not finished; the task of the Anti-Saloon League is plain. The call to the churches cooperating in the League is equally plain.

The statement of these superintendents says: "The greatest crisis convention since 1913 is the forecast for this Chicago gathering. Interest in establishing prohibition is becoming more and more acute. After five years' test of new problems of national prohibition, this League is ready to announce at Chicago a national plan and policy as decisive as was the national program for the adoption of the 18th Amendment heralded by the Columbus convention in 1913.

"There will be a very great program at Chicago. Pulpit, press, science, medicine, government (Federal and State) and the courts will be represented in the speaking program. As perhaps in no preceding convention the duty of the church, the relationship of the church and the opportunity of the church will be presented. Every congregation within possible traveling distance of Chicago should send delegates. Every pastor especially should be there. A reduction in rates is expected on the railroads. Chicago is reached also from every direction by the finest automobile roads. Hotel accommodations are ample."

For any information relative to hotels, rates, automobile roads, etc., write to the National Convention Publicity Department, care of Illinois Anti-Saloon League, 1200 Security Building, Chicago.

JOHN KNIGHT—CHRISTIAN MINISTER.

(The following appeared recently in many North Carolina dailies. It is interesting):

By Upton G. Wilson.

In one of the most interesting adventure stories ever written, a story that has been given a place in holy writ, it is related that the word of the Lord came unto a man named Jonah, saying, "Arise, go to Ninevah, that great city, and cry against it; for their wickedness has come up before me." But instead of obeying, Jonah legged it down to Joppa and went on board a ship bound for Tarshish.

Hardly had he crossed the three-mile limit, however, before things began to happen, things that are too well known to need repeating here; but suffice it to say that when the word of the Lord came unto Jonah a second time, saying, "Arise, go unto Ninevah, that great city, and preach unto it the preaching I bid thee," Jonah arose, took the shortest road to Ninevah and began preaching when he came in sight of town.

One refusal to heed the word of the Lord was sufficient to confirm Rev. Mr. Jonah in the ministry.

Yet despite the fact that Jonah's disobedience cost him considerable embarassment, men called to do God's work still persist in running away in a vain effort to escape doing as they are told. Apparently they forget that God's sway is worldwide and that for Him neither state nor national boundaries exist. Which reminds me that I have a story to tell of a man who attempted to flee the jurisdiction of God, but found instead that the Lord's requisition is valid in any country of the universe.

This man, of course, wasn't swallowed by a whale, as he kept away from that mammal's habitat, but he did do considerable traveling, going as far as Oklahoma. His traveling availed him nothing, however, for the Lord kept on his trail. So after wandering around through Oklahoma for a while and then through Kansas and Missouri, it occurred to him that he might give God the dodge by returning to North Carolina.

But again he was mistaken. The Lord couldn't be dodged. Consequently he quit dodging and tried to stop his ears instead. This, too, was a failure. The sound of God's call couldn't be smothered. The call had to be answered and John W. Knight answered it. He began to preach.

Don't think, however, that this decision was made without a struggle; for Knight was timid and but poorly prepared educationally. He didn't want to preach, but he had to.

And since the Lord had been chasing him for ten years, when once his mind was made up he lost no time in getting busy. He didn't wait until the elders had laid their hands upon his head; he didn't wait until a solemn conclave of devines had passed upon his moral and spiritual fitness to preach; he didn't wait for anything; but fired with a zeal that recognized no obstacles he became at once an evangel of God, preaching the word in church, schoolhouse and arbor.

This procedure, however, was irregular. For though the Lord may call a man to preach, it is other ecclesiasties who confer upon him denominational approval. But in his hurry Knight had neglected to obtain this and soon found himself a sort of John the Baptist crying in the wilderness. He lacked the authority of men.

A small matter. He would remedy it by attending the yearly conference of his denomination—already he had become a communcant of the Christian church—and obtaining the conference's license to preach. He attended the conference all right but he didn't get the license. They turned him down flatly. Perhaps he wasn't sound in the doctrine or maybe his zeal was too high. Anyway, he failed to get the license he went after.

But this refusal of the conference to recognize him didn't dampen his ardor in the least, he told me. In fact, he preached more afterwards than he had before, holding many revival meetings. And he stirred folks up too. He had a command of words and an eloquence and sincerity that impressed people.

Therefore the time came when his denomination had to recognize him. This recognition came unasked, too. A conference was held that licensed him to preach and a little later the dignity of ordination was conferred upon him. He had been preaching nearly a dozen years before these honors came.

Today John W. Knight is a prophet not without honor in his own country. For not only has his denomination recognized his worth but also his neighbors have recognized it as well. Those who know him best respect him most. And in all the twenty years he has been preaching he has never moved, living now in the house in which he was born. Two of his five churches are within a few miles of his home.

I have no way of knowing for a certainty, but I feel safe in saying that Rev. Mr. Knight preaches the funerals of more country people than any other preacher in this part of the State. In fact, it was because of the many funeral services he holds that this story came to be wirtten. I heard so often of his conducting funerals that I made it my business to ask him about his work. What he told me appeared to be worth telling others.

I don't know that John Knight has ever preached the funeral of a wealthy man. Certainly he hasn't become wealthy holding services for the dead, rich or poor. For few are the funerals he has been paid for preaching, yet he has never refused to go when sent for. Often he has quit his farm work, driven long distances and come back home poorer than when he left.

It is not unusual for both men and women to request during their last conscious moments that John Knight be asked to preach their funeral.

And there is nothing strange in such requests. Those who make them no doubt believe that he can launch them into eternity with a little more love, a little less consure, than any other preacher they know. Then, too, they doubtless like to feel that they have secured an advocate that is not a stranger at the bar of God.

But though John Knight preaches many funerals he doesn't preach folks into heaven or hell without mighty good reasons therefor. Nor does he spend much time in eulogizing the dead. He preaches to the living and he gives them Bible truths. Often, he says, he has an opportunity to preach to persons at funerals that never hear a sermon at any other time.

Some sort of intuition, Mr. Knight declares, guides him in preaching funerals. He usually senses whether a man or woman was saved or unsaved before being told of anything said or done by the deceased that would help him to form an opinion. It is much easier, he says, to preach the funeral of a Christian than of a sinner. But they never die too steeped in sin for him to preach a sermon over their bier.

It is the living he aims to reach, anyway, and not the dead.

John Knight believes in a literal heaven and a literal hell. He believes heaven is a real place, as real as any earthly place. He believes it just as firmly as he believes God has called him to preach.

This, however, is an age of skepticism and there may be those who doubt that any man is ever called to preach. But it would never occur to the most skeptical, if they knew him, to doubt that John Knight believes he was called to preach. And when they had once heard him deliver a message from the pulpit, it would never occur to them to doubt that he can preach.

It is because he can preach and preach eloquently and forcefully, but at the same time understandably, that he is so often called on to preach funerals—this and the confidence folks have in his religion.

John Knight didn't obtain his present standing in his community by attempting to be all things to all people. He has taken God as his preceptor and His word as his guide; and like Jonah, he has cried out against wickedness fearlessly and often. Perhaps there have been people who hated him because of his stand for a morally clean community, but it is doubtful if there have been any who didn't respect him.

If he didn't believe a thing was right he didn't favor it; if it didn't believe it was wrong he didn't oppose it.

Possibly Mr. Knight's record as a minister has never been paralleled. It must be remembered that he began preaching, twenty years ago, unprepared, unlicensed and unrecognized. Nor did he ever move his residence that he might seek honor elsewhere. He had no influential friends to push him along. Character and will power, plus faith, have brought him up.

Even now, though, he may not be able to point to any great meeting, to any great sermon, of his that would place him on a pinnacle. But his friends can point to the confidence people have in him, to the place he has made for himself in an ever widening rural community, and challenge others to meet it.

Another thing, his friends would not deny that John Knight has made mistakes, for this would be denying the truth. But mistakes, misfortunes, lack of training, all have been overcome. Twenty years as a minister have taught him many things.

Just now Mr. Knight is pastor of five rural churches, two in Rockingham county, two in Montgomery county, and one in Lee county. The most he has ever obtained in salary from any one church in one year is $250. At present two of his churches are paying him $100 each a year. Ten dollars is the most he has ever received for preaching a funeral.

One of the most pleasant things about his ministry, Mr. Knight says, is to meet up with folks who tell him that a sermon of his started them on the right road to happiness, self-respect and heaven; if you will admit that there is such a place. To have people tell him this means more to him than to have them give him money. It is treasure that is stored where thieves do not break in and where moths are never known.

In worldly goods Mr. Knight is no richer than he was twenty years ago. He had a farm then and he still has it, and he works it. He is as much at home between the plow handles as in the pulpit. He might have been a better farmer if he had let preaching alone, but I doubt if he would have been a better preacher had he left farming alone.

Preaching, farming, between the two he has managed to make a living for himself, wife and ten children. Perhaps he could have done more for them, however, had he devoted his whole time to farming; more, that is, in a financial way. There are some things, though, that are worth more than money. Character is one of them; one can't buy character.

A country preacher, that is all John Knight is; a preacher that farmers delight in listening to, a preacher that delights in telling farmers of the man of Galilee; a preacher who goes when he is sent for and comes back when his services are no longer needed; just a country preacher.

It took God ten years to convince him that he must preach; it took him more than ten years to convince the leaders of his denomination that he could preach; it will take ten times ten years for the influence of his preaching to die.

John Knight was born in New Bethel township, Rockingham county, fifty-nine years ago, and will in all probability die there when his ministry among men is finished, still a country preacher.—News and Observer.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

Subject: "Paul in Corinth."

Golden Text: "Be not afraid, but speak and hold not thy peace."—Acts 18: 9.

Lesson: Acts 18: 1-17.

Devotional Reading: i. Cor. 13: 1-7.

Reference Material: i. Cor. 2: 1-5; 3: 10-13; ii. Cor. 3: 1-6.

"After these things, Paul departed from Athens and came to Corinth." It was like jumping out of the frying pan into the fire. For whereas Athens was the cultural center of the world, Corinth was the commercial center of the world. And when one is trying to establish the sovereignty of Jesus Christ in human life it is a question of which type of life offers the easier or harder approach—the life that is predominantly intellectual and cultural, or the life that is predominantly materialistic. In any event, no one can accuse Paul of seeking the easy jobs of life.

Corinth had gained the commercial supremacy of the world of that day by virtue both of the strategic geographical position she occupied, and of the ability of her people. The city was located on a narrow isthmus which connected the Peloponnesus with the mainland and had three harbors. Large ships plying the Mediterranean Sea would touch on either side of the isthmus—on the Aegean side or the Adriatic side—and have their cargo transported across the isthmus to boats on the other side, rather than make the long and often hazardous trip around the peninsula. Small ships were transported "bag and baggage" across the isthmus on tramways. Thus it was that practically all the commerce of that part of the world—and there was a great deal of commerce—passed through Corinth. Here was a big factor in the city's life.

To the natural advantage of the city's geographical location there was added the ability and the initiative of the people themselves. They were progressive and courageous and they soon made Corinth the metropolis of that part of the world. How much emphasis they put on commerce is reflected in the fact that Corinth did not produce a single man who distinguished himself in literature, although she did produce a few great statesmen.

Corinth was not only a commercial city; it was a very immoral city. The steps were inevitable. First great wealth, then luxury, then immorality and all kinds of vice. "Corinth was the city of vice par excellence of the Roman world," says one commentator. Here was a city that above all others needed the saving power of Jesus Christ. But what a hard proposition it presented. Small wonder that as Paul says in his letter later, he was with them in much fear and trembling. It was a situation to try the stoutest heart.

Paul had already mapped out his campaign. He would not go into Corinth with excellency of speech or of wisdom; he was determined not to know anything among the Corinthians, save Jesus Christ and Him crucified.. Modern ministers will do well to follow his example. In a day of materialism and of much immorality, people do not need, nor indeed do they want, lectures on current topics, or reviews of recent books. People need more than ever the message of Jesus Christ and Him crucified. It is no easy matter to preach Christ effectively, but it can be done, and it must be done if the world is to be saved. For there is no other name given under heaven among men whereby we must be saved.

Paul made an humble beginning in Corinth. The first folk he found were two Jews, a man and his wife, Aquila and Pricilla by name, who made their living making tents. Because of a common interest, Paul made his home with these open-hearted Jews, and wrought at his trade. Coming immediately after the verse which states that Paul wrought at his trade of a tent-maker, comes the verse that he reasoned in the synagogues every sabbath. It is no slip of the pen or a mere coincidence; it is all a part of the eternal fitness of things. We have drawn two distinct lines between the sacred and the secular. There is no reason why a man should not make tents or dig ditches or sell goods, and at the same time be spiritual in his outlooks and his contacts. As a matter of fact, what we need most of all today is not so much the calling of people out of the work-a-day tasks into the so-called Christian professions, such as the ministry or mission service, as the calling of people to make every profession and occupation a Christian profession. The latter is as difficult in many instances as the former. There are many people who think they would be courageous to become missionaries for Christ in China, who are not courageous to apply His principles to their business. The sacred ought to light up and glorify the secular. Whatever we do we ought to do it unto the glory of God. I will venture the assertion that Paul was just as good tent-maker as he was preacher or writer.

"And when they opposed themselves and blasphemed, Paul shook out his raiment and said unto them, Your blood be upon your own heads; I am clean: from henceforth I will go unto the Gentiles." We must apply common sense to religion. There is no limit to the Divine mercy and no man is ever beyond the pale of divine forgiveness. But it is a waste of time in some instances to waste words on those who are bigoted and unresponsive, when there are so many who would hear the Word gladly. One thing is certain: the man who hears the gospel and does not heed it, has his blood on his own head.

Paul had his moments of discouragement. But though he was down, he was never out. "The Lord said unto Paul in the night by a vision, Be not afraid, but speak and hold not thy peace: for I am with thee, and no man shall set on thee to harm thee." They must have been reassuring words to Paul in view of the fact that he had been beaten so many times before. "I am with thee"—the consciousness of the divine Presence has been the strength of men and women through the centuries. If God be for us, who can be against us?

"I have much people in this city." What? Much people in wicked, grossly immoral Corinth! Yes, in Corinth there were those who belonged to the Lord. In Elijah's day Jehovah had seven thousand who had not bowed the knee to Baal. And in our day and in our own cities and towns, God has those who are His own. Their names are not always on the front pages of the newspapers, but their names are in the book of life. In a quiet, unassuming and indiscourageable way they are serving Jesus Christ, and in them there is that saving element which shall save the world.

1. The worse the place, the greater the need for the gospel.
2. Wealth constitutes a snare to the spiritual life.
3. A materialistic philosophy of life does not produce real men.
4. The home with the open door is often an instrument in the hands of God for evangelizing the world.
5. Christianity is based on reason.
6. Disregarded opportunity constitutes a grave responsibility.
7. Those who undertake God's program are assured of God's help.
8. If we believe, we are to speak.
9. Fear often prevents us from doing our Christian duty.
10. God has "much people" even in the most unexpected places.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

October 11, 1925.

Topic: "They First Gave Their Own Selves."—ii. Cor. 8: 1-15.

A Stewardship Meditation.

Some Bible Hints.

It is when we know the joy of the Lord, the happiness of service, that we give ourselves wholly to Him. (V. 2.)

Real stewards are not pushed into God's work; they do it "of their own accord," that is because they want to do it. (V. 3.)

What we give to God is nothing, unless we give ourselves with the gift. (V. 5.)

Surrender to God is also consecration to service of men. (V. 5.)

Suggestive Thoughts.

Christian service begins in utter consecration. That is "first." No second step can be taken until the first is made.

God wants our service, our co-operation, but it is we who must "give" ourselves. He does not force us. He invites. The decision is with us.

God's claim upon us rests upon creation and redemption. He made us, and we are His. He redeemed us by His blood. We are not our own in any sense.

A Few Illustrations.

Money is the symbol of time, talent, and energy expended, and put into a form that can be used as the owner will. To give God money is to give part of ourselves.

Stewards have different tasks. God has uses for many gifts. We can be His stewards in the home as well as in church or business, doing His will there.

To give ourselves to God is simple. We need simply sincerely tell Him in prayer that we surrender to Him; ask Him to do whatever He will with us; and then believe that He accepts, and try to live as He would have us live.

To Think About.

What is meant by stewardship?

Why should we consecrate all our powers to God?

Which is the happier life—the consecrated or the selfish?

"We always get back what we give—reap what we sow. If we give ourselves we get back a larger self, nobler, sweeter, more divine."—Buckhart.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

The prettiest scene we have had the pleasure of looking at for a long time was this morning, when all of our little children, one hundred strong, dressed up in their clean school clothes and armed with books, pencils, tablets and all the necessary articles for school work marched off to the graded school. They were all happy to go and went off with light steps and happy hearts to begin in their early years to prepare for life's work. It carried me back to my young boyhood days when mother would wrap me snug and warm and with books in one hand and my dinner basket in the other, she would urge me to be a nice little boy and study hard and have good lessons. That mother's influence has followed me all the days of my life and in my immagination I can hear her now, telling me to be a good boy. Oh! if we would always obey the teachings of a good mother. But in looking at this one hundred children march off to school, it could not but bring a bit of saddness mingled with the joy. Of course it makes us happy to see them happy and their hearts glad in the thought of going to school, but sad, to realize their mother could not give then the little farewell: "Be a good boy today." In many instances mothers voice is hushed and will be heard no more. In other cases, mother is far away and could not be present to heave the little farewell word. But when we stand and look at them march off to school and realize these missing things in life, it makes them feel mighty close to us. It fills the hearts of those who are trying with all of our ability to care for them, to make a greater determination to be father and mother to them, and to fill as near as may be this vacant spot in their life.

AMERICAN STANDARD BIBLES.

Authorized and Edited by American Revision Committee, and Published by Thomas Nelson & Sons.

These Bibles contain the Concise Bible Dictionary which forms the helps to these Teachers' Bibles. It supplies, in the most condensed and convenient form, all the latest information about the Bible, its writers, its language, the various versions, complete chronology, life of Christ, with harmony of the Gospels, life and travels of St. Paul, etc. The Illustrations are reproduced from recent photographs, and truly illustrate the articles. The Combined Concordance is entirely new, and has been made expressly for the American Standard Version. It combines with the Concordance, Subject-Index, Scripture Proper Names, etc. The 12 Maps have been carefully revised and are beautifully colored. In making orders, give the Number and prices.

Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

SETTING THINGS RIGHT.

Text: "Try your own selves whether ye are in the faith; prove your own selves, or know ye not as to your own selves, that Jesus Christ is in you? unless indeed ye be reprobate." 2 Cor. 13:5.

"Try your own ways and turn to the Lord." Lam. 3:40.

When things seem wrong to me, what must I do? I must be very slow for it may be myself that is wrong. Let me look well and see.

But suppose my life has been flooded with blessings through Christ; suppose I have seen the Word of God as never before; suppose I do not know His power for victory; suppose I do want above everything else to share my blessings with every one else, and suppose I have done my best to share it and make every one happy; and still, response is obstinate and many for whom I have labored are slow to enter into the riches they might have, what shall I do? I am in the balances. Satan urges me to be harsh and critical, intollerant and foolish. If I yield I put them beyond the possibility of the blessings which I myself have lost.

I will patiently pray that God may deal in His own way with me. My conduct must be of boundless tenderness and sympathy. I pray God to help me in His prevailing love.

PRAYER: Search me, O God, and know my heart; try me and know my thoughts; and see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way of everlasting life. Turn my feet to Thy Word and to Thy testimonies and give me life. In His name I ask it. Amen.

Lessons: Ps. 22:23; 69:34; 150:6; 138:1; 47:7; Col. 3:16; Ps. 145:2; Heb. 13:15; Ps. 21:13; 30:4; 147:1; Isa. 49:13; Ps. 106:1; 150:2; Lk. 2:10-11; 1 Cor. 15:57.

TUESDAY.

GIVING THANKS.

I ought to be thankful—
For grief unsuffered. tears unshed,
For clouds that scattered overhead;
For pestilence that came not nigh,
For dangers great that passed me by;
For sharp suspicion, soothed, allayed;
For doubt dispelled that made afraid;
For fierce temptation well withstood,
For evil plot which brought forth good;
For weakened links in friendship's chain
That sorely tested the strain;
For harmless blows with malice dealt,
For base ingratitude unfelt;
For hatred's keen unuttered word,
For bitter jest, unknown, unheard;
For every evil turn away,
Unmeasured thanks I give today.

—Selected.

PRAYER: Our Father, may we lack nothing this day, and forever, in heartfelt thanks for Thy blessings, the unseen as well as the seen. We acknowledge Thee as our salvation and we praise Thy name for Thy divine grace and mercy. Save us we pray Thee, from sin, and to the Glory of God. In His name we ask it. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

THE CHRISTIAN'S HOPE.

Text: "No one cometh unto the Father but by Me." Jno. 14:6.

So we have to come to Jesus for our hope. He is the way of salvation, and He is the gate to the city of mansions, which the Father hath prepared for His children in the unseen home beyond.

Think what this means—not merely reading His Word. We only half understand what He means when we confine our attention to His teachings. He said: "Look unto Me and live." He himself then is more than He taught. His greatest contribution is his own character. What He taught gets its flavor from what he was. By seeing Him we can understand more fully than any other way what it is to be righteous and loving. In Him we visualize our possibilities in God. "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father," said the Christ. Jesus lived such a life that it is incredible that he should die. It is through Him that we may live the same way. His ministry never closes. And like Him ours shall never.

PRAYER: Our Father, in the Name of Jesus, we come to Thee and pray that we may always look to Jesus, and that we may have His thoughts and feelings; that we may be as loyal to Thy purpose as He, as generous in our devotions as He and as complete in our spirit and sacrifices as He would have us be. Forgive us of our sins and hold Thou before us Thy hope for ever. Amen.

THURSDAY.

LIVING IN THE FULNESS OF THE GOSPEL.

Text: "I am sure that when I come unto you I shall come in the fulness of blessing of the Gospel of Christ." Rom. 15:29.

"Gospel," we are told, originally meant "Good News." Much use of the term is made in the scriptures in which it is caused to mean —"Revelation of God," "In His Grace," "In His Truth," "His Power," and "His Salvation."

What is that "Good News?" It is the good news that is the difference between happiness and misery, salvation and perdition, heaven and hell. The death of our Lord, to the Disciples, for a time, meant failure of all to which they had looked forward for this life and that to come. His resurrection was the good news, for it meant the re-establishment of that hope. It was the bringing back the absolute certainty of His Messiahship. Faith that had been staggered by the crucifixion had now been restored and everybody could know that Jesus was really what He called to be, the Lord of the world and the Saviour of mankind.

PRAYER: Our Father, in these days of materialism and doubts renew our hopes and trusts in Thee through Jesus Christ our Lord, and forbid that our faith shall ever waver. Forgive us and save us this day. Amen.

FRIDAY.

THE NEED OF GODLINESS.

Text: "Godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is and of that which is to come." 1 Tim. 4:8.

What does godliness contribute to our daily efficiency? What can it do to make us happier, stronger and more successful in our daily living?

A common answer is: It gives us comfort, solace in life's misfortunes, sets wrong things right, gives compensation to failures, consolation in bereavement, and gives the assurance of meeting loved ones in eternity.

We believe that is all this, but that sounds much like a hospital doesn't it? Much as we need and expect these things, we need more; for instance, strength, courage, enthusiasm and loyalty consecration and heroism. Battles are not won by doctors, hospitals and trained nurses. It is good to be helped up when we are down, to be restored when we are sick, but it is better never to fall. What does Christianity offer us there? It puts value in our possibilities, satisfaction in our efforts, power in our influence, prospect in our living. It opens up to us new knowledge and the exercise of new thought and power; and the consciousness of these things gives new dignity to our personality and new joy to our living.

*PRAYER*s Our Father, give us the fulness of the Christian hope in the life that now is. Help us to use our opportunities to their utmost, and as we pass on help us to look back over the past without regret. In His name we ask it. Amen.

SATURDAY.

LOYALTY AND DUTY.

Text: "Wherefore, receiving a kingdom that cannot be shaken, let us have grace whereby we may offer services well pleasing to God." Heb. 12:28.

There was a man whose earthy life was drawing to a close. He was one of whom it could be said with more truth than with most men that he had used his opportunities to the full, and could look back over the record of his life without regret. In the hour of his death it was impossible to associate him with death. His mind was active and alert, interested in life—never more so even though cut off from outer contracts and shut up in the world of his own thoughts.

This was a man who had schooled himself by unremitting discipline to a loyalty to duty which shrank from no sacrifice. He had learned the rarer lesson that duty willingly followed leads into paths of pleasantness and peace. He was a man who had borne great responsibilities with the burdens increasing each year, and had never laid down what he had once taken up, and withal never too busy to lend his ear and his heart to any needy child. His genius was friendship. No one touched him without trusting him and to hundreds he stood in a father's place. He was wise in council and tender in sympathy and yet dared to blame when blame was needed. He walked daily with God, and in his presence doubt could not live.

PRAYER: Dear Lord Jesus, help us to discipline our souls for service and live both for God and humanity. Show us our duty. Give us will and strength to walk therein and find pastures of peace and happiness. In His name we ask it. Amen.

SUNDAY.

THE USE OF OUR BODIES AND SOULS.

Lesson: Romans 6 (read).

Text: "Let not sin reign in your mortal body, neither yield your members as instruments of unrighteousness; but yield yourselves unto God, as those that are alive from the dead, and your members as instruments of righteousness unto God."

Is it possible to think that it would make no difference if we were persuaded that there is no further work in store than what we may be called upon to do in this world; that this finely tempered instrument of the body, fashioned by God at so great a cost and fitted for such high and sacred uses is to be cut off by death from all further possibilities?

Would it not, on the other hand, be an inspiring and uplifting thought, stimulating to new self-discipline and completer consecration, to believe that what we see and do here is only the beginning of a service that will have no end. Each year new opportunities and friendships will continue in the life to come. We be-

Dears:

Not much longer to play the Pollyanna game! Just till October the first—Be SURE to exchange your photographs, and then write me a letter and tell me all your Pollyanna did for you—its going to be interesting as can be to find out how good Pollyanna treated you! And—Oh, my, deary me—I do hope you are a real good Pollyanna yourself. Are you dears?

Oo-ee, the leaves can't fall off the trees while it is so hot—and pretty soon the Kiddies will want to play in a great big old pile—as tall as Little Joe—God will want the leaves to go to sleep real soon—and then comes Father Winter, and covers the dear little leaves in a white blanket of snow. And won't it be fun when that time does come—Yes, ser-ee! I'll be so glad!

Who likes winter-time best? Do you?

WHAT MRS. BUCKLEY SAW ON HER ISLAND.

If you want to know where Mrs. Buckley lives, you must study a map of the Great Lakes until you find a big island called Bois Blanc, away up in the north between the South Channel of the Strait of Mackinac and Lake Huron. There, in a delightful cottage in the ever green forest, is Mrs. Buckley's home. She and Mr. Buckley choose to live on this far-away island in the winter as well as in the summer for many reasons of their own. One reason is that they think their island home even lovlier in the ice-bound winter than in the summer.

Every winter Mrs. Buckley provides food and water for the wild things of the forest. Red squirrels and blue jays are her daily guests, and they have bad manners. They scold and quarrel all the time.

Last winter Mrs. Buckley spread her feast of nuts and crumbs on the flat roof that covered a wide, low wood-pile. One morning she was watching the red squirrels and blue jays at their breakfast and wondering what impolite things they were saying one to another as they ate and scolded and scolded and ate, when something unusual happened.

It was a still morning. There was not the least bit of a breeze in the forest to send showers of snow down from the wide-spreading evergreens. The squirrels were chit-chit-chitting at the blue jays, and the blue jays were "sassing" back in shocking language, if the truth were known.

Mrs. Buckley was watching and wondering, when suddenly she saw a bit of wood magic. One blue jay said something in a different tone. He was perching on a spruce bough that stretched above the wood-pile. He had been listening quietly to the quarreling, with his head on one side, as if he enjoyed it, when without warning he made one sharp remark:

"JAY-JAY-JAY!"

Instantly there was complete silence on the wood-pile. Not only was there silence, but not a creature moved a muscle.

When the blue jay spoke, a big red squirrel was running up one of the posts that held the roof over the wood-pile. He had nearly reached the top; in two leaps he might have been on the roof with his friends and his enemies. That red squirrel stopped dead still where he was, and then he did something that amazed Mrs. Buckley.

He began to flatten out. He flattened and flattened against the post until it was hard to see where his fur coat ended and the bark of the post began. And still he flattened. His tail grew flatter and flatter until it seemed to become part of the post. Mrs. Buckley was fascinated. She said she half expected him to go out of sight entirely.

On top of the wood-pile were more wonders. Every squirrel there had flattened out like a door-mat. The blue jays seemed to have turned into straight blue sticks. Their heads were in a straight line with their tails, and their feathers had been flattened and flattened until they no longer looked like feathers. One, two, three, four, five minutes passed, and still the squirrels seemed to be red fur rugs and the birds, blue sticks.

As she could discover no reason for such actions, and as there was not a cat in sight or anything near to change a chattering wildwoods dinner party into a sort of hide-the-thimble-in-plain-sight game, Mrs. Buckley stepped outside the cottage into the shining winter day to see what she could see.

High above the Norway pines, in the bright blue sky, an eagle was circling round and round, round and round, looking for any little moving creature that he might be glad to eat.

When the eagle flew far away, the blue jays and the red squirrels came to life again and began to quarrel and eat their dinner as lively as ever. Then Mrs. Buckley went into the house with something new to remember always and to tell all boys and girls. I was one of the girls she told.—Frances Margaret Fox.

THE DISCOVERY.

Bettie had opened an old green door
  Set in an old red wall.
Vines had hidden it well before;
  It hadn't seemed there at all.
Then workmen pulled the ivy away,
And when she came again to play
There was the funny old faded door
  Right in the old red wall.

Slow she opened the door and found
  A dear old garden square.
Flowers were shining all around,
  Flowers were thronging fair:
A starry group by an old gray stone,
A little bell shape swing alone,
And dozens of others, white and gold,
  Crimson and blue, were there.

Can you think of anything much more sweet
  Than a secret door in a wall
And blossoms crowding about your feet,
  Lovely and bright and small?
"Flowers!" cried Bettie. "O flowers dear,
How could I dream you were so near?
But I never will shut the old green door—
  Too well I love you all!"

—Nancy Byrd Turner.

MY PUSSY.

My pussy always washes
  When she's had a bite to eat,
But all the same I really think
  She isn't very neat.

For though she washes after meals,
  She never does before;
And I am sure she ought to
  After sitting on the floor.

Mary Ruth Jones.

Franklin, Va.

lieve that there is something in humanity at its best that deserves to live forever, and it makes a great difference in our estimate of the significance of living whether or not we believe that what we feel ought to be, will be.

When some one tells us that they do not believe in the after-life, they must be thinking about something different from the hope we have in Christ. They must be thinking too much of life as it is and not as it should be. They are measuring the future with the measuring rod of the past. They are thinking of the monotony of life, its weary repetition of familiar experiences, its empty formalities, its deadening routine, and these they do not wish continued, and they refuse to believe in it.

But we Christians do not look for such a life as that. God's life is quality, not more existence, but better existence. We are to work out the wrongs here and make things right and make the future full of things to be done and to be learned that will make joy complete.

PRAYER: Our Father, lead us (and inspire us to follow) unto the highest life. Show us the unending development of Christian living. Sanctify our temporal abode and make this world a heaven for us, according as we are taught, "Thy kingdom come on earth." Amen.

RIGHTS AND DUTIES OF STATES.

"Little given to self-praise," The Dearborn Independent says, "it is nevertheless proud to think that it was instrumental in reviving throughout the country the sense of the Rights of the States to Home Rule in matters not delegated by the Constitution to the Federal Government. The wild rush toward bureaucracy, centralization, prussianization of the whole country, a rush encouraged by those who can more easily control politicians than they can the people, has been stopped. Efforts will still be made to take away the Rights of the States, but the people are awake and that course will not prove so easy in the future.

"However, that is not all. Rights may be taken away from the States and are taken away when States refuse the Duties which Rights imply. No State, in the name of its Rights, can throw itself as a barrier across the path of the nation's progress. When it does, its right to do so is removed. Recent discussion has retained to the State its rights over its schools and to the families of States their rights in their own children. This has been done by showing what is proposed and would be possible under the so-called Child Labor Amendment to the Constitution and under the proposed Federal Department of Education. Those who want to control all children under 18 from a Washington Bureau, those who want to put all the district schools under a Bureau at Washington, based their strongest argument on the neglect practiced by the States—neglect in protecting tender children from brabarous labor conditions, neglect in fostering an adequate educational system in backward districts.

"Insofar as these charges were true (and to a minor extent in a few neglected places the first was true; to a minor extent but in more places the second was true) it called attention to the neglect of State Duties. The conclusion drawn was wrong, of course. Because a State neglects a matter is no reason why it should be immediately dissociated from all rights and duties in that matter by having the Federal Government appropriate it. Home Rule with less efficiency is more valuable to this nation than Federal Rule with more efficiency. That statement would be true even if Federal Rule were more efficient than Home Rule, which it is not. When a State neglects its duties, the procedure is to wake it to its responsibility and through education and urgence bring its people to a vigorous handling of their own affairs.

"If there are states which permit little children to go to work, or youth or women to toil under hurtful conditions; if there are States which neglect or forget the district school, they may expect constant assault on their Rights to control the conditions under which their children live, and their Rights to control their own educational system. The Right of the State to Home Rule depends on the State's fulfillment of its duty to rule at home in accordance with the best interests of all its people—especially the multitude of plain people."

NUNRY.

On the evening of August 28, death came suddenly and claimed for the life beyond, Sister Hettie Nunry, who had reached the age of 65 years. For about twenty-five years she had been a member of Grace's Chapel Church, years we trust she has spent in preparation for her call home. Among those who mourn her departure are: a daughter, Mrs. Newby Shields, a brother and four grand-children. May the Lord wipe away the tears of sorrow and bring comfort to those who mourn. R. L. WILLIAMSON.

LARRICK.

O'Nile Ruby Larrick, infant daughter of William and Vera Larrick, was born September 2, 1924, and died August 22, 1925, aged 11 months and 20 days. The parents are members of the Timber Ridge Christian Church, and the funeral services were held there, August 23, 1925. Their many friends extend to the sorrowing parents their deepest sympathy in this hour of sore bereavement.

A. W. ANDES

WELCH.

James M. Welch, of Wadley, Ala., was born September 12, 1854, and died on September 16, 1925. His entire life was spent in the same community. As a boy he was studious and eager to learn, and when quite young began to teach school. At about the age of thirty-five he attended the Southern Medical College and received the degree of M. D.

He loved his profession, but gave the church of which he was a member his very best service; and unless it was in an extreme case his calls were arranged so that he could attend church and Sunday School. For years he was a teacher of the Adult Class, being relieved of that duty only a year or two ago. He was thoughtful of the young men who wanted an education, often taking them into his home to live as ones of the family. He was useful in every way in his community and was ever ready with faithful counsel and assistance for those in need of a friend. When there was nothing good to be said he kept silent.

He was devoted to his home and companion and gave every consideration to his children. He leaves his wife, Mary M. and three sons, Ernest B., D. D.; Carl B., M. D.; and Linard L., M. D. He lived a beautiful life and fell on sleep at the home of one of his patients, having gone on a call.

The funeral services were conducted by the writer from the Wadley Christian Church, Rev. G. D. Hunt preaching the sermon. After the sermon there were talks from those volunteering as to his life as a Christian, as a business man, as to his helpfulness to the young, in social life and in his profession. His body was buried in the family lot in the Wadley cemetery.

How Swindlers Live.—

It is estimated that every year the people of the United States lose a half billion dollars by speculating in stock frauds. Swindlers get that amount, and on half a billion, a number of them could live for a year. Sometime ago we published on this page the sums which other thieves collected, and it is interesting to know how much American swindlers have to squander within a year.

Swedish Copper Mine Discovered.—

Dispatches from Stockholm heralded the discovery at Skelleftea, in the north of Sweden, of one of the largest copper deposits unearthed in Europe in many years. It was recalled that the Falun mines in Sweden have been worked since 1288. It is also of interest to note that the Mansfield copper mines in Germany have been worked for one thousand years, and the prospects point to another thousand.

A Piano Improvement.—

John Hays Hammond, Jr., recently demonstrated an invention by which the pianoforte can be made to have the sustained tones of a pipe-organ. The characteristics of the pianoforte are all retained. Mr. Hammond made the demonstration at his home in Gloucester, Massachusetts. Musical experts believe that this new invention is the greatest improvement of the pianoforte since it was evolved early in the eighteenth century.

First to Pay.—

Alfred Zayas, President of Cuba, speaking at a Rotary club luncheon in Manhattan, announced that Cuba was the first country to pay her war debt to the United States in full. So far it is the only country to have done so. Senor Zayas declared that this leadership was due to the labors of his people. He explained that sixty-seven per cent of Cuba's imports came from the United States, and that eighty-five per cent of the exports came to the United States.

Right or Wrong?—

Oscar Hill, forty-nine years old, a retired fur manufacturer, who had lived in this country for eighteen years, but who had failed to take out naturalization papers, recently revisited Europe. On his return to this country, he was refused admission because he could not read, which is a requirement now for all adults who enter the United States. The law was simply and inevitably taking its course, but actually was the position authorities right or wrong?

Profiteers Again.—

During the late war we heard much of profiteers and their work. Now as the Anthracite coal strike continues without hope of a settlement, a number of these same gentlemen are hoarding huge stores of hard coal amounting to from 500,000 to 2,000,000 tons, hoping that they can create an artificial famine, and send the price up to twenty dollars a ton or higher. So far nothing has given them hope of this advance, but much fear is being entertained over the matter. If the strike continues, and the profiteers can hold out, the demand may materialize before the winter. It is a case, it would seem, for governmental intervention in behalf of the public welfare.

Railroads Losing Passengers.—

Appearing in the Western roads freight rate advance plea before the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, C. B. Aitchison, President Charles Donnelly, of the Northern Pacific Railroad, informed the Commissioner that passenger business was a losing business, and that short hauls were going to bus lines. He pointed out that the Northern Pacific road carried 9,336,000 passengers, with an income of $20,000,000 in 1919; and in 1924 the same road carried only 3,607,000 passengers, with a revenue of $13,000,000. He pointed out too, that there had been a tremendous falling off in the short haul business, and declared that the business they had lost could not be recovered, and that the trucks did not yet have all the business they would get.

Another Man Without A Country.—

The Man Without a Country has his counterpart in a communist agitator. Because he would not cease to spread propaganda, the American authorities last January decided to put him on the high seas. When the steamer for Cherbourg, France arrived, he was duly shipped third class. At Cherbourg, the French authorities considered him dangerous and objectionable, and returned him to New York. At New York he was declined the privilege of landing, and this has been his situation for nine months now. He has done nothing except to cross and recross the Atlantic, consume large quantities of food, and develop considerable knowledge of transatlantic navigation. The steamship people have made frantic efforts to get rid of him, but without avail. He is to be in American harbors at an early date.

Saklatvala Excluded.—

Secretary of State, Frank B. Kellogg, has forbidden the entrance of Shapurji Saklatvala to the United States. Saklatvala is a member of Parliament, and is understood to be a member of the British Parliamentary delegation to the Inter-parliamentary Union which met in Washington last week. Secretary Kellogg felt that the exclusion of Saklatvala was made advisable because of the inflamatory utterances delivered in the British Parliament. It was the aim of the Member from Battersea to preach anarchy and the change of our form of government, even at the point of cold steel. Senator Borah felt that Saklatvala should not be excluded, and announced the age old truth that the best way to spread a truth was to make martyrs of the spreaders. The brother of the excluded man, Mr. P. D. Saklatvala, President of the Middle States Oil Company, approved of the action of Secretary Kellogg in a statement given to the press. The oil magnate has been in this country for more than twenty years. Saklatvala is a Parsee, a member of an advanced Indian people who worship Zoroaster. They immigrated to India many years ago from Persia. The unexpected part of the incident debarring Saklatvala from this country, was a petition circulated in Battersea, his constituency, asking that he resign or retract his rash declarations in Parliament, especially those denouncing the British policy in India.

A Crop of New College Presidents.—

There seems to be a number of new college presidents who are just entering upon their work this fall. Some of them are old college presidents just taking up new presidencies. Among this new crop, we have Dr. John Martin Thomas at Rutgers College, New Brunswick, N. J.; Dr. Clarence Cook Little changes the University of Maine for that of Michigan, where he succeeds Dr. Marion Leroy Burton, who died early this year. Max Mason, President elect of Chicago University is proceeding with his duties there. Glenn Frank, the former editor of the Century Magazine, is doing the same at the University of Wisconsin. Knox College at Galesburg, Ill., has been taken over by Albert Britt. Paul Whitfield Horn spurred the builders of The-College-That-Is-To-Be at Lubbock, Texas. Hamilton Holt, defeated for the United States Senate in Connecticut, not so long ago, has been seen motoring down to Winter Park, Fla., where he is to take charge of Rollins College. Henry M. Wriston has been chosen to head Lawrence College, Appleton, Wis. W. T. Sanger, former Secretary to the Virginia Educational Board, has become the head of the Medical College of Virginia. James Lukens McConaughy has been advanced to the presidency of Wesleyan University at Middletown, Conn. This may not be all of the newly elected college heads, but it is enough to show that a good many men are having honors and jobs this year.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Rev. W. C. Wicker, D. D., has been called to and accepted the pastorate of Mt. Auburn Christian Church, Warren County, N. C.

Rev. D. A. Long, D. D., will preach for his present pastorate the last time this month. Early in November he will go to visit relatives in South Carolina and then on to Florida for the winter.

Rev. J. E. McCauley changes his address from Elon College, N. C., to 368 Wesley Hall, Nashville, Tenn. Brother McCauley is in Vanderbilt Theological Seminary, pursuing studies looking toward the B. D. Degree. He is liking it fine at Vanderbilt thus far, and has high hopes in the success of his work there.

Why have so many churches in years gone by failed to be represented in the annual Conference. It is possible the fault is in making the selection of delegates. No person should allow himself to be chosen as a delegate unless he intends to perform the duties of a delegate, much less should a church name a delegate who cannot comply with the request to represent his church in Conference.

Franklin Christian College opened recently, with its largest number of students—more than President Henderson knows how to house comfortably. And many more are to enter later. Alas and alas that the new and so much needed dormitory is not yet completed. The great pity is that some generous soul cannot be found to donate or advance the money so that the building may be finished.

Among the many enterprises to be discussed and advocated at the Conferences, are Missions, Education and Publications, Stewardship and Promotion, Evangelization and Social Service. Two or three days in which to consider subjects of such magnitude drive the thought home to us that the Church Paper must be utillized, or else the people will know little of these things. It behooves us to put forth an effort to have The Christian Sun more widely circulated. There should be a united purpose on the part of the Conferences to put their Church Paper into the home of every family connected with the Church.

It is learned with peculiar pleasure that a Christian Church has been organized at Biscoe, N. C. We have several good members living at this place, among them our brother, Rev. W. C. Martin, who is deeply interested in our movement for a Christian Church. The first services of the new organization were held Sunday, September 27th. There are twelve charter members and they have a beautiful lot valued at $600. The organization is interested now in raising funds with which to start a building at no distant date. We bespeak for this organization healthy growth and good achievement in their worthy task.

Elon College is happy in having reached its full quota of students, and has had to turn away several applications in the last few days, as the rooms are filled. The college has the equipment equal to the very best and now it has the students. That which it lacks and most feels the need of now is more funds, donations, endowment with which to meet heavy expenses incurred and the increased current expense in running the improved plant. Rev. W. T. Walters, D. D., and Rev. W. T. Scott, are now soliciting agents and field representatives of the college, and there is no doubt but that the response on the part of our growing and loyal constituency will be ready and liberal, as it always has been in the past.

WINDSOR, VA.

Our young people of the Windsor Christian Church occupied most of the time at our regular service, the second Sunday night in September, in presenting a Pageant, "Tired of Missions." The missionary appeal of the pageant was, seemingly, very effective. This was followed by a short talk by the pastor, after which an offering was received for missions.

We held our protracted meeting at Antioch the week following the third Sunday in September, the pastor doing the preaching. We had splendid congregations, sometimes not being able to seat all the people who came. The interest was good and the church seemed much revived.

We received thirteen members at the close of the meeting. W. D. Harward.

NOTICE.

To the Churches and Pastors of the Georgia and Alabama Christian Conference:

Those who expect to attend this Conference, which meets on Tuesday evening, October 20th at 7:30 o'clock, at Oak Grove Christian Church, near Chipley, Ga., will please write to Mr. H. B. Floyd, Chairman of Entertainment Committee, Chipley, Ga. He will also be glad to furnish train schedules if you will write him. Be there and on time please, and let's have the best Conference ever.

(Miss) Aylmer Goodwin,
Secretary.

NOTICE.

THE EASTERN VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.

Place of next session: Franklin, Va.
Time of meeting: October 27, 1925.

The program is about completed. Two or three more chairmen of committees are to be yet heard from as to subjects and speakers.

If there is anyone who wishes to be heard at the conference on any special matter, or if there is anyone who has suggestions as to things to be emphasized, let him notify the chairman of the program committee.

The committee has allotted more time than usual to the subject of Stewardship. On the first night of the conference there will be a pagent on Stewardship, given by the young people of the First Church, Norfolk, Va. This will be followed by an address on the subject by Dr. W. H. Denison, of Dayton, Ohio.

On the morning of the second day, there will be given one hour and twenty minutes more to the discussion of Stewardship.

The committee feels that the churches may profit by this discussion and study by sending their strongest representatives to the conference, which representatives may help in creating a deeper interest in the subject of Stewardship in the churches during Stewardship months—November and December.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

ELON'S NEED OF MONEY.

Elsewhere in THE SUN will be found a presentation and a plea from President W. A. Harper. The presentation is that of the present supreme need of Elon College, and the plea is that our people ratify by their gifts that which they adopted by their votes in the Convention at Norfolk last session. That vote was that the Convention issue, in its own name, and under its promise to pay, interest bearing bonds in the sum of $500,000.00, and that $400,000.00 of these bonds be the property of Elon College and $100,000.00 be the property of Bethlehem College. The first move on the part of Elon was to have a bonding company take over and place these bonds. It was found, however, that the fee to any reliable bonding company for handling and disposing of these bonds would amount to about $20,000.00. It was, accordingly, decided that the College hold these bonds as an asset, and that the Convention, through its constituent membership, pay the annual interest on the same, and endeavor to accumulate at the same time a surplus sufficient to retire the bonds at their maturity. To this end, the College has engaged Dr. W. T. Walters and Rev. W. T. Scott, to solicit funds with which to discharge the Convention's obligation, incurred at the time when the Convention voted to issue the bonds and donate them to the college.

The Convention voted in faith, and based its pledge and promise to pay on a well-founded faith in our people. How members of the Convention now feel about their vote, and decision in the matter is told in this issue of THE SUN by President W. A. Harper.

Reduced to its simplest form the question is this: Will our people, and the friends of the College, donate funds sufficient to meet the annual interest on the bonds, and then create a fund sufficent to retire the bonds at their maturity? The answer to that question is now to be given to Dr. Walters and Bro. Scott, as they present to us the plea and the needs of Elon.

One may legitimately and properly inquire, What advantage, if any, was there to the College and the Church in issuing the bonds? Much in every way. It gave the College in its extreme need, an immediate and very valuable asset, namely, the sum of $400,000.00 in bonds with which to meet the requirements of standardization. A College, in order to be rated as standard A 1, now, must have a certain amount of holdings and monetary assets, independent of its buildings and equipment, the faculty and administrative force, to meet all requirements of standardization. The $400,000.00 in bonds, in addition to endowment and other monetary holdings now in the possession of the College, meet the financial requirements for standardization.

The College now, by possessing these bonds, is a standard A 1 college. As we, the devoted friends and supporters of the College, now make our donations to meet the interest on these bonds, and create a fund to retire them, we in that act maintain the College as a standard A 1 institution.

Will our people do this?

There are two, among many other arguments to convince and assure us that we will. First: In every instance thus far our people and the friends of the College, have arisen magnanimously, to meet every emergency of the College, and to place it ever and always on a safer and sounder footing.

Second: When we had the destructive fire of more than two years ago (that destroyed in an hour what we had been years in accumulating), in our extreme need and unpreparedness, a few generous and most magnanimous souls came to our rescue and did for that which we were wholly unprepared to do for ourselves. In that several hundred thousand dollars were donated and provided by these generous hearts, with which to build a bigger, better Elon than we had ever had, or could hope to have for years to come. These benefactors then, by coming to our rescue, made it possible for us to go on with our beloved College without any break or intermission, and furthermore made it possible for us to take ten to twenty years to do not even as much as they had done in less than two years. Our purchase and payment of these bonds promptly will both show our gratitude to our generous benefactors, and prove to ourselves and to all prospective benefactors and to posterity that we of the Christian Church love and will at all hazards stand by and support our College and keep our faith.

WANTED—$1,000.00.

THE SUN's editor just wishes all of its readers could see the beautiful church that is nearing completion at Rocky Ford in Carroll County, Va. To say that the people of the community, Brother Sorrell, Miss Morey, and the other workers, are delighted but poorly expresses the feeling one finds there. It is a modern, neat, substantial and attractive house of worship.

One entering from the front will find two rooms on either side of the hall for Sunday School purposes. Then, from this hall one enters the main auditorium 21 by 30 feet in the clear. To the left and to the right of the main auditorium are rooms to be used for day school purposes. These are 13 by 21 feet each, and are easily thrown into the main auditorium by transmissible beaver board. Either of these rooms can be entered from the front without entering the main auditorium, which is reserved for the Sunday School and church services. To all appearances, it is a striking and complete rural church, with four class rooms, either for week-day or Sunday School work, besides the main auditorium. It is on the side of a mountain that descends rapidly, and so under the rear, with very little if any excavation, we may have three large class rooms in the basement should such ever be needed.

Our mountain friends have wrought with their pastor most loyally and laboriously, giving unstintedly of time and timber and whatever else they could to help the work along. One fine friend and brother, Charlie Johnson, of Wake Chapel Church, led in directing the work and saved the situation by so doing, as we do not know a man who could have done so much and achieved so substantially with the material at hand as he did.

It is a credit to the Christian Church or to any people, or rather will be when completed. But we must have another $1,000. Bills are coming due and money is needed and the pressure is very great. They hope to have one of the school rooms ready by the last of this week and the house ready for worship within two weeks after.

If SUN readers knew what is being accomplished in Carroll County, Va., they would just want to help in this fine Christian brotherly work. We have undertaken no work anywhere that is more thoroughly appreciated and seems to achieve greater results than among our friends in Carroll County, Va. If any reader wishes to have a part in this work, the Mission Secretary will be more than happy to receive and acknowledge in THE SUN any donation that may be sent him, or to Mrs. W. V. Leathers, Treasurer, Woman's Board, Eastern Virginia Conference, or Board, North Carolina Conference. Our good women and our noble young people are most deeply interested in this great and good work, and all of us would be if we knew the need and what was being accomplished.

OUR COLLEGES AND CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

BY RAYMOND G. CLARK.

Religion must be made intelligent. It must also retain its emotional element. A life may possess cold intellectuality, so much so as to be non-responsive. Or a life may be mainly emotional—mostly action. Neither of these two elements by itself is sufficient. It is not Christianity and it is not productive of social welfare. A religion that is all action is dangerous, and a religion that is all intelligence is stale. Intelligence and emotionalism must lock arms in religion. Intelligence needs emotionalism to give it life and passion. And emotionalism needs intelligence to give it direction.

In the past, religion has had an emotional slant. Some now fear that it will become intellectually lop-sided. Our Christian Colleges are harmonizing these elements. This must ultimately be done in our local churches. Modern society will not respect our churches unless they are abreast with spiritual intelligence.

What is the greatest handicap in your church? In most cases it is a lack of trained Christian leaders. There may be those who are willing to do all they can, but that is not enough. Youth and age alike, are becoming more and more intollerant with untrained religious enthusiasm. Young people are thinking for themselves. They do not believe all they are told about religion. This does not mean that youth is losing faith in God. It rather means that youth is searching for his own faith. Thus far he has gone on inherited belief. To hold our young "for Christ and the Church" the church must make religion applicable to human needs. "Be able to give a reason for the faith that is in you" is youth's stern and just demand of all religionists. The youth of today are not willing to be led about by religious ignoramuses.

We need trained teachers. Where will we get them? A Teacher Training course in the local church will help somewhat. But unless a teacher has a background of general intelligence there is little hope. The teacher of the future must be college trained.

Every pastor who is attempting to launch a program of religious education is bewildered at the lack of leaders. In our brotherhood we have pastors who have the vision and the ability to lead their congregations in a splendid way, but they do not have the trained helpers. A pastor may be ever so able, but if his congregation is ignorant, his hands are tied. American society was once amazed by a youth starting off to college. Not so now. The general standards of education have changed. The leaders of religion in the local churches must be college trained, if they are to command the respect of the college trained multitudes. And this statement will have greater significance with the passing of years.

We have long contended that the leaders of religion have been the product of the small church colleges. It was true. It is more true now. Never in the history of American civilization has the Christian College been so in demand as it is today. And what is more, that demand will increase for these reasons!

First: In former days it was not conceded that the spiritual life of the masses need intelligence.

Second: Now the Church has awakened to the fact that religion must be made intelligent.

Third: In former days a scientific study of childhood, from the standpoint of religion, was almost unknown, and those who ventured to analyze religion and adapt it to the growing needs of the growing child, were considered critical and dangerous.

Fourth: State Universities, because of false ideas of the separation of Church and State, gave but little attention to religion, and to this day they do not specialize in religious education. A man may have all these institutions can give him, and still be woefully lacking as a religious leader.

The problems of Christian leadership are the problems of the Church Colleges. There has never been a time when it was so necessary for our churches to send their young people to our Christian Colleges as now. And as years pass, this will become an increasing necessity. It has been my observation that college students who stand by the church and prove to be its leaders are those who attend Church Colleges. I have learned not to put a great deal of dependence in State University students for religious leadership. The youth trained in a Christian College is as efficient, and as much in demand in his profession, as the State University graduate, and in addition to that, he is trained in religious leadership, without which our American civilization is doomed.

It is the specific business of Christian Colleges to make education safe for America. Education in America began in the church. Harvard and Yale originated as training schools for ministers. To this day these, and others, are making great contributions to ministerial qualification. But, if it were not for our little Church Colleges, like Defiance, Elon, and Palmer, Harvard and Yale and Union would go begging for students. Our young ministers cannot get into these Seminaries until they have had four years of college work. Remember, there are not many who want to go to these schools for ministers, Religious Education directors, missionaries, social welfare workers, who have not been trained in our Church Colleges. Yale Divinity School, Union Seminary, and others may be equipped to finish the products, but without our Church Colleges, they will have no material with which to work.

Without any exception, the greatest single factor in our church life is our colleges. Missions is great. We ought to be ashamed that such frailty has characterized our support of missions. Were it not for our colleges, however, we would have no mission fields. If we do not support our colleges, financially and "studently" we will perish. And what is true of us, is true of all denominations. The church universal must have its colleges. The greatest single, saving element for American civilization and for the peace of the world is America's Christian Colleges. The church cannot exist without them.

Let the church take this seriously. It is a fine thing to have all our churches, during these few weeks, center their activities about Christian Education. It would be a fine idea if our colleges could be kept in mind every week of the year. It can be done. How splendid it would be if each member of each church would give weekly to all benevolent causes and the church would take a per cent, say twenty-five, of the total for Christian Education. The educational offering would exceed all past records, and the amount for other benevolences would be greater, and each parent and child giving weekly for our colleges would keep the faces of our youth turned constantly toward these mighty institutions. Most of our churches may have their finances arranged for this year, but it would be grand to put this idea into the financial system of the future. A spontaneous offering once a year will not suffice.

Huntington, Indiana.

OUR LEADERS SPEAK APPROVAL.

Two weeks ago I sent a letter to the members of the Norfolk (1924) Convention and to our faithful and earnest pastors, calling their attention to the fact that the College trustees had decided not to sell the bonds given for the emergency fund here, so as to save $20,000 in brokerage fees, but to retain them, and that Dr. W. T. Walters and Rev. W. T. Scott had been employed to give the membership of our churches opportunity to meet the Convention's obligations incurred in giving of these bonds both for interest and principal. Any amount raised over and above the interest will be used to liquidate the principal on the bonds.

There is no doubt as to the high place Elon holds in the affections of our people, judged by the fine way in which our leaders have sent me their approval. Prof. P. J. Kernodle, who received one of these letters, thought it such good news that he forthwith printed it in The Christian Sun. And the Executive Committee and Board Secretaries of the Southern Christian Convention in session at Suffolk, Va., on September 22d, voted hearty and unanimous approval. The work began October 1st, and I bespeak for Dr. Walters and Brother Scott most hearty co-operation and assistance on behalf of our pastors and membership.

But I feel that I must quote some of the endorsements that have come to me, and which stouten the heart and inspire hope. There is not room to quote all:

Pres. L. E. Smith, Norfolk, Va., says: "It is with pleasure that I learn that our College is to make a determined effort to raise the funds so necessary to maintain its standing and efficiency. We have a great institution at Elon, one that is a credit to any denomination. We also have certain obligations as a Convention which we have incurred with and for it. I hope and pray that every individual member of the Christian Church will realize and arise at this hour of need to assume his share of the obligation."

Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, Durham, N. C.: "The plans, I am quite sure, are the best possible."

Rev. J. D. Wicker, Sanford, N. C.: "I give it my hearty endorsement and promise to assist in any way I can."

Pres. S. L. Beougher, Wadley, Ala.: "I have thought the matter over, and wish to state that you can put me down as unqualifiedly in favor of your plan."

Dr. W. T. Walters, one of the field workers in connection with the plan, says: "I commend the plan of the Southern Christian Convention in issuing the Elon College Bonds for two reasons; first, it provides the method of keeping Elon a standard college; second, it gives every member of the church an opportunity to make a contribution toward the 'Bigger, Better Elon.' The new plant has been financed largely through big gifts. It is well to have somewhere a place in the financial program where each of us can make a gift, large or small, to our beloved college. The raising of the interest on these bonds gives that opportunity."

Rev. E. M. Carter, Wadley, Ala.: "I feel you are doing the right thing."

Supt. Chas. D. Johnston, Elon College, N. C.: "I want to say to you that I heartily approve the idea of not selling the $400,000.00 in bonds given the College by the Southern Christian Convention, held in Norfolk, but to hold these bonds as an asset of the College and let the interest be paid to the College. This will certainly save to the church a large brokerage fee which the church would have to pay, and I see no extra benefit to the College save the use of ready money."

Rev. P. T. Klapp, Elon College, N. C., says: "I was in the Convention in Norfolk, Virginia, April, 1924, when an order passed by the Convention to issue bonds in the amount of $400,000.00, and participated in the action, and will stand by what the Convention said.

"I endorse the action of the Trustees in not selling these bonds for the amount mentioned, but in merely collecting the interest on said bonds, and I hope the people will support this plan."

Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, Suffolk, Va.: "I am willing, as President of the Alumni Association, to say that I hope the Alumni of Elon College will respond to the call of their Alma Mater, and to urge them to do what they can."

Dr. W. P. Lawrence, Elon College, N. C.: "The present purpose of the Board of Trustees of the College to collect annually the interest on these bonds and enough on the principal to retire the bonds at the end of twenty years from the date of their issue (July 1, 1924), is wise, and should receive the sympathetic co-operation of the friends of the Church and Elon College, generally."

Dr. N. G. Newman, Holland, Va.: "I have always co-operated with the plans of my church and college and shall continue to do so."

Rev. R. A. Whitten, Reidsville, N. C.: "I heartily endorse the plan adopted in the handling of the Convention bonds. I am confident the constituency of the Convention will commend the wise stand taken in this matter."

Rev. B. J. Earp, Newport News, Va.: "We should be truly proud of Elon. We have always stood loyal to her . We always will. God bless and prosper this plan."

Rev. M. F. Allen, Lynchburg, Va.: "I note with satisfaction that the bonds given by the Norfolk Convention are to be held as an asset of the College. The twenty thousand dollars brokerage fee should be worth as much to us as

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Architecture is one of the five Fine Arts; Sculpture, Painting, Poetry and Music, being the other four. Perhaps the greatest building ever erected as to cost and plan, was Solomon's Temple. It was in style a double duplicate of the Tabernacle erected in the wilderness for worship during the wilderness journey, and both were designed by God. Thus God set His seal upon fine church buildings. Ecclesiastical Architecture should maintain two characteristics: a good plan and a fine building. The church should never lose its distinct architectural lines. It should be recognized everywhere as the house of God. Whatever portrays the idea of worship and religious associations may enter into church architecture. The people are able to build better Houses of Worship, and they should do it willingly. God approves and this age demands it.

Many buildings in the country excel the houses of worship. School buildings in many places are more costly and better suited to their use than the churches. Business houses, and hotels, in many cities, excel the churches in cost and architecture. This reduces the value of the church as a spiritual institution. In ancient times no body thought of going to Jerusalem and not seeing Solomon's Temple. It was the most prominent building in the Holy City. Those who live under Christian influences, share in the prosperity that Christianity produces, are protected by the wholesome moral condition created by the church, and then withhold support from the church, are human parasites without knowing it. There is much unconscious littleness among men, and that can be found in the attitude of men toward the church. The church should be the best building in the community and supported liberally.

Some people excuse themselves from church support by saying or feeling that, "I am not a member of the church." The sinner and the moralist benefit by the church, so far as material results are concerned, as much as members. And this is upon the same principle that God uses in sending "rain on the just and the unjust." The church that represents God distributes its benefits impartially. The bad man's property is protected by good society as well as the best man's property. The same is true of his person and his family. If they build a church in your neighborhood, help to erect and furnish it, and do not wait to be solicited; offer to give. Public school teachers should all take an active interest in Sunday School and church; for there would be no Public School were it not for the church. The proof of this si in the universal fact that no unchristian nation has ever established Public Schools. That great institution is the product of Christianity, and every teacher should be an active Christian. The improvement that is being made to old churches by additions for Sunday School purposes, repainting old walls, cleaning up church grounds, all indicates a growing sense of obligation on the part of communities.

ELON LETTER.

For more than thirty years now, Dr. Martyn Summerbell has been making annual pilgrimages to Elon College as lecturer in the field of Moral and Religious Education and Church History. I remember him first at the commencement in 1895, when he preached the baccalaureate sermon and, while I know that he must have aged in years since that time, thirty years ago, there is no evidence of it in his mental vigor and alertness.

Dr. Summerbell has lead a busy life, and, while he has passed the three score years and ten, he is still a vigorous and trusted leader in the Christian Church and in interdenominational movements.

He is the author of many books on moral, religious, and historical topics. He has enjoyed unparalleled success as a lecturer in colleges and theological seminaries.

I happen at this time to be holding in my hands a list of the lectures which he has given for many years before numerous college and seminary audiences, and this list includes the following:

5 lectures on Christian Leadership;
4 lectures on The Prophet of Arabia;
6 lectures on Europe in Transition;
4 lectures on The Reformation in Germany;
4 lectures on Calvin and the Swiss Reformers;
4 lectures on The Reformation in France;
4 lectures on Reform in the Netherlands;
4 lectures on Protestantism in England;
4 lectures on The Jesuites and Jesuitism;
4 lectlres on The Genius of Protestantism;
4 lectures on Early New England, under the title of "Mayflower Series";
6 lectures on the American Indian;
8 lectures on America and the World War;
6 lectures on Six Modern Apostles;
10 lectures on Ten Stalwart Prophets; and
6 lectures on a variety of subjects, under the title of "Popular Series."

A total of eighty-three lectures, every one of them exhibiting patient research and profound mastery of the subject. The preparation of these lectures alone is the work of a life time, but this has been only an incidental work, a by-product, so to speak, of the busy activities of this erudite speaker.

In addition to these lectures and the books he has written, Dr. Summerbell has served as pastor of many elading churches and for the past several years has been president of the Starky Seminary, of Lakemont, N. Y. He has become to be known during these latter years as the Sage of Lakemont, a title which he richly deserves and thoroughly lives up to.

His lectures at Elon this year included a sermon on Sunday, to which he gave the title "The Gates of Glory." The sermon made a profound impression because it was realized by the great audience that heard his discourse that it will not be long before these gates will open for the entrance of our distinguished friend. He made the three gates which he described leading to Glory appear full of charm and inspiration for his congregation. These gates were the Christian home, the hour of meditation, and the privilege of sacrifice in the Christian service.

On Monday and Thursday he gave three lectures edaling with the Age of Chivalry. Their titles were: "The Dark Age," "The Middle Age and Feudalism," and "The Rise and Influence of Chivalry."

Dr. Summerbell left for his home Tuesday where the good wishes and earnest prayers of his Elon friends follow him.

RICHMOND CHURCH.

Sunday, September 27th, closed my five years and seven months pastorate with the First Christian Church of Richmond.

During that time it was necessary for the members and friends of the Christian Church to get acquainted with each other. The pastor had to introduce himself and the Christian Church to the people of Richmond. The following are some of the results accomplished: 158 members have been received into Church fellowship, 34 of them within the last year. A lot has been purchased in one of the most desirable sections of the city and a beautiful church building has been erected on it, representing a total value of $100,000, more than half of which has been paid. In addition to this an eight room brick parsonage within two blocks of the church has been purchased at a cost of $11,000. All current expenses for the past year have been paid and there is a balance in the treasury. The church has a Sunday School, a Ladies' Aid Society and three Missionary Societies.

The church was organized and has been fostered through the Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention. It has a number of loyal and faithful workers that have contributed largely in making possible what has been accomplished.

At the closing service of our pastorate, Dr. W. S. Golden, pastor of the Westminster Presbyterian Church, on behalf of the church presented a generous purse to the retiring pastor for which we are deeply grateful.

We feel that the Lord has wonderfully blessed the Richmond church, and we pray that His blessings may continue under the leadership of the new pastor.

VALLEY WOMAN'S WORK.

The Woman's Mission Board of the Virginia Valley Central Conference, met at Bethlehem Church, September 26, 1925. The meeting was called to order by the President, Miss Virdie Showalter, who read a scripture lesson and commented on the same, after which Rev. R. P. Crumpler led in prayer.

The Treasurer, Mrs. R. A. Larrick, read her annual report, showing a total of $514.85 raised during the year.

A motion was passed that we have a One-Day School of Missions at Mt. Olivet (R), on Saturday following Thanksgiving Day.

It was decided that we raise a Literature Fund of five cents per member, to be paid in during the month of March.

A motion was carried that the apportionments stand as last year: Woman's Societies, $400; Young People's Societies, $300; and Cradle Roll, $50.

Funds will be paid out as follows: Money from the Woman's Societies will be divided between Richmond (home) and Japan (foreign); that from the Young People's Societies will be divided between Carroll County (home) and Santa Isabel Field (foreign); and that from the Cradle Roll Department to the Christian Orphanage at Elon College (home) and Sendai, Japan (foreign).

Talks were made by Mrs. W. T. Walters, Mrs. W. A. Harper, and Rev A. W. Sparks. A pageant was given as the closing number.

Rev. A. W. Andes led in the closing prayer.

TWELVE INTERNATIONAL MOVEMENTS.

IX.—THE COLLAPSE OF DOCTRINAL CONTROVERSY.

By Rev. R. F. Brown, M. A.

Radicals usually start new movements, but they are maintained only by the interest they create among the conservative public. When the public loses interest in a movement, the movement is doomed. That is why the much advertised religious controversy has collapsed. Nobody is greatly interested in it, because it has never added anything valuable to Christianity. And there seems to be current nowadays the opinion that the hour has struck to call a halt. The need of the times is a constructive policy and program. About all these over-enthusiastic religionists have done during the last five years is shock the masses with their child-like contentions and heated debates over questions about which they know little and care less. The whole thing has been effective in calling forth sneers from the more balanced Christians and the somewhat supercilious question from the non-Christians, "What is wrong with Christianity?" They do not know that there is nothing wrong with Christianity, but perhaps they are justified in thinking there is, when they see so many so-called Christians fighting each other. These doctrinal referees and theological prize-fighters have done more to disrupt the faith of the common people, drive the non-believers further from Christ, and thwart the progress of Christianity than any set of religionists since the days of Christ and Paul. People are tired of all this agitation, and the movement must draw its last breath and find its abode among the other discarded movements for which humanity found no use.

But out of the red cauldron of doctrinal controversy the great masses must come with unclouded vision and unimpaired purposes. The pendulum must now swing toward Christ and His gospel. Humanity must swing away from this pale ghost which has overshadowed the gospel and trammeled reason.

The average pew-holder has discovered that purity of faith cannot be maintained when one group fights another group because their opinions differ. Too often people differ on questions about which they have only a limited knowledge. Most differences are not according to knowledge, but according to opinions. Honest differences may be amicably settled if there is honesty of purpose, a desire to know the truth, and a surrender of petty opinions. Stripped of all personal opinions, there is nothing left of most controversies except the carpse. Bury all personal opinions and the truth will make its own revalation and conflict will cease, for there can be no conflict of truth. Where there is conflict there is no truth. The man in the pew knows that by willfulness and stupidity certain violent thinkers have twisted the word of God into a lie, and the other group has gone out gunning for these heretics. This effort at proscription has given the gentleminded and more religious people the conviction that these battlers have misused their leadership and forfeited their right to continue as leaders. They know that the efforts of one group to force their views on another group is wrong, because ti strikes at the root of raith, and a man's faith is a part of him. It is a distinct part of the human endowment, and when men rise to a certain elevation through noble living they rightly protest the efforts of other people to superimpose a new view which disturbs their worshipful spirit and disrupts their faith. It is this fundamental truth which lies behind the religious controversy. And that is why men prefer to think God's thoughts after Him rather than man's thoughts. The world's bigots who are nosing for heresy and the radical group who are seeking something new in religion should remember that religion is not simply the staff for the feeble, or a system which may be changed to suit the inclinations of man, but a force that changes man's attitude toward God; it is the highest expression of the deepest experience, bringing men through faith to great spiritual altitudes where they may breathe an air free from pollution and refresh themselves with the sublimity and the beauty of a far-reaching landscape, which is accessible only to individuals who for themselves bring faith and knowledge to their aid.

Another thing that has contributed to the collapse of the controversy is the stupid intdlerance which has from the very beginning played such a large part in the whole affair. Sincere, fair-minded people hate intolerance. Intolerance always ends in confusion, and because of that fact it has no lease on life, whether it be found in commerce, politics, education, or religion. Biologically and psychologically, the average man knows that it is wrong to practice intolerance; that a belief in God as a loving Father who was able to bring this world into existence by whatever method best suited His purposes, is far more important than are the hair-spliting differences over which men fight each other. The fact that the babblings of the monkey are obnoxious to the Fundamentalists does not justify the Modernists in their attacks upon the Fundamentalists; and the fact that all Modernists are not saints does not justify the Fundamentalists in consigning them to eternal perdition. A glimpse at Christ will show our readers where Christ stood on the question. Jesus tolerated men of honest conviction. Lack of tolerance for those who seek the rtuth, heresy trials for honest men, and exclusion acts for churches, constitute a weak spot in the views of the exponents of religion. If Christ stood for anything, He stood for tolerance. And that individual or movement which refuses to stand for tolerance will collapse.

Intolerance begets dogmatism, and dogmatism has contributed to the collapse of religious controversies. Men have arrived at the conclusion that dogmatism in religion is just as unreasonable as it is in science. But neither the Fundamentalists nor the Modernists have been kind enough to reveal this truth to the laity. The laity have been compelled to find out for themselves; but now that they have learned this truth, they are bold to say that Christianity is inclusive and that man may have a dogma-less religion. It is not a uestion of what church a man worships in that counts in his religious experience, but it is a question of how he worships. Is the Christian Church the only place where men may worship? Is the Methodist the only apostolic church, or will the Baptist be listed as orthodox? Are the Brethren the only people who will get to heaven, or will the Presbyterians be able to squeeze in? Is immersion the only right mode of baptism, or is sprinkling permissible among those who do not know any better? Does a man's destiny depend on his opinion as to how the world was brought into existence? Shall men be deprived of heaven because they speculate about the physical resurrection and the virgin birth? No man has a right to be dogmatic upon these questions. There are other things more important, and it is to these things that man should direct his thought.

The spiritual natures of men cry out for a spiritual religion. Why then make these doc trines a kind of shibboleth to test man's orthodoxy? Why not make the truth that God is a Spirit fundamental in life? Why send men to the cross who reject our creed? Men are ceasing to think of Christianity as a dogma, or a creed. They are thinking of it as a life-producing power. And they challenge the battlers to lay down their weapons, effect a treaty, and take up the positive notes of the gospel and win the world for Christ.

BROTHER GREEN'S CHURCHES.

My church work this year has been very pleasant. I serve at Hines' Chapel, first and third Sundays of each month at 11 A. M.; Shallow Ford, 11 A. M., second Sunday; and Apple's Chapel, second Sunday at 3 P. M. and fourth Sunday at 11 A. M.

We continued our meeting at Apple's Chapel from the fourth Sunday in July, closing on Friday evening following, with 42 accessions to the church. One had previously joined, and we hope to receive others before the year comes to a close. Brother J. Frank Apple assisted in the song service, and Brother A. Frank Isley, who had seen eighteen years of service as pastor of this church and people, preached one time for us, using as his subject "Go Forward." His text was, "Speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward," —Exodus 14: 15. Though feeble in body, yet with earnestness of heart, he delivered a splendid sermon, which so far as I know was his last message from the pulpit. May we heed his admonition to "Go Forward" in Christian service, and be ready to go forward to receive the crown.

Beginning the first Sunday in August, we held our meeting at Hines' Chapel. Rev. L. L. Wyrick was with us from start to finish. He did all of the preaching, and did it well and to good acceptance even though it was his home community. Fourteen have been received into the church as a result of the meetings and we hope yet to receive others.

At Shallow Ford, we began our meeting on the second Sunday in August, with Rev. R. A. Whitten as helper; also we had the Federation of Christian Workers of Burlington present to help us in the evening services. All were delighted with Brother Whitten's sermons and splendid services were otherwise rendered. We heartily appreciate the co-operation and untiring efforts of Brother Charlie Walker and his band of Christian workers, which made possible the results of the meeting. The meeting closed on Friday evening with twenty accessions, three have since joined, and we hope others still may come in as a result.

Besides the numbers above mentioned who have joined the churches, many have been reclaimed, the churches revived, and others converted, who may join the churches above mentioned or elsewhere.

Besides enjoying these meetings on my own charge, it has been my pleasure and privilege to be with Brother L. L. Wyrick at Happy Home, Brother J. F. Apple at Bethlehem, Brother R. L. Williamson at Grace's Chapel, Brother J. M. Allred at Randleman, and in the absence of the pastor, Rev. J. H. Dollar, at my home church, Parks' Cross Roads, at which place Rev. Thomas Andrews of the Friends' Church came to us and rendered valuable service.

To God be all the praise for all that may have been accomplished through His name.

MISSIONS

Rev. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

STEWARDSHIP AND PROMOTION.

Warren H. Denison, Secretary.

ORDER NOW.

It will be a wise move to order the Stewardship study books that you decide to use for your church Stewardship study classes which begin November 1st. November and December are the Stewardship period in the Christian Church. Naturally the last half of December must be given to Christmas matters. So in order to get in a six weeks period of study classes, it will be necessary to begin strictly on November 1st, for those six weeks will slip away so rapidly. The Christian Publishing Association has no way of knowing how many books of a given kind to keep in stock If you order the last minute, you may find the stock exhausted. You had better decide now what text books you will use and order to prevent delay.

If you need suggestions, this Bureau will be glad to give assistance. That is our business, and we are glad to assist. We have issued a new four page folder giving lists of approved books with titles of their chapters, pages and prices.

BURLINGTON, N. C.

We spent from September 17th to the 22nd with the Burlington N. C. Church, Rev. G. O. Lankford, D. D., pastor, in a week of intensive Stewardship work, getting ready for their annual every member canvass, October 11th. The week was given to Stewardship instruction, clinical work for the canvass, Bible study and chart exercises. While there, we spoke at the Rotary Club meeting and the Piedmont Ministerial Association of the Christian Church. At Elon College we spoke at the chapel services and before one of the classes of Religious Education. This is a try-out case of the value of spending several days with our largest churches that have very large budgets to raise. It was a delightful experience and a busy week,

HOW TO DO IT.

Mr. C. E. Booz, McPherson, Kansas, is Stewardship Secretary for the Western Convention, and a layman who attempts to keep in touch with the best methods. He sends us some suggestions for your November and December Stewardship program for your local church. We pass them on.

1. Ask each family to read and explain to the children at least one real good book on Christian Stewardship.

2. Secure the set of twelve Stewardship Mottoes for fifty cents and use them in the church, placing them on the walls of auditorium and Sunday School rooms, calling attention to them, having them read frequently in concert, commit them to memory, and use their messages as a basis for sermons.

3. Ask each person in Sunday School to learn at least one verse of scripture on tithing.

4. Offer a prize for the best essay on Stewardship written by any Sunday School pupil.

5. Show how easy it would be to finance the church if all tithed as taught in the scriptures.

THOROUGH EVERY MEMBER CANVASS

Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, Suffolk, Va., says that he is planning a series of Stewardship services this fall looking to a thorough Every Member Canvass and gives eight definite reasons, as follows, why he believes every church should use this method.

1. The Every Member Canvass, when effectively and efficiently used, reaches the individual members of the church, and thus affords every member an opportunity for personal service to the church through his giving.

2. The Every Member Canvass makes possible the use of a large number of people, and this gives expression to their religious life.

3. The Every Member Canvass will promote the spirit of fellowship through the personal touch involved in making the canvass.

4. The Every Member Canvass may become an avenue for establishing contacts with the unchurched.

5. The Every Member Canvass systematizes the business of the church.

6. The Every Member Canvass will increase the finances of the church and thus give new impetus to the things of the Kingdom.

7. The Every Member Canvass develops workers who can be used in other forms of service.

8. The Every Member Canvass presupposes a budget, which is a wholesome and sound thing for a church to have.

Total collections for month of September,—$792.20.

While we are profoundly grateful to the schools named above for their liberal offerings and to the other schools which contribute monthly to Missions, it is noted with regret that there are quite a few schools in the Southern Christian Convention not yet sufficiently interested in enlarging the kingdom and building up schools and churches elsewhere to make a monthly contribution. For the next few months these contributions, not otherwise designated, will go to the support and extension of our mountain work in Carroll County, Va., and it is devoutly hoped that many of our schools not already doing so will vote for and send us one offering a month for this most worthy and needy work of the Kingdom.

Fraternally,
J. O. Atkinson,
Mission Secretary.

OUR LEADERS SPEAK APPROVAL.

it would be to anyone else. Your enlarged program will certainly mean a greater Elon, and to you I pledge my loyal support."

Dr. H. Shelton Smith, Chicago, Ill., says: "I was happy to learn that Dr. W. T. Walters and Rev. W. T. Scott are to devote their entire time to field work in behalf of Elon College. This is indicative of a forward movement, and these capable leaders should receive the heartiest support from every local Christian Church in the Southland. An enlarged plant requires commensurate financial support, and unless the college is adequately financed its indispensable work will be seriously handicapped. Our colleges are the battleground of the Christian Church; if we cannot sustain them on a first class educational basis, the rank and file of our membership will be doomed to mediocre leadership. The Christian Church cannot rise higher than the vision and statesmanship of its ministers, directors of religious education, and lay workers. The strategy of the Southern Christian Convention is to fortify Elon College. I believe in the people of the Southern Christian Convention. They will!"

Rev. J. F. Morgan, Norfolk, Va., R. F. D. 3, says: "The plan not to sell the bonds, but to hold them as an asset of the College and to have the interest paid to the College, as explained in your letter of September 11, 1925, seems to me to be the best solution to the problem, and I gladly give it my endorsement."

In conclusion, let me say that like Dr. H. Shelton Smith, I believe in the Christian Church. They have given us a great plant at Elon and we have all the students we can accommodate. Our needs now are financial. I am sure God will lead our great-hearted people to provide for this need also. In His name and for His cause, Dr. Walters and Brother Scott go forth. The victory they shall achieve will be of His disposing and with that Elon shall be safe, and in it be happy and content.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

October 18, 1925.

Subject: "Paul Writes to the Corinthians."

Golden Text: "Now abideth, faith, hope, love, these three; and the greatest of these is love."—i. Cor. 13: 13.

Lesson: i. Cor. 12: 1-13: 13.

Devotional Reading: i. John 4: 7-13.

Reference Material: i. Cor. 1: 1-2: 5; i. Jno. 2: 10-11, 4: 16-20.

Henry Drummond has written a little book entitled "The Greatest Thing in the World." It is a masterly and inspiring exposition of the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians. Every Sunday School teacher should read that little book at least twice. Every Sunday School teacher should try to pursuade the members of their class to read that little book. And every Sunday School teacher and every member of the Sunday School class should live that book every day in the year. To do that, and to get others to do that would solve all the problems of the world.

What is the greatest thing in the world? Men asked that question in Paul's day and they have been asking it through all the years. Men have been answering that question too. Some say one thing and some say another. It would be interesting to pass out ballots among the average congregation on Sunday morning and have the members vote as to what they thought was the greatest thing in the world. How many votes do you suppose love would get? If Paul were present, love would get at least one vote, and it would probably be marked in capital letters. For Paul, LOVE was The Greatest Thing in the World.

Paul begins his letter by contrasting love with some things which the members of the Corinthian Church held in high esteem. There were tongues—the gift of ecstatic speech, the power of oratory. They were especially coveted by the Corinthians, and there are many today who prize highly the gift of oratory. But Paul says that ongues, and he would say today, the gift of oratory and eloquence, is only a sounding brass, a noise even as of a clanging cymbal. Mr. Preacher, Mr. Sunday School Teacher, it is not primarily a matter of how well you can give expression to oratorical flights or golden eloquence; ti is a matter of how much you love your people or your pupils. Paul says that the gift of prophecy, the knowledge of mysteries, yea, even all knowledge, the faith that removes mountains, amount to nothing unless one has love. Paul says that it does not matter half so much how much a man gives as to the motive which prompts his gift; that it is not so much a question as to whether one goes as a missionary, or remains as a minister, or takes a Sunday School class, as to the motive which prompts one to do these things. One can even become a martyr, but unless he is a martyr for love, it profits him nothing. We will do well to examine our motives and see to it that love is the dynamic power in our lives.

After contrasting love with other things, Paul analyzes it. I remember as a boy that mother had a large lamp that hung in the dining room, over the dining room table. It was a gorgeous thing with nearly a hundred "spangles" or pendants hanging around the shade. When the lamp was lighted, those "spangles" would often catch up the light and break it up into all the colors of the rainbow. It was a glad day in my life, when giving way to more modern things, the old lamp was taken from its place and consigned to the attic. I went up there later and appropriated for myself several of those "spangles" or prisms and revelled in the glory of the effects I could produce with them.

Now Paul does something like this with love. He takes love and passes it, as it were, through a prism, and thus breaks it up into tis component parts. He finds, that like a ray of sunlight, it has many elemental factors, and he enumerates, or describes them.

Love suffereth long—love is patient. It "puts up" with a great many things. It bears all things.

"And is kind." Kindness is the natural expression of love. One who loves cannot be unkind. Acts of kindness—how trivial they sometimes are, the gracious greeting, the card of remembrance, the visit to one who is sick, the little unexpected act, the little delicacy sent to one who is not well, the hundred and one things, little things but always big things, for they are kind things, the expression of love. Kindness in all the relations of life would solve all the problems of life.

Love envieth not. Thou shalt not covet—that command has no terrors for love. For love envieth not. Here is the spirit of generosity in our relations with others. It is sometimes very difficult to keep free from envy when others excel, especially if they excel in our own line of activity. But love rejoices in the good fortune that comes to another.

Love vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up. Love never gets the swell head, nor struts, peacock-like before others. Here is the great quality of humility, not self-depreciation, but the consciousness that all that we have and are comes not of ourselves, but from God, that quality without which no man can ever be great in the true sense of greatness.

Doth not behave itself unseemingly. Love has good manners, it is courteous. As a matter of fact courtesy is a matter of respect for others, and love is just that. "Politeness has been defined as love in little things." A man may be uneducated, but if he loves folks he will not be discourteous. In this day of books on etiquette, we will do well to learn the first lesson on etiquette. A man who loves folks is pretty safe. He may break some petty rule as to which fork to use, but he will not be discourteous.

Seeketh not its own. Love is unselfish. If any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and come after me.

Is not provoked. Love has the power of self-control. It is a matter of good temper. The more love in the home, the less divorce in the courts.

Taketh no account of evil. There are some people who keep account, bookkeeper-like of the wrongs and slights that people have done them. Love does not keep books. It takes no account of evil. It forgives and forgets. It does not need to keep books.

Rejoiceth not in unrighteousness, but rejoiceth in the truth. There are some who seem to take delight in another's misfortune or downfall. There are some who feast upon every bit of scandal which they hear. There are those who see the evil in life and in the world. But these are not those who love. Love is hurt in the things that are unrighteous and rejoices in the truth.

Love beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things. Read these words and ponder over them and examine your own life as to how much love you have in the light of these qualities as revealed by Paul.

Love never faileth. That is the reason Paul makes such a strong case for love. It never fails. It endures. It abides. Therefore we are to love.

Jesus did not ask us to love one another—He commanded it.

Dr. Jefferson recently preached a sermon on the New Commandment. He said that people confess sins of every kind and degree, but so far as he was concerned no one had ever confessed that he had broken this new commandment of Jesus'. How about you? Are you loving folks, everybody? Hereby shall all men know that we are His disciples, if we have love one for another.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

October 18, 1925.

Topic: "What is Expected of a Christian Citizen?"—Mic. 6: 8; Tit. 3: 1-8.

Citizenship Day.

Some Bible Hints.

The citizen should first of all be just, take no mean advantages, play fair. (V. 8.)

To love kindness is not merely to do kindness, but also to encourage it, foster philanthropy, mercy, care for the weak. (V. 8.)

Obedience to law is the mark of a citizen. Without it, we have anarchy. (V. 1.)

Hate, strife, anger, jealousy, malice, and such things are anti-social, and yet how common they are in our politicians! (V. 3.)

Suggestive Thoughts.

The citizen should know how the country, State, county, city, and town, are governed, the duties of officials, and the work of their departments. Ignorance is costly.

Citizens should take an interest in welfare organizations, public as well as private.

Good citizens will not only obey the laws, but will defend them against attack. They will help the authorities to enforce law, and force slack officials to do their duty.

A Few Illustrations.

The foreigner is often dazed because he does not understand our institutions. Endeavorers can help him, first to speak the language, and then to grasp the American spirit.

We should take pride in our town and our street, as we take pride in our appearance.

The best citizens are not so much governed by the law's "don't do that," as by good example, or by others inspiring them to do fine things.

To Think About.

Why do we need to train our future citizens?

How does Christian Endeavor help to train citizens?

What are the marks of a good citizen?

"Unless good citizens hold office, bad citizens will."—Anon.

"Roosevelt prepared for citizenship by making himself physically strong. He took exercise religiously. America expects us to be healthy."—J. J. Prosper.

"Private rights must yield to public rights. He is simply foolish who believes that 'personal liberty' exists. It never has existed in civilized society."—Z. Crane.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

The fall of the year is here, and with it comes increased expenses. School books to buy for 100 children is no small expense, and shoes and clothing for 100 children. How would you like to have the Superintendent's place for a few months.

We plan and study the expense problem as hard as anything we do, and try in every way to keep our expense bill as low as possible, but at the end of the month it seems to run up as usual.

We think at the end of the month surely our bills will not be so heavy as last month, but something will come in that we had not expected that runs it up, and thus it goes. We do have this consolation. We have as small per capita cost as any other institution in our State that we know, and we console ourselves some.

We want to impress on our Sunday Schools the fact that we have had an extremely dry year, and on account of the dry weather which we have had this entire year our crops are very short and our expense will be more than usual. We want to plead with you to get your Sunday School to make monthly offerings to help us, if you are not already on the list. We want also to ask all Sunday Schools which are behind in their monthly contributions and have money for the orphanage to mail it in. We need it.

We want to also impress on your mind that we are building a new building and that your church has been asked to make a contribution to help finance it. If your church has not raised as much as we have asked you for, will you raise it right away so that we will know how much to expect from your church.

The contractor is calling for money. When we built the "Baby Home" here, we were able to pay every bill as it was presented and when the building was finished it was paid for. Shall we not do sa well in this new building program. If your church and every other church will do its part we will do still better.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

SUCCESS.

LESSON: ii. Peter 1.

"The hand of the dilligent makes rich."—Prov. 10: 4.

"Give the more diligence that ye be found in peace without spot and blameless in His sight."—ii. Peter 3: 14.

"For if ye do these things ye shall never stumble: for thus shall be richly supplied unto you the entrance into the eternal kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."—ii. Peter 1: 10-11.

Believe in yourself, believe in humanity, believe in the success of your undertakings. Fear nothing and no one. Love your work. Work, hope and trust. Keep in touch with today. Teach yourself to be practical and up to date and sensible. You cannot fail."—Selected.

Prayer.—Our Father, we thank Thee for Thy watchcare and protection during the past week, and for all Thy blessings. We pray for grace and strength and love for the duties of today. Help us to be partakers of divine nature and to escape the corruption of the world. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

TUESDAY.

MEN ARE FOUR.

Whosoever shall become great among you shall be your servant."—Mark 10: 43.

"Men are four as follows: He who knows and knows he knows. He is wise follow him. He who knows and knows not that he knows. He is asleep, wake him. He who knows not and knows not that he knows not. He is a fool, shun him. He who knows not and knows that he knows not. He is a child, teach him."—Arabian Proverb.

Man is made for service—of body, mind, will and spirit. These four must be developed in a well balanced proportion in order to produce harmony and render a worthy service. But such a well balanced life cannot come except through Jesus Christ in whom we may grow "unto a perfect man."

Prayer.—Our Father, we are thankful for another day. Make it ours and us thine. Give us keenness of vision to see our possibilities and opportunities, and help us to strive for the mastery on all things Thou wouldst have us be. In Christ's name we ask it. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

CONTENTION AND STRIFE.

LESSON: Phil. 2.

"A fools lips enter into contention, and his mouth calleth for stripes."—Prov. 18: 6.

"If it be possible, as much as in you lieth, be at peace with all men (one another)."—Rom. 12: 18.

"Do nothing through faction or vainglory, but in lowliness of mind, each counting the other better than himself."—Phil. 2: 3.

"Forget it. Drop the subject when you cannot agree. There is no need to be bitter, because you know you are right."—Anon.

Prayer.—Our Father, we thank Thee for another day and its provisions for us. Give us love with one accord and one mind. Forbid that we shall do anything through strife or vainglory, but give us the mind of Christ in all things. In His name we ask it. Amen.

THURSDAY.

SOUL SERVICEABLENESS.

"Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven."—Matt. 6: 10.

In all the relations which constitute what we call our social life, we are dealing with beings who are capable of understanding development, and what we do is for that development. We are not working "from hand to mouth" just for ourselves, day by day, but we are working for eternity and for results which if they were thrust upon us now would stagger us. However small our part in life, our business is not to destroy nor to abandon, but to transform. Instead of winning heaven we are called upon to make earth as near like heaven as possible. This will give us a foothold for our faith in the facts and experiences of every day. It makes room for every talent. It consecrates science, industry and art as well as religion, to the service of God. This is soul service.

Prayer.—Our Father, we thank Thee for another day and for a soul to live it out. Whatever our task, may we do it well and spend our lives for the good of things around us. In His name we ask it. Amen.

FRIDAY.

DIVINE DISCIPLIN.

LESSON: Hebrews 12: 5-7.

"Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth."
"Nor faint when thou art rebuked of him."

In the time of the Crimean War, an officer in the British Army had in his command a dissipated subaltern, who was also his ward. The young man when under the influence of liquor was so insubordinate that not infrequently he landed in the guard house. On one occasion he reeled into the officers mess and behaved so badly that his guardian then and there administered a rebuke that sent him to the hospital for repairs. It was a cruel sort of manhandling; but it transformed the youth, who never drank another drop thereafter in his whole life.

God knows when heroic measures are called for. His severity is always kind. In the prophecy of Malachi, it is written, "He shall sit as a refiner of silver." The picture is that of a refiner who, having kindled the fire under the crucible, sits beside it watching for the moment when the surface of the molten metal shall reflect his face. When the supreme moment is reached the fire is quenched. God is a careful watcher, and He never suffers His people to be tried beyond that they are able to bear. He has promised not to "break the bruised reed or quench the smoking flax." His purpose is to make the best of us.—Rev. David James Burrell.

Lord's Prayer.— (All the Circle joining.)

Closing Prayer.—May we be cleansed and strengthened against besetting sins, and made fit for the Master's service; may we become useful in helping others to a new spiritual life and strength. Amen.

SATURDAY.

THE LOVE THAT CONQUERS.

LESSON: Luke 15: 25-28.

"He was angry and would not go in."

On the basis of strict justice, the ugliness of the elder brother's conduct to the average mind may not appear altogether reprehensible. Had he not endured the rigor and grind of the work and should he not have the highest reward? Had not the younger brother lived in ease and wanton pleasure, and should not he have the condemnation and suffer the penalty of his sins?

But we simply can not live on the basis of strict, stern justice. Rule out love, and greed and selfishness would become justifiable, and even pride and scorn, war and hate. Nay, all this and much more becomes a practical certainty, because nothing but love can quench the lurid flames of passion in the breasts of men. Without love, the world becomes a charnel house, and life in any worthy sense is utterly impossible.

It is love, a father's love that holds up the light for us to see the real sinfulness of the elder brother. So it is with many of our own sins. Seen in the light of our Father's love, our little meannesses, our criticisms, and gossip, our pride and evtravagance are no longer trifles. They are hideous vices which call for repentance and reformation.

After all, there is only one really big and terrible failure in life. It is the failure to love! And however numerous our successes may have been, if we have failed to love, we have disappointed the Father and made bankruptcy of life. —Rev. Geo. W. Barton.

Prayer.—Though hating sin, may we learn to love the sinner; and may we ever remember that, but for the greatness and fulness of the Divine Love, we would never have heard of a Saviour or known the blessedness of redemption. Amen.

SUNDAY.

THE COVENANT GOD.

"The Lord our God made a covenant with us." —Deut. 5: 2.

Without the knowledge of the covenant made with them by Jehovah, there could have been no Israel in the sense that the Bible depicts to us that great people. All through their life the thought of the covenant comforts them; it rallies them in failure, revives them in times of doubt, and confirms them in victory. The nation lived by its faith that its life was God-directed.

These sure promises of God are ours as well as Israel's. There is no past tense in the mercies of God. To our modern nations, if they will accept it, He offers His covenant. Moreover, in our Lord Jesus Christ the Father has made a new and more glorious covenant with man. He covenants with His church, through His Son, to bless and forward its work, if it is faithful to His purpose and commandments. He covenants with us, that is, He agrees to succor us, save us, sustain us, to pardon us in sin and confirm us in all goodness, if we will join ourselves to Him.

Lift up your hearts, ye people! "The Lord our God has made a covenant with us."—Rev. H. D. Ranns.

In South America there are still immense tracts of country utterly unknown to white men, and inhabited by tribes, some of whom have never yet been described.

There is a well authenticated story of a tribe of Brizilian Indians who live in underground dwellings by day, and venture out only at night.

The sun is painful to their eyes, but, like cats, they can see in the dark. These people have powers of smell equal to those of the dog or wolf, and they can follow the trail of any animal purely by scent.

Dr. J. S. Halstead, the oldest physician and Free Mason in the United States, died recently at the advanced age of 107 years. He was the progenitor of eighty descendents. Dr. Halstead was for a year the medical advisor of Henry Clay, the great American compromiser. This was from 1851 to 1852, the date of Clay's death.

Kiddies' Korner

MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT, Editor.

Dear Kiddie Korner Pollyanna:

October FIRST!—The contest is over—What is the name of the BEST Pollyanna????? Write me your Pollyanna letter AT ONCE—Don't wait a minute! Tell me all your Pollyanna did for YOU—Tell me her name—or his name—Write plainly with ink so I won't have to put on Gramma's spectacles to read a single letter—and Oh yes,—dont forget to tell me if you enjoyed the contest—I know you did though—But—Kiddies—write that letter—QUICK—I want to send this prize to the BESTEST Pollyanna in the Kiddie Korner——

Now, what??? Well, I heard from Peter Rabbit yesterday—A great—big—wonderful story—all about him and his funny ways—He is getting scared this early in the Fall—he is afraid of Bobby Smith's Rabbit box—You know about that?—Poor Peter—he is going to have another birthday SOON—yes, sir-ee—that means your editor will tell YOU all about it too—She has been invited already—Oh, oh—What fun, these birthday parties are too—

Pollyanna—do you want your PRIZE???? Write all your Pollyanna did for you—quickly—send it to me, the letter I mean—Oh, hurry Kiddies—do—I want to see what you played for your Pollyanna—

Rush away, now dears—find your pen—and ink—Make it snappy as can be—We can't hardly wait to hear—

OVER THE ROOFS.

To Nina Lincoln, fresh from a big roomy country home, the tiny flat seemed inconvenient and cluttered, while the view from the windows over the dingy roofs of adjoining dwellings was certainly a sad contrast to the outlook on gardens and orchards which she had enjoyed from babyhood.

After her father's death she and her mother had stayed on in the old home, taking a few summer boarders to help out a slender income, but now Mrs. Lincoln had followed her husband, and Frank, Nina's brother, having graduated from a dental college, had decided to open up an office in the city. And so the big, white house under the maples was rented, and the two young people had taken up their abode on the top floor of the tall apartment building.

Nina had tried hard to make a pleasant home of the four small rooms, and they were really most attractive, but she could do nothing to improve the appearance of the surrounding housetops, where marauding cats and lines of flapping clothes were the only bits of life and color in the dull, drab monotony.

"I don't see how I can endure it very long," she said one day to sweet-faced Miss Abby Long, who had hobbled in on her crutches from across the hall.

Crippling rheumatism, which had confined Miss Abby to the apartment house for years, had not prevented her from becoming a good angel to the frequently changing tenants. From the first, she had watched over the wistful-eyed little Nina, proving as kind a neighbor as one could find even in the country, and the young girl had come to depend upon her for advice, and to miss her if she failed to pay her usual daily call.

"What is it you can't endure, dearie?" she now asked with a gentle smile.

"Why, the view," Nina answered. "Nothing but roofs, and roofs, stretching away for miles. If they were colored and gabled, as they are in the country, it wouldn't be so bad, but they're just flat patches of gravel and tar and bricks. They are hideous, Miss Abby."

"I know," Miss Abby replied, "and I used to feel just as you do about them, dear, but I don't any more. You see, I don't look at them now. I look at what's over them."

Nina lifted her brown eyes to a sky of vivid, sunlit blue over which the soft clouds floated.

"Yes, you can forget the horrid roofs if you look at the sky," she agreed. "That is, on a day like this."

"You can at any time," Miss Abby told her. "There's never a day when the sky isn't beautiful. Clear or overcast, in sunlight or in storm, it is wonderful to watch. And since I've made a practice of watching it, I don't mind the roofs a bit."

"I see," Nina said softly.

"And it's so about everything, dear," Miss Abby went on. "I've seen how homesick and lonesome you were—"

"Oh, I have been!" Nina exclaimed. "But I didn't mean any one to guess."

"You've been a brave girl," Miss Abby assured her, "and I don't believe anybody else has guessed, but I—"

"You're a darling!" Nina declared.

"I've had lots of trouble," Miss Abby said simply, "and maybe, for that reason I notice other folk's troubles quicker than some. It's one of the compensations, I guess. Anyway, I knew you were unhappy and I've been wanting to tell you the sky was there."

"It will help me with the roofs," Nina said thoughtfully; "but, Miss Abby, how can it help with the other things, missing the old home, and mother, and all?"

"Just as the tender sky is always above the troubled city," Miss Abby explained, "so the Father's tender love is always bending above our lives, and if we only remember to lift our eyes to it, we shall surely find help and comfort."

There was a little pause. Then Nina spoke in a low tone.

"I've not been to church since I came to the city and I've neglected my prayers and Bible reading, too. I didn't seem to have time for such things, and sometimes I've felt it didn't matter. But I see now that I've been making a great mistake. I've been looking only at the roofs of life. Now, dear Miss Abby, I'm going to begin looking over the roofs."—Grace E. Craig in Kind Words.

JUST SUPPOSE.

If all the lads and lassies should remember for a day,
To do their errands and their tasks as surely as they play.
Should hang their hats and jackets up, and put away their toys,
Should remember that the garden is the place to make a noise—
Why, what a pleasant world for mothers this would be!
How very many happy mother-faces we should see!
For children don't remember, as everybody knows,
But if the children should—why—just suppose!

If all the children's mothers turned forgetful in a day,
If instead of taking care of toys, they should throw them all away,
Forget to bake the cookies, and forget the tales to tell,
Forget to kiss the aching bumps and make the bruises well—
How very many melancholy little folks we'd see!
For mothers all remember, as everybody knows,
But if the mothers shouldn't—why—just suppose!

Youth's Companion.

SHIPS.

The tall ships go a-sailing,
A-sailing o'er the sea.
None of those enormous ships
Seems a friend to me.

Here I have a wee craft
With all its sails outspread
That does not sail so far away;
It stays near me instead.

I take it down to lake or pond
Or river where I play,
Where I can be a captain bold
The whole long happy day.

My passengers are bits of bark,
Leaves, moss, or tiny twig.
And once I had a live fish,
But it was much too big.

FORLINES.

Mrs Mazie Francis Forlines, the daughter of John and Elizabeth Aerington, was born October 28th, 1848, and died August 5th, 1925, at her home near Buffalo Lithia Springs, Mecklenberg Co., Va., at the age of seventy-six years, nine months and seven days.

August 15th, 1872, she was married to E. H. Forlines, who died about ten years ago. She is survived by one son, Amos, with whom she had lived at the old home since the death of her husband. There are also living three daughters and several grandchildren, and one great-grandchild. The daughters are Mrs. Wesley Williamson, Mrs. Hammett Aerington, and Mrs Ivy Currin, all of Mecklenberg County, Va.

More than a quarter of a century ago, she and her husband joined Hebron Christian Church. Sister Forlines' home was one of hosptiality. Friends always found a welcome there. It was her delight to give them the best her home afforded. Even in her declining years, she would forget herself for the pleasure of others.

The once happy, hospitable home is broken up. Loved ones weep, but there is comfort in the hope of meeting mother in heaven.

C. E. NEWMAN.

WELCH.

Mrs. Annie J. Welch, wife of Deacon Daniel S. Welch, was born March 1, 1887, and died almost suddenly, September 25, 1925.

She married Daniel S. Welch July 21, 1896, and they had ten children—seven boys and three girls—all of whom are living, except one child which died in infancy.

She was a very kind and obliging neighbor, and they vied with each other in sympathy. She was a loving wife and devoted mother, and the law of her home was the law of kindness.

She professed faith in Christ when young and joined the Church. She had been a faithful member of Providence Church for twenty years. She was so regular in her attendance that her absence from any service excited surprise. She was so good and true that she will be sorely missed.

She was buried at Providence, and her funeral was attended by a large congregation who went away feeling that she had not lived in vain.

McCAULEY.

Died at her home, Union Ridge, North Carolina, Mrs. Rosa McCauley, wife of W. A. McCauley, September 23, 1925; aged 68 years, 6 months and 3 days. She and Bro. McCauley were united in marriage, June 1, 1879, and to them were born four children. Her husband and three children survive her.

In early life she confessed Christ and united with Union Christian Church; and though unable to attend services for some years before her death, she loved and trusted Him who saved her and kept her.

Her relatives and friends are many, and she loved them all. She suffered much; but at the end of her earthly pilgrimage, she quietly fell asleep and now awaits the glorious awakening on the resurrection morning. The funeral services were conducted by the writer, and the interment was in the Union Church cemetery.

May the blessed Saviour comfort those who mourn.

P. H. FLEMING.

SINE.

Charles William Sine was born June 15, 1848, and died August 18, 1925, aged 77 years, 2 months and 3 days. Bro. Sine was a quiet, well-behaved man, and highly esteemed of all who knew him. He was a faithful member of the Palmyra Christian Church. The deceased was never married, and he and a brother lived together at Hawkinstown. He is survived by two brothers and three sisters. Funeral services were held at the Hawkinstown U. B. Church, August 19, 1925.

IN MEMORIAM.

Whereas our beloved brother and fellow deacon, of Bethlehem Christian Church, David McClenny, who had served in this capacity for 46 years, has been called from this life, and

Whereas in his going we feel a sense of loss and shall miss his faithful counsels and helpful suggestions,

We, as the Board of Deacons of the church which he loved, wish to record our appreciation of his long and faithful service, and bow in submission to the will of Him whose we are and whom we desire to serve.

Therefore, be it resolved, that this expression of our appreciation of his service and of our regret for his going be recorded in the minutes of our church and that a copy be sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

By Rev. S. M. Lynam.

Dr. Hough Acquitted.—

Dr. Lynn Harold Hough, against whom were charges of heresy preferred by a brother minister, was acquitted in the report of the committee on the case to the Detroit Methodist Episcopal conference. All acquainted with Dr. Hough's position were sure that the charges preferred would not be sustained.

Anti-Evolutionists Chose Young Bryan.—

William Jennings Bryan, Jr., has been chosen president of the Anti-Evolutionists Society of this country. He is a young attorney of Los Angeles, California. Dr. John Roach Straton is chairman of the campaign committee of the society. The Anti-evolutionists intend to press their cause against the teaching of evolution in the public schools of the country.

A Long Island Venice.—

A lagoon two hundred and forty feet wide filled with water from the great South bay, canals flowing under pile-set villas, a fleet of gondolas imported from Venice, a huge swimming pool—these were the particulars of a Long Island real estate scheme announced by the Meister Builders, Incorporated. This plan will probably appeal to many romantic Americans.

Armistice Sunday.—

The Commission on international justice and goodwill of the Federal Council of Churches has sent out plans for the observance of Armistice Sunday on November 8th. President Coolidge is commended for refusing to makeArmistice day a national defense day. It is the time the commission believes, for spreading the gospel of justice and good will among the nations. They are urging the churches to hold community services under local civic, labor, patriotic and other uplifting organizations.

Canadian Presbyterian Pulpits Empty.—

The continuing Presbyterian Church of Canada is having trouble with empty pulpits. At a meeting of the Montreal Presbytery it was decided to levy a charge of twenty per cent of the local budget for the purpose of hiring supply ministers to fill the between three and four hundred pulpits said to be empty. This branch of the Presbyterian Church remained out of the United Church of Canada when the merger of the Methodists, Congregationalists, and Presbyterians took place. The shortage is probably due to the fact that most of the ministers went into the United Church. The Canadian Presbytery felt that the filling of the empty pulpits was the most important task now confronting the home mission department.

Von Hindenburg Holds the Helm.—

The German Nationalists have been attempting to obstruct the governmental policies looking toward security, and striving to prevent Germany's attending the security conference to be held in Switzerland. The President, former Field Marshall Von Hindenburg, has firmly opposed them, and Germany will be represented at the conference by Chancellor Luther and Foreign Minister Stresemann. It is understood that they will be clothed with the same power as the British, French, and Italian representatives are vested with. A London dispatch discloses the fact that the security pact pledges England to armed intervention in case the boundaries of any of the signatory powers are molested en masse by another of the powers or in case troops are mobilized in the demilitarized Rhine area by any of the powers. This will liberate German territory from foreign domination, and Von Hindenburg has informed the people of Germany that nothing will be tolerated which interferes with the policy of the government.

Whose Debts We Carry.—

The American tax payers carry the debts of nineteen nations. All these are European with two exceptions, Nicaragua and Liberia. The total amount of these debts with interest up to May 15th, last, goes up to $12,151,238,393.39. They are owed by the following powers, England owing the most, and France holding second place: Great Britain, $4,544,000,000; France, $4,210,-556,448.27; Italy, $2,138,543,852.77; Belgium, $480,503,983.61; Russia, $255,147,692; Poland, $178,560,000; Czechoslovakia, $117,570,095.70; Yugoslavia, $65,414,997.98; Rumania, $46,508,-661.27; Austria, $30,550,750.35; Esthonia, $17,-794,020.28; Greece, $17,625,000; Armenia, $14,-959,479.94; Finland, $8,910,000; Latavia, $6,-352,139.45; Lithuania, $6,030,000; Hungary, $1,958,412.50; Nicaragua, $110,590.28; Liberia, $22,568.75.

Most of this money was borrowed during the war, and was lent to the nations on better terms than could be secured at banks. In order to make these loans the government floated five Liberty Loans, and so the tax payers of this country are carrying that enormous debt as a result of the war.

Select Best Hymns.—

We are always interested when someone comes forward with a selection of something which he calls the best. We mentioned the selection of children's hymns which were considered best in a former issue of this page. Carl F. Price ocmes forward now with a selection of hymns written in this century, which competent judges have chosen as the greatest hymns of the century. All the judges placed first, "Where Cross the Crowded Ways of Life," by Dr. Frank Mason North. Others named are: "The Light of God is Falling," by Dr. Lewis F. Benson; "I Know Not How that Bethlehem's Babe," by Rev. Harry Webb Farrington; "O Maker of the Mighty Deep," by Henry Van Dyke; "O God, Whose Law from Age to Age," by Rev. John Haynes Holmes; "Rise Up, O Men of God," by Dr. William P. Merrill; "O Holy City Seen of John," by Dr. W. Russell Bowie; "God of the Strong, God of the Weak," by Richard Watson Gilder; "No Longer of Him be it Said," by Joyce Kilmer; "We Would See Jesus, Lo His Star is Shining," by Dr. .J Edgar Park.

It is well once in a while that we should pause to consider what has been done in our own time that is worthy to be remembered. It is well, too, that we should ponder these great hymns, for they, a little more perhaps than any other one thing, will teach us how the world, our world, is thinking about life and Christianity.

Bishop Johnson Talking Again.—

Bishop Irving P. Johnson of the Colorado Episcopal Diocese who, when he opposed the removal of "obey" from the marriage ceremony, got himself a great deal of publicity first and last, has now been telling the bar association of Colorado what is the matter with civilization. He calls the United States a Fool's Paradise, in which the inmates flock to the movies for their morals, to evangelists for their science, and to patent medicines for their ills. He goes on to say, "One wonders how films produced, even when censored by such an astute politician as Will Hayes, can turn Fatty Arbucle, Douglas Fairbanks, and Charlie Chaplin, into great moral leaders; Mr. Volstead and John Galen Locke (Colorado Klu Kluxer) into spiritual uplifters; William Jennings Bryan and Mary Baker Eddy into expounders of scientific truth, and the local ministerial association into law-makers and moral scavengers. I maintain that these are all honorable folks, but that the people have mistaken their callings. As long as we continue to select our governors, legislators, and judges because they have the same prejudices as ourselves, hell is around the corner. The great mistake of modernism is the assumption that it is a success, whereas it has turned our legislative halls into low comedy, our homes into high tragedy, and our religion into a fair basis for comic opera. We have been stampeded by a generation of reformers who are not experts, by men with a vision and a challenge who need to take lessons in Christian charity, and by political and religious bunco-steerers. So long as American people get their spiritual inspiration from Hollywood, their theology from the Rockefeller Foundation, and thier legislation from Pan-Protestant ministers we shall continue to grope for light and walk in darkness.

NOTES-PERSONALS

"If your heart is right and you are willing to learn, Christ will guide you, and the Spirit will use your words."—Anon.

Rev. Jas. L. Foster, Elon College, N. C., is open to engagement for pastoral work on the third and fourth Sundays of each month the coming year.

Rev. Jesse H. Dollar is now a student in Vanderbilt University and likes his work there fine. His address is 469 Westley Hall, Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tenn.

The Managing Editor of the SUN left Richmond last Sunday to attend the Alabama and Georgia and Alabama Conferences. He will return to Richmond on or about the 25th of the month.

The Wellons Bible Class of the First Church, Richmond, had a record-breaking number present on last Sunday. With a membership of twenty-three, there were twenty-one members present and two visitors.

Our Burlington Church, already supporting one missionary in the foreign field, contemplates undertaking the support of another by the close of the coming church year, 1926. The budget made out for the church the coming year is $10,000.00.

We have just received from President J. A. Henderson a four page folder entitled, "Christian College, Its Origin and Purpose." We advise readers who may be interested and wish to know about Franklinton (N. C.) Christian College to send for a copy to President Henderson.

Galen Elliott, of Chapel Hill, N. C., offers the following mottoes for Christian Endeavorers: "Prayer Changes Things," "Go Forward," "Remember Jesus Christ," "We Mean Business," "A Square Deal," "Keep on Keeping On," and "Back Bone is Better than Wish Bone."

The National Council of the Y. M. C. A. has issued a call for a Week of Prayer for young men and boys, November 8th to 14th. With the call the council sends out a very valuable pamphlet, "God and Youth." The topics for prayer each day as set forth in the call are very suggestive and helpful.

Dr. D. A. Long, Franklinton, N. C. writes: "Franklinton Christian College opened on Wednesday, September 23, with the largest number of students and the ablest corps of teachers in its history. Alas, alas! The new building is not finished and it is impossible for President Henderson to find room for all who desire to enter when the crops are gathered." What a pity indeed it is that the money cannot be had with which to complete the new dormitory now so much needed.

Rev. V. T. Crawford is now located at 12 W. Clifford Street, Winchester, Va., having just moved there from Portsmouth. Under recent date, Brother Crawford writes that it was with great regret he left the work at Elm Avenue, and just before leaving had a fine series of meetings. There was a large number of reconsecrations, several conversions and three more additions to the church. Five candidates were baptized. We congratulate the people of Winchester on securing the services of Brother Crawford.

Dr. G. O. Lankford, pastor of the burlington Church in a letter of October 5th, says: "We had a great day in our church yesterday, with large audiences morning and night. The "Men of the Church" had charge of the night service. It was good to see and hear the men in action. Four brief addresses were given, as follows: "Our Church's Growth," by Mr. W. K. Holt; "Why the Present Budget," by Mr. W. M. Brown; "My Financial Responsibility to the Church," by Mr. W. J. Graham; and "The Burlington Christian Church of Tomorrow," by Mr. D. R. Fonville. The president, Mr. R. W. Malone, presided, and the devotions were led by Mr. W. R. Sellars. Six members were received at the morning service, making 146 so far this year."

INSTITUTE AT DOVER, DELAWARE.

The Board of Christian Education of People's Church, Dover, Del., arranged with Miss Pattie Coghill, Field Secretary of Christian Education of the Southern Christian Convention, to hold a three days' institute with the teachers and workers of the Children's Division and the Young People's Division of the Church School the week before Rally Day. Miss Coghill spoke at the regular service of worship on Sunday morning to splendid acceptance, and then conducted a brief model worship period in each department. She also held a two hours' conference on methods and programs with the workers in the Beginner's Department on Monday afternoon; a similar conference with the workers of the Primary Department Monday night; a similar conference with the workers in the Junior Department on Thursday afternoon, and a similar conference with the workers in the Young People's Division Tuesday night.

The Institute was a great success from every point of view. The special training Miss Coghill received at Boston University, School of Religious Education, equipped her to render a unique service to Graded Sunday Schools. The idea of such an institute as suggested is recommended to our sister churches of the Convention. Such a plan enables the field worker to study the problems of the local school first hand and enables the teachers and workers of the school to come in personal contact with an expert in this work. Each of the conferences was held in rooms of the respective departments so that a practical study could be made relative to the best use of the materials and equipment the teachers regularly have.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

BEARING WITNESS.

There was a man sent from God whose name was John. And John did not argue, he bore witness. And then when Jesus came He did not argue, He testified, gave evidence, bore witness. He was the true light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world, but He did not theorize or speculate or philisophize about, "I am the way, the truth and the life." He did not argue about the Way; He bore testimony, He gave evidence of it.

So here is the task of His followers. We are to bear witness of Him, tell our children, our neighbors, our community, our world, in fact, about Him.

If we want to theorize, philosophize, speculate about Immortality, the Resurrection, the nature of Truth, the character of Light and Life, we may consult Plato, Aristotle, the poets and philosophers. But Jesus said, "I am the resurrection. He that liveth and believeth in me shall never die." He did not speculate about life, but came "That they may have life and have it more abundantly."

Here then is the message of the pulpit, the church and the pew—that we bear witness of Him who alone can save and keep saved.

J. O. A.

THE ONE PURPOSE OF THE CHURCH.

The Word was made flesh and dwelt amongst us. But when that Word ceased to be flesh and no longer dwelt amongst us the Church, which is the body of Christ, began to dwell amongst us. For what purpose? That it might give the world the message of deliverance and declare to all men the validity of the revelation that Peter had, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Here is the Word that came and dwelt amongst us.

After more than nineteen centuries, more than half of the world's population have never heard this Word; have never had the opportunity of knowing that Jesus the Christ is the Son of the living God.

Has this Word been wholesome, helpful, redeeming to your own soul, a real factor in your life, making for your happiness, welfare, salvation? Then nothing but greed or selfishness or ignorance has kept you from sharing the joy of this knowledge with others. "Go ye into all the world and preach the good news to every creature." Unless the Church is prompted by this one motive, constrained by this one command, it has no right to exist, certainly none to call itself a church.

The Church lives, and only has the right to live in carrying this message, making known this Word, to all the world. God never limited the power nor circumscribed the growth of the Church. Men and women in the Church do this when they narrow the activities of the Church to the "home field."

J. O. A.

THE ART OF CO-OPERATION.

The highest of all arts is the ability to co-operate with other people, to be able to get along with other people, to be willing to join hands in a common task or enterprise, to be able to work harmoniously with others, though they have different ideas than yours; to be able to give and take; to be able to graciously concede the other person's point of view when circumstances so require; to be able to go the second mile with a brother traveler on the highway of life; to be able to live and help live in accordance with the laws of life, of love, and of God—that is co-operation.

And people who have a disposition to co-operate with their fellowmen in service to God and humanity find the richest and fullest joy of life.

We have all met people who can work with anybody—people who are always willing and determined to bear their share of the load, people who are pleasant to live with and with whom it is a joy to labor.

Most of us have also met other people who can't work with anybody—people who are a constant irritant to those associated with them on a committee, or in some co-operative movement, because of their disagreeableness. It is one of the worst reflections on a person's life and character to be known as one who is "hard to get along with," one who cannot co-operate with his fellows. In this group you will find those who want to dictate every policy; those who want to impose upon others. Some people seem to think it a mark of cleverness and an index of culture and education to know how to shift all the disagreeable and menial work onto somebody else.

Some people are not able to practice the art of co-operation because of their narrow mindedness and prejudice. Though they have lived long enough to know how to act like men and women, they are babyish and childish. If they cannot have their way, "they pick up their dolls and go home." They want their way or no way. Their disposition is to rule or to ruin. They have something of the same tendency in their make-up that made it necessary for Lucifer to be cast out of Paradise. That tendency in a person's life today keeps hundreds of people out of the paradise of social fellowship.

Other people are unable to practice the art of co-operation because they bear evidences of kinship with the animal that has long ears and that is sure to be heard when it insists on being heard. Such people always want to go in the opposite direction from that chosen by their associates. Bill Nye used to compare such people with an old horse that his uncle used to have. When his uncle wanted the horse to pull a load up hill, he learned by experience that there was no need to try to get the horse to do it in the ordinary way. So he would hitch him to the load and turn the horse in the opposite direction from the hill and begin to urge him to go ahead. But true to the nature of this particular horse and true to the nature of some people, the horse began to back; the more the uncle would urge the horse to go ahead the faster the horse would back the load up the hill, until finally Bill's uncle had the load where he wanted it.

So it is in dealing with some people. If you want to get their support, you need to approach them for the opposite thing from what you want. They are sure to want to do the thing contrary to what is wanted by others.

Other people are unable to practice the art of co-operation because they feel that they have been ordained of God to oppose what other people try to do. They take their position square across the path of progress and "stay there" as "a matter of conviction." And whenever a person takes such an attitude as "a matter of conviction" there is no need wasting time in arguing. The tragedy of such a situation is that such people have mistaken "conceit" for "conviction." Conceit expresses selfishness. But conviction is always in the interest of others and of the largest good. People whose lives are ruled by conceit, which they think is conviction, are the very hardest type to deal with. They will block the progress of a church, of a community, and of a nation, if they get the power. The lives of such people make a mournful dirge. Their second name is "complaining." If such people profess to be religious, they have just little enough religion to make themselves feel miserable and make life miserable for everybody else. They are marring everything in life that is worth while simply because they have not learned the glad game of co-operation.

At this season of the year a game is being played on every college athletic field that emphasizes the imperative need of co-operation in life. No man who has ever played football well can fail to realize the need of practicing the art of co-operation in the bigger game of life. There are many who condemn in a wholesale fashion the roughness of football. But there is no game that inculcates into the mind of the youth the benefit and need of co-operation as does football. And there is no greater lesson that men need to learn today. Some learn the lesson in well regulated homes where parents insist on each member sharing the burdens of the home responsibilities. Some learn the lesson by intuition. Some learn the lesson by sad experience in the great game of life. But the tragedy is that some never learn the lesson at all.

Anyone who drives an automobile keenly appreciates the imperative need of co-operation. The same car that runs along with perfect ease when all four of the spark plugs are working, chugs, and knocks to terrible disadvantage if only one of the plugs ceases to work. Instead of the efficiency of the car being proportionately reduced, making the car seventy-five per cent efficient, the car becomes scarcely twenty-five per cent efficient. The efficiency of the other spark plugs is decreased because of the failure of one spark plug to do its work.

So it is in pulling the load of responsibility in life,—when one person refuses to do his part, when one person loafs on the job, the efficiency of the whole social machinery is decreased.

Human society could not exist without co-operation on the part of its members. The very life of society depends upon co-operation. All progress made to date has been due to co-operaiton. Think of what society might attain if all its members would practice the art of co-operation.

"No man liveth to himself alone." "We are all members one of another." Nature teaches the imperative need of co-operation. What pain and suffering ensue when one of the organs of the human body only partially functions! How quickly death strikes its fatal blow when one of the organs of the body ceases altogether to function! But how glorious is life when all the different organs do their work normally, each organ helping the other organs, the lungs purifying the blood, the heart pumping the fresh supply of blood to all the other organs; the little white corpuscles marching through the circulatory system fighting off disease; the eyes and ears constantly on vigil to guard us against danger, and thus each organ of the body doing its part in co-operation with all the other organs to make life sweet.

THE NEW COMMANDMENT OF LOVE.

"A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another."—John 13: 34.

How shall we live our lives? We are church people, we are Christians, we shall look to Jesus for our answer. What others may say is worthwhile, and interesting, but what Jesus Christ says cannot be brooked or gain-said. In himself your writer would be afraid and embarrased to come to you with suggestions on how to live a life. Human wisdom is too limited and so often proves to be unsafe. But there is a spirit and manner of living which is divine and tested, and has never been found empty nor faulty. This spirit and manner was set forth in its best form by Jesus and announced in the following words: "I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life."

With a mental eye looking through an upper window in an ancient city we see Jesus and the twelve. There they are, the Lord and His followers. There they are, Christ, the Founder of our faith, and the key-holder of the Kingdom of God. It is one of the greatest gatherings in the history of men. It is a moment mighty in Kingdom-making. Great things were taking place. A word now is worth untold volumes, for the pupils with whom was placed so much of the world's most valuable teachings are now advanced and about to come to their awful commencement! As we look through the window we behold strife among the disciples, foot-washing by the Lord, withdrawal by the traitor after having eaten from the Savior's hand, final preparations for departure unto Gethsemane, and an awful hush for the great, last words—words they are which followers of Christ are to hear and never forget. Standing in the attitude of departure, the Great Teacher gives His new, and well-nigh final commandment: "That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another."

"Love one another!" What wonderful words! How much they needed to obey them only the Lord Himself knew! Had they loved one another? Had not they? Yes, but only Jesus kenw how much they were to suffer. Only He knew how lonely they were going to be. Only He knew how much they would need each others love. It was one thing to have the keys to the Kingdom of God; it was a vastly different thing to know what to do with them! They had disputed. They had sought preferment. They had been sometimes disappointingly weak. Jesus knew that in a day near at hand opposition would hit hard upon them. Jesus also knew that theological controversy and dispute was just ahead of them. Jesus knew that Jerusalem must settle eternal questions. Jesus knew love! Ah! if only you take this new commandment and burn it upon your souls—love—if you only live by it and die by it, if necessary, the success of the Kingdom is assured. He would tell them at a time when they could never forget it. What moment hung upon it. He could take no risk on His Kingdom being rent asunder for the lack of love. "Love suffers long." How they were to suffer! "Love envieth not." In the past there had been jealousy. They must not wreck His Church with envy. Therefore, "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another."

But after all there was nothing new about the commandment "to love one another." "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."—Lev. 19: 18. "Thou shalt love him as thyself."—Lev. 19: 34. And we read what is well-nigh the same in the day it was uttered as "Love your enemies," for: Deut. 10: 19, "Love ye therefore the stranger," is a close approach to the former. Is there some mistake? Jesus knew these things were in the Law. Why did He call His commandment a new one? The little word "as" makes all the difference.

"As I have loved you." Love takes on a new meaning when measured by the Lord of Love Himself. There is nothing soft or flabby about the love of Christ. It is not something to be merely talked about or boasted on. It is a powerful, self-sacrificing, all-pervading spirit and manner of life. Thinking of love as He loved, I read, "Love....beareth all things," or again, "Love never fails.". Indeed it is a new commandment. Think of what the Lord did for you to express His love. And think of what He is able and anxious to do for you in causing you to love others as He has loved you. Not inappropriate is some writers quartrain, when he says:

"He drew a circle that shut me out,
Heretic, alien, a thing to flout;
But love and I had the wit to win,
We drew a circle that took him in."

A PET GAINED BY KINDNESS.

A young boy with a pet fawn trotting behind him attracted attention one afternoon on a road near Portland. The little creature was perfectly tame, and on the approach of a team would timidly run to the boy's side as though seeking protection. To a well-known insurance man, who was on the road driving with his wife, the lad told the story of his aquisition of the fawn.

Some weeks ago the boy was fishing on the Tualatin River. Fish were plentiful, and, engrossed in his sport, the lad kept his eyes on the ripple, taking no cognizance of what was going on behind him. A bleating sound from the bank above him he paid no attention to, thinking it was some stray lamb. The bleating was repeated a number of times, but the boy was fishing and the trout were rising freely. Then came a patter of tiny hoofs down the bank, and a little cold ncse was pushed into his hand. Looking down, the boy found the fawn standing beside him, apparently without fear, the pleading look in its big brown eyes asking help. Its neck and one side of the head were covered with blood, still wet, its limbs barely supporting the frail body.

The boy's first thought was that the waif had been wounded, and in attempting to reach water had come on the river bank at the point where he was fishing, and through sheer weakness, being unable to go further, had tumbled down to the stream, landing by his side. Picking the little thing up in his arms, the lad waded out on the ripple, and, washing the blood from the fawn's neck, found it uninjured.

Some hunter had shot the mother doe, and with her dying strength she had plunged back through the timber to reach the baby deer, born but a few days before. The fawn had evidently become alarmed and started to find its mother, its one point of location being the runway at the river, where, during its few days of life, the two had nightly come to drink.

The boy took the little orphan to his home and it was less than an hour before the fawn had accustomed itself to the new surroundings and was perfectly contented. It at once attached itself to the boy, seeming to look upon him as its natural protector, and now wherever the lad goes the fawn follows.—Portland (Ore.) Telegram.

MOUNT AUBURN.

The close of another year marks the second milestone in the second decade of missionary endeavor in the Mt. Auburn Missionary Society.

The first question naturally asked is, "Have you gone forward?" Unhesitatingly we answer, "Yes."

The financial goal of $100.00 for the Woman's Missionary Society, $25.00 for the Willing Workers' Society, and $5.00 for the Cradle Roll Department has been reached this year. It has meant sustained interest, continued effort, faithful attendance, on the part of many, constant prayer and an ever-increasing sympathy and recognition from the church of the importance of our work.

Besides setting and reaching a financial goal, we sought to interest every woman in the church and give opportunity to every child no matter how small, to have a part in the great work of spreading the gospel to those who know it not. If we women would do our part in training the coming generation in the importance of fulfilling Christ's command, "Go ye," that would be a goal worth while, one that would indeed win our Master's commendation.

Our Society raised a Thank-offering; held regular meetings each month, with good programs; held one public meeting in connection with the Willing Workers and the Cradle Roll. Over one hundred were present. Besides a good program in which the children took part, ice cream in abundance was served to all. This occasion brought all of the women into a closer fellowship. Altogether it was a time of good feeling.

May our dear Father in Heaven watch over us, as a Society and as individuals, leading us into closer relationship with Himself and into a fuller and higher service.

Is it worth while? Does it pay to work so hard for the cause of truth? Read the following: It answers the question:

Dr. Lyman Beecher was engaged to preach one wintry day and there happened to be only one hearer. Dr. Beecher went through all the service as usual. About twenty years after, a stranger in Ohio reminded him of the occasion and astonished him by saying, "I am that one hearer. Your sermon saved my soul, made a minister of me, and yonder is my church. The converts of that sermon, sir, are all over Ohio."—Wesleyan Methodist.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

One of the most common diseases is "spasms." This disease is not peculiar to the body, but the mind as well. It does not end with the body and the mind, but enters into religious emotions. It does not stop there. It enters the field of business. A boom in business is a spasm. A spurt in benevolence is a spasm. A hurry-up effort to raise Conference money is a church spasm. Fall of the year in a dry season is not only a time for chills and fevers, but it is the time for church spasms. Health officers are at work in almost every part of the country to rid towns and cities of malaria, typhoid and diphtheria germs; in other words, the object is to prevent disease rather than cure disease. They are having a hard time in carrying out sanitary efforts, because so many people will not co-operate; but it can be done. The Government cleaned up the Panama Canal Zone, which was the most malarial region, and made it the most healthful zone under the Stars and Stripes. But the Government had the power to carry out the sanitary plans and exercised that power. The Church has no such authority as the State. Moral action is voluntary, not compulsory.

The Church operates on many lines: spiritual, social, educational, benevolent, and financial, and finance enters into all of the Church's operations. In the material world men cannot separate themselves from monetary considerations and obligations. So far as the Church is concerned, it is just as important to pay as to pray. The Church cannot do its work without both of these in active and continuous operation.

The period is upon us again when we may expect financial spasms in the churches. "We must get up our money for Conference"; "We must raise some money to pay the pastor"; and it is done; but it is not the best way to do it. There is only one way for a congregation to do a year's work successfully, and that is by co-operation of all the members during the whole year. It takes a year to do a year's work as it should be done, and this is just as true of a church as it is of a shop or a farm. Payment by littles is much easier and much more successful than all at one time. Pay every time the church holds service, whether monthly, semi-monthly, or weekly; every Sunday the church is open for service, carry or send in your envelope and let the treasurer keep the money in bank and pay all bills by check. Do not hand the minister money on his salary, pay it into the Lord's treasury, through the church. Every member should pay as unto the Lord, whether it is little or much, "The certain poor widow who cast into the treasury two mites," Jesus said, "cast in more than the rich who cast in much of their abundance." If all would pay as the Lord has prospered them, all the enterprizes of the church would prosper and the people too. The whole church at work for the whole year, the whole church praying for the whole year; would make all the members rejoice in the Lord and proud of their church.

This letter is too late for the Conference year 1924-1925, but it is not too late for the Conference year 1925-1926, if tested by trial.

ELON LETTER.

The Christian Church has unified its educational work into a single Board of Christian Education. What others have been saying should be done, we have done. We did it in October, 1922, when the General Convention was in session in Burlington, N. C. Three years of our twenty year program have passed. We are pained not to have accomplished more, but we have done something, and for this we should give thanks, and we do give thanks.

We give thanks for our editors and field workers. I am thankful to God for such workers as Dr. S. Q. Helfenstein, Hermon Eldredge, Dr. W. P. Fletcher, Mrs. F. E. Bullock, Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, and Dr. O. B. Whitaker. I challenge any church anywhere to produce six finer persons than these. I am grateful for them.

We give thanks for our Board of Christian Education. It is a pioneering board. It has had no precedents to govern it and it has had practices and prejudices of long ago and honorable standing to meet and if possible overcome. We have been so long time accustomed to divisive and segmental methods that unity strikes us as a high brow sort of procedure, not to say gratuitous medling. Our Board of Christian Education has made mistakes. We can forgive the mistakes for the good that it has achieved, and can sincerely thank God for the twelve persons who have in our name undertaken to lead in the work of co-ordinating the teaching agencies of the Kingdom.

We give thanks for our young ministers and other young persons in training for all time Christian service as missionaries and directors of religious education. Last year we aided thirty-nine young people with scholarships for which we have spent $4,150.00. We have applications in hand for next year that will exceed $5,000.00, if they are all granted. Nine of those aided the past year were in seminaries. Two were of the colored race. Two were from our foreign fields. These young leaders will always love the church that gave them aid in their critical days of preparation for Christian service.

We give thanks for our colleges. Nobody doubts that they are Christian in the deepest and truest sense. They are producing Christian character in their young men and young women. They deserve well at our hands and they will no doubt fare well because of our generosity.

We give thanks for our literature. I have examined all the literature of most of the publishing houses the past year. None is better than ours. None is so good for us as ours. Every school in our Brotherhood should use it. This is not narrowness. It is loyalty, and what is finer than loyalty?

We give thanks for our young people in Sunday School and Christian Endeavor. They are desirous of holding a national congress. They should have it and with our full and hearty co-operation. They are anxious to serve the Kingdom of Christ through our church. We are fortunate that they have the spirit of service rather than the spirit of rebellion. We should give thanks for our young people. They are enthusiastic, but not erratic. They are spirit filled and spirit led. God bless them!

We have but one way to continue to promote all these avenues of gladness and thanksgiving, and that is to give an offering of $40,000 for Christian Education through our churches, our Sunday Schools, and our Christian Endeavor Societies. We shall do it. When? November 1, 1925. The Board of Christian Education is expecting every member of the church to do his duty. Remember—$40,000 for Christian Education November 1, 1925. Every church, Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society in the Southern Christian Convention should liberally support this offering.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION AND THE HOME.

By Mrs. C. H. Rowland.

In the study of the development of the Christian religion, we are impressed with the large and vital part the home has played in its progress. Under the Mosaic law, the home was the school and it was incumbent upon the parents to see that their children were taught diligently the words of the law. In the days of the early church, men and women belonged to the new order with their households. Worship became a family affair and the home the place of the altar. In those days, the church often was founded in and grew out of the home—a most natural order.

As a religious institution, the home stands as the most powerful and most influential. In its functions, it is educational and its process is continuous. The children in the home, under the constant care and guidance of the parents, are being moved and stimulated every moment. Every impression has its weight. No other institution has such possibilities for shaping character.

Our Department of Christian Education is convinced of this and is emphasizing that there can be no real effective program of Christian Education without enlisting the home and linking it up with the church. What are the few moments on Sunday morning when the teacher has the pupil in charge, compared with the hours that the child is under the control and influence of the home? And so we are planning a program that has a double appeal: first, to install Christian Education in the home and second, to bring the child into the environment of the church.

The practice of family worship is one that contributes largely toward creating a Christian atmosphere in the home. The daily readings in connection with the Sunday School lessons lend themselves most helpfully to this end, so that the way is paved for the most timid in undertaking such worship. The memorizing of Scripture passages and church hymns calls for the co-operation of the parents with the teacher if the interest of the children is to be properly aroused.

Through the Cradle Rolls and Home Departments of our schools, we have wonderful opportunities of entering homes and enlisting their members. Never does a mother need the sympathetic shepherding of the church more than when her child is a babe in her arms. A Cradle Roll room made attractive for mothers is a part of the equipment of every up-to-date Sunday School, so that, from their earliest days, provision is made in the church for its future members. Mothers' meetings and parties for mothers and babies, go a long ways toward strengthening the tie between the home and the church—something that we should desire so much that we will count no effort too great to achieve.

Ofttimes the aged and feeble and those who can attend church only occasionally are led to believe that they, in a large measure, are lost sight of by the church. No sweeter ministry can be performed than for the church to plan an afternoon party for this class of her members and with conveyances provided, bring them together where they shall be the guests of honor.

Children's Day, or any program in which the children are the participants should come in for its full share of planning and the love and prayers of the whole congregation should help to make this a never-to-be-forgotten occasion, for through programs, chains are being forged that will bind the children to the faith of their fathers.

Mother's Day is another occasion to touch the home and ennoble the office of motherhood, for children's thoughts are directed in the church worship on that day to appreciation of mother. Father and Son, Mother and Daughter banquets, Cradle Roll parties, Young People's social gatherings, all may contribute to bringing the social life of the family under the uplifting influence of the church.

In our program of Christian Education, we approve heartily and recognize the beneficial results of the family sitting together for church worship. Singing the hymns and reading the responses together, children with parents, gives to the child an appreciation of his being one of a family group and gives dignity to the home spirit in church worship.

All Sunday School teachers feel the need of more Bible study in the preparation of the weekly lesson. Often the teaching of the best prepared lesson falls on stony soil because there has been no preparation in the home to insure a bountiful harvest in the heart of the pupil. Happy the teacher, and thrice happy the home where the two working together can produce a pleasing harvest, even an hundred fold.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION AND THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

By Rev. C. J. Felton.

Like our experience in many other things, the farther we go in the work of Christian Education, the more we realize its value. Jesus said, a man must be born from above. Birth precludes growth. Life which stops at birth is a tragedy. The child who grows continually and in a normal way is a real joy to his parents. Jesus must have expected that they who are born from above would grow in the same normal and continual way.

This birth from above may come at a very early date in the experience of the child. The young child has a natural faith in God. If given the proper training, this consciousness of God will remain with him, and he will grow in spiritual life as he grows in body. It is the work of Christian Education to see that this training is given. There is, therefore, no work in all the world more vital to life and happiness than this

In the history of the human race, there is no work which has made a bigger contribution to the welfare of man than the work which has been done in the field of Christian Education. The Sunday Schools of the past, with very poor equipment, practically no organization, and an infinitesimal length of time in which to do their work, have had a remarkable influence in the development of Christian character, in the production of Christian manhood and womanhood. They were able to do this because some few men and women were willing to put life and character into the work. And it has always been true that Christian character is caught.

With an increasing army of specialists putting heart, mind and soul into the business, and with the great number of books being published to train and inspire those who would make themselves workmen that need not be ashamed, in the field of Christian Education, the half has not yet been told of the things that will be done in this great vineyard of our Lord. We are beginning to realize in a small way, some of the work which may be done in the work of developing real Christian manhood and womanhood out of the children whom God has given us.

And the need for rapid development in this line of work is very great. There subtile forces continually at work to destroy the consciousness of God and blight the character of childhood. Much of the so-called literature of our time, and the type of moving pictures shown generally in our theatres, are designed to appeal to the selfish and sensual instincts of youth. And there is a spirit of materialism which leads many to accept, even unconsciously, the idea that man does live by bread alone. It is the work of Christian Education to counteract these influences and keep before us all the value of the unseen; to keep us from devoting all our time in seeking to make stones into bread. Our country is made great by the character of its citizenship. We need to keep very busy building this character.

That the need may be met in the most efficient way, we must have time in which to work. When the day schools have thirty hours a week for mental training and our Sunday Schools have one hour for heart and soul training, the natural inference is that we place a great deal more value upon the mental training of our children than we do upon the heart and soul training. And not only do we need more time for this work, but we need to know how to use our time in the best way. The Sunday School teacher who merely seeks to keep a group of boys or girls quiet for thirty minutes once a week, doesn't reach them for Christ and the things for which He stands. The superintendent who waits until he gets to the church to plan his program for the day, doesn't make that one hour a week count for much. We need not only the desire but the knowledge of how to use our time aright. Hence the need for better trained officers and teachers. Every field of endeavor is calling for better trained workers. If the Sunday School doesn't have them, it cannot meet the needs of the time.

And not only do we need better trained workers, but we need more of them. Recent surveys have shown that only a small proportion of our children are receiving any religious instruction. We hope to be able to increase the number receiving it continually. But there is no need to do this, unless we can provide teachers to take charge of them. We need teachers who will not merely undertake the work because they feel a sense of duty to their church, but those who realize the importance of the work and love it.

These teachers must have equipment with which to work. Not even an expert can do without equipment. Our church buildings, designed only for preaching services, must have added to their religious education plants. More money must be also put into the general work, so that the proper help may be provided for the local school and the individual teacher.

We are coming, also, to see more and more the need of lessons adapted to the age of the child. If we are going to lead the child to the Heavenly Father and keep him in touch with God, we must speak to him in language which he can understand. So the graded lesson must take its place as a permanent part of our Sunday School equipment. The mind and the life of the child has been graded by his Creator. We are only meeting a natural condition as it is, when we seek to bring to him a lesson adapted to his stage of growth.

Our Christian Education department is working hard to help our Church to take its place in the great field of Christian Training and character development. In this work, as in many others, we are taking a leading place. At Dover, Delaware, our people have one of the finest and most practical Christian Education buildings on the American continent. Our Christian Education building at Elon is the first of its kind on a college campus in America. Our Sunday School membership is continually increasing. Every summer brings an added number of Daily Vacation Bible Schools. And an ever increasing number of our schools are providing Week-Day Religious Instruction. Our Sunday School literature is an increasing joy to all. The department is doing a great work and deserves our heartiest support that it may do an ever greater work.

There is still much to be done. We need to continue extending our work. But with the extension of our week-day activities, we must not loose sight of the necessity to make our one hour on Sunday count. We need to get away from the spirit of jazz and to develop a real spirit of worship in our Sunday sessions. Our boys and girls need to be taught to hold a genuine reverence for the house of God. We must get them to feel the spirit of worship as they enter its doors. There is no better place to do this than in our Sunday School service.

One other thing which we must keep in mind is this. All this training has for its ultimate object the bringing of the child to Jesus Christ, and causing him to give his life, his all to that Christ. All our teachings must fail, unless we can lead the child to make this definite consecration of his life to Christ. The evangelistic note and influence must be kept in our Sunday School work. The work of the week may train and refine character, but the work on Sunday ought to lead the pupil to give that trained, refined self to Jesus Christ.

Our task, as workers in Christian Sunday Schools is a great one. Only God Himself can measure the extent of its importance. As a church and as individuals, we cannot afford to neglect putting our best, of money, time, and thought, into it. Sometimes our Master is going to call upon us to give an account of the use made of the talent which He gave to us. Now is the time to decide what the answer shall be.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION AND THE COMMUNITY.

By Prof. Simon A. Bennett.

An examination of the prevalent programs of religious education reveals a surprisingly small amount of time given to the important work of teaching religion. Public schools, that in their earlier history gave much attention to this work, now find that they are giving better instruction in general education and are demanding much more of the pupil's time, but are neglecting entirely the teaching of religion. The effort to get more time for this vital work and the attempt to adopt an educational method closely associated with our public education is resulting in the establishment of week-day schools of religion. Experimentation in this field is convincing Christian leaders that efficiency calls for a type of community school in which denominational interests are not dominant, but where the larger welfare of growing lives is the absorbing interest.

In her efforts to command more time for religious instruction, the church has been organizing daily vacation church schools. Many children have a great deal of free time during vacation. This may be used quite effectively by such schools. Here again we feel the need for closer co-operation among denominational agencies.

From all quarters the call sounds forth that the most pressing need is for better prepared and more thoroughly trained teachers. Teachers' classes, training institutes and conferences are often organized in feverish haste in attempts to quickly prepare workers. Far-reaching results are sought by some in the introduction of religious education courses in the colleges and universities. These attempts in leadership are also revealing the handicaps of denominational bar-

STEWARDSHIP AND PROMOTION.

WARREN H. DENISON, D. D., Secretary.

HERE ARE THE FACTS.

Rev. Alfred W. Hurst, pastor, says: "I would like to speak of the value of the Every Member Canvass to the Elkhart, Indiana, Church, and tell why I believe every church should use it. Because it increases the total amount raised. This year the amount pledged to our total budget showed an increase of 75 per cent over last year, when we did not use the E. M. C. plan. The ratio between current expenses and benevolences last year was 9 to 1; this year, as a result of the E. M. C., the ratio is 4 to 1. Last year, without the E. M. C. as nearly as we could tell, 35 per cent of the membership carried the chief financial load. This year as a result of the E. M. C., 90 per cent of the membership have pledged toward the work of the church. It works financially and spiritually."

AN IMPORTANT QUESTION.

What larger program is your church giving the world since it doubled its membership? Many Sunday Schools and churches have greatly increased their membership, some of them doubling their numbers in the last few years. Have their benevolences to the Kingdom been increased correspondingly? In comparing benevolence remittances of many churches this year with those from the same churches of previous years, even though Sunday Schools and church membership have increased by hundreds, there seems to be no increase in gifts for missions, education, and the other great basic work of the Kingdom in many instances. It will be worth your effort as pastors and officials to see whether with all the new members taken into your school and church in the past five years, you have increased your benevolences to the church to any appreciable extent. That is one of the real tests of a pastor's work.

STEWARDSHIP ATMOSPHERE.

If all our churches, pastors, and Stewardship secretaries will heartily co-operate this year and put on a Stewardship program at the same time for all of November and the first half of December, we can create a real Stewardship atmosphere Thousands do not understand what Stewardship is. Many do not relate it to their lives, time, money. Many Christians do not understand tithing, even though down deep in their hearts they know it is scriptural, right, and duty. The church should teach Stewardship. It must no longer shirk responsibility.

TITHERS ENROLLED.

Tithers enrollment cards have been received lately from Dayton, Ohio, Crown Point; Dayton, Ohio, First; Plattsburg, Ohio; Lynchburg, Va.; Harwood, Ohio; Wedowee, Ala.; and Burlington, N. C. churches. Thousands more should enroll as tithers. We need a list from your church.

NEW LEAFLETS.

We have a new four-page folder setting forth spiritual and financial results from real Stewardship study. It describes approved books, pageants, mottoes, budget books.

We have a new four-page folder in Stewardship reading contests. Rules of the game. How to conduct it with great pleasure and satisfaction to your church. They are free upon request.

The Murlin Heights Church, suburb of Dayton, Ohio, is planning an enlarged building and equipment program. Your Secretary was with them on September 27th, helping plan this forward step from the financial viewpoint.

The Piedmont Ministerial Association recently recommended a carefully selected list of Stewardship books for the Elon College library.

BURLINGTON STEWARDSHIP INSTITUTE.

At the invitation of the pastor and the president of the "Men of the Church," Mr. R. W. Malone, the Setwardship Secretary of the Christian Church, Rev. W. H. Denison, came to Burlington Church for a Stewardship Institute with us, beginning on September 17th, and running through the 22nd. This was the first institute of this kind put on specifically for the local church by our Secretary. So the work was approached with some degree of uncertainty, due to this new departure, but the institute was a fine success and will be followed by wholesome results.

The messages given by Dr. Denison were of a very high order. They were instructive, illuminating, pointed, and practical, and were delivered in such a manner as to cause the hearer to think deeply, at the same time making a strong and definite appeal to the heart.

The week-night meetings were not attended by great crowds, but those in attendance were key men and women who have a keen and abiding interest in the work of the local church, and also of the larger interests of the denomination in general. These men and women are capable of passing on to others the message and import of Stewardship, and this they will do as time goes on, for they now look upon life, upon the problems of church finance, upon the work of the Kingdom, upon the resources of the Church in purse and personality, with clearer vision and with a sense of stewardship responsibility undiscovered before.

On Sunday during the Institute, Dr. Denison spoke to large and appreciative congregations both morning and night, with two or three short addresses to various groups of our young people. In all these services our people were inspired and greatly uplifted.

Among the subjects discussed during the week were the following: "The Basic Principles of Stewardship," "What Shall I Do With My Life," "The Bible and Stewardship," "The Spiritual Values of the Every Member Canvass," and "Ten Points in the Successful Financing of a Church." Thus it has been seen that vital matters were being considered. They were handled in a masterly way.

All in all, the Burlington church feels that the institute was very much worth while. Seed were sown that will bear a fruitful harvest in days to come. All classes were reached with the stewardship idea, and it is felt that this idea will deepen and grow as time goes on.
